INDUSTRIAL LENDERS NEWS

Vol. VII. No. 1. JULY, 1922. Price, $1.00 a Year.

TO THE INDUSTRIAL LENDERS OF THE UNITED STATES

Those in charge of the arrangements for the National Convention in September, have two main objects in view:

First, to bring to the attention of every Lender in the United States, the realization of the fact that he should do his part, be it large or small, not only to perpetuate his individual business in his community, but to perpetuate his State and National Association.

It should therefore not be necessary for the committee to plead with any lender to attend this convention. The mere announcement of the dates of an event so important in the history of the Small Loan Business should be sufficient to induce every lender in the country to make up his mind to attend and to do his part toward its success by sending to the committee ideas and suggestions for the program which is now in process of formation.

The business topics to be discussed and the good will that will accrue to your business from the prominence and publicity given by reason of the fact that this convention will be held in the largest and most wonderful city in the world, will be well worth your time, and the expense of a trip to New York. You cannot afford to miss this opportunity to join in the discussion of many topics vital to the continued prosperity and future growth of your business. No committee can make a convention of this size a marked success without the individual efforts and coöperation of every member in the organization. Each member must do his part and to do this he should not only attend, but should show his interest by taking an active part in every thing that is done.

Can you imagine a more delightful vacation than a trip to New York in September? There will not only be something at every business session of interest and instructive to you, but there will be entertainment sufficient to please the most exacting. The Committee is arranging side trips, sight-seeing tours, theatre parties, dances and vaudeville shows, to say nothing of the banquet to be held in the Grand Ball Room of the Pennsylvania Hotel, where prominent speakers and talent known from coast to coast will be on hand to entertain you. This Annual Banquet is always the crowning feature of every National Convention.

A committee of ladies has been appointed to look after the shopping tours, sight-seeing and entertainment for the lady guests during business sessions, and we can promise the wives, daughters and sweethearts who attend, a royal good time.

Letters will be mailed shortly to every Industrial Lender in the country enclosing a card giving hotel rates and detailed information about reduced railroad fares one and one-half fare for round trip. When you receive the card fill it out at once and mail it to the Pennsylvania Hotel for room reservation, as the Convention is now only about two months off and New York will be crowded to its fullest capacity at that time.

If you are unable to take more than one vacation this summer save it for the convention. Owners should bring their managers and as many of their co-workers as they can spare.

Come and bring your wives, daughters, sweethearts! You will not regret it! It will prove an investment well made and not an expense.

Remember the place and date
Hotel Pennsylvania, New York City,
September 20th, 21st, 22d and 23d.

CONVENTION FINANCES.

PHILADELPHIA, PA., JULY 3, 1922.

Sent to secretaries of following State Associations:—Georgia, Virginia, Maryland, New Jersey, New York, Connecticut and Massachusetts.

By this time you have had an opportunity to receive and undoubtedly have read over every word in the June issue of the LENDERS NEWS. What did you think of it? Wasn't it a splendid issue? Wasn't it full of meat? How else could all these good things pertaining to our business, both inside and out, with the added expressions and views of men in public life concerning your business. This of course could not be possible without the amalgamation of the State Associations into the National Body.

In reading over the breezy news did you note the front page article regarding the Eighth Annual Convention, and did you read the article on page two over my signature pertaining to the all important matter of finances which will make possible the success or failure of this gigantic undertaking of the Eighth National Convention? You and I know that there would be little incentive to leave home and business and assume the added expense of a trip to New York, probably at an inconvenient period unless it meant a profit to us. The New York Convention will make possible an opportunity for boundless profit; rich in fellowships, elevating in wisdom, and laudible in purpose and undertaking. This reflects but the business phase of the convention. There is another, the entertainment of the folks that too must be of the clean, wholesome sort that arouses enthusiasm and approval of these details which have been carefully planned and are being worked out by competent executives, chairman of their respective committees. All this planning and effort is predicated upon the Convention Committee's ability to amply finance it. The respective eastern State Associations acting as hosts to the western delegation have responded nobly in their contributions to making this convention The Convention. This is as it should be; otherwise, we would not evidence progress. Notwithstanding the State Association's contributions it is virtually necessary and desirable that individual lenders be given an opportunity to make personal contributions that are purely voluntary. It is my desire as chairman of the Finance Committee to bring to the attention of the members of your good association this privilege of sending a personal donation in this matter. Both individual and chain lenders of the Pennsylvania Association have responded by sending their checks drawn to my order in the amount of $25.00 per office. To those who feel they cannot afford to pay this amount let them send their check in such amount as they feel they can contribute to make possible the success of this convention. There is no obligation to pay $25.00 per office, although many, including even some of the smaller individual lenders believe the convention sufficiently worth while to justify this outlay.

Please convey to the members of your association one important fact, that not a single dollar for which this contribution is being asked will be frittered away. Every sincere effort is being made to make each expenditure mean much in the way of educational advancement of those in the business whether in attendance or not and for the comfort of the delegates and their families and friends. It will be appreciated if this appeal for funds will be liberally broadcasted and a generous response attend.

July 8, 1922.

Secretary, American Industrial Lenders Association, HARRISBURG, Pa.

Dear Sir:

The Welcome Stranger Committee of New York City, composed of leading trade and civic groups, has been formed in order to foster the spirit of hospitality towards visitors to this city. It is the aim of this committee to make available to visitors all the facilities which New York offers.

The headquarters of the Welcome Stranger Committee are at 334 Fifth Avenue, in the offices of the Hotel Association of New York City. We are eager to coöperate with your association to the fullest extent and on your behalf offer our services to members of your association who may visit the city.

We trust that you will look to us for the fullest possible information at all times, concerning the trade facilities, hotel facilities, amusement, educational and other departments of New York life which will interest out-of-town guests. The Merchants Association Convention Bureau is working with this committee in preparation for conventions.

We should also value any suggestion from you as to how the Welcome Stranger Committee may be of the greatest service to your membership.

Very truly yours,
(Signed) L. M. BOOMER, Chairman.

SEMI-ANNUAL DUES.

On August 1st, semiannual dues in the National Body will be payable to the National Secretary, through the State Secretaries or direct in case where there are no State Secretaries. As the amount of detail at the National Secretary's office increases with the approaching National Convention in New York, it will be greatly appreciated if every member pays his dues promptly without further solicitation. Now is the time to write your check for your dues, if you wish to be among the members enrolled in good standing at the National Convention.

LOUISIANA.

We have observed with interest the campaign being waged by the Legal Reform Bureau of New York, assisted by many local Social Welfare organizations, for the enactment of the Uniform Small Loan Law at the present session of the Louisiana Legislature. Although the final outcome at the time this is written, is still in doubt, we commend most heartily the agencies and individuals who have been active in this fight to eliminate the high rate lenders in Louisiana.

In connection with the educational campaign, under the head of "Interest and Usury," W. O. Hart of the New Orleans Bar, had the following to say:

"The law of Louisiana is rather peculiar regarding interest and usury. Part of Article 2924 of the Revised Civil Code reads as follows:

"The owner or discounter of any note or bond, or other written evidence of debt for the payment of money, payable to order or bearer or by assigment, shall have the right to claim and recover the full amount of such note, bond or other written evidence of debt, and all interest not beyond eight per cent per annum interest that may accrue thereon, notwithstanding that the rate of interest or discount at which the same may be or may have been discounted has been beyond the rate of eight per cent per annum interest or discount."

Practically the same provision of law is contained in the Revised Statues of 1870, Section 1889.

Under this law, there is no limit to the rate of interest a borrower may be compelled to pay, provided the interest is made part of the note; in other words, for a note of One Hundred Dollars a borrower might not receive but fifty dollars and yet the holder of the note could collect the whole amount, provided the borrower received what the lender had agreed to give him.

"Under the general laws of Louisiana, the legal rate of interest is five per cent but up to eight per cent may be contracted for in writing, and anything over eight per cent is usurious and when paid may be recovered by the borrower within two years from the time of payment, but as long as the debt exists, usurious interest may be set up as an offset thereto; but the usury statute is overcome by the provision above quoted, and in order to keep within the letter of that provision of the law, the lender when he renews a note or other evidence of debt, usually does it in the form of a new note, including therein the amount of the so-called discount, which of course, is largely more than the legal rate. Many lenders exact as much as ten per cent a month and some probably at times, more.

"An effort was made to overcome this discount by Act 68 of 1908 approved June 24th, when the law prohibited an exaction of a higher rate than eight per cent "as discount or otherwise"; unfortunately, however, in the Act was copied the discount provision above mentioned, when it should have been omitted, and the result was that when the Supreme Court came to construe the law, which it did in the case of Rouxe vs. Witzman, 125th Lousiana Reports, page 300, January 17, 1910, the Court said:

"Act No. 68 of 1908 makes no change in the usury laws as to discounts and capitalized interest permitted by Article 2924, Revised Civil Code."

"The Small Loan Bill now before the Legislature should be adopted so as to regulate absolutely the rate of interest on loans under three hundred dollars. That Bill provides that no greater rate of interest shall be charged than eight per cent except by institutions specially authorized to do business by the Bank Examiner and to a great measure, under his control, which institutions shall be allowed to lend money at a rate not exceeding three and one-half per cent per month.

"Similar laws have been passed in eleven States and are pending in many others, and in time no doubt will be adopted by all. There is no way to overcome the evils of excessive interest charge, except by regulation and if this law is passed and properly enforced, all money-lenders as such, will disappear and those desiring small loans will have the protection of dealing with institutions authorized by the State and subject to State regulations.

"There can be no objections to the bill on the ground that it encourages usury, because usury has existed since the beginning of the world, and it is better to make legal such provisions as are contained in the Bill than allow lenders to charge whatever they please, because in emergencies a borrower will pay almost anything to get a few dollars to tide him over."

MARYLAND.

The Annual Meeting of the Maryland Industrial Lenders Association was held June 6, 1922 at 2:30 p. m. in the Board Room of the Merchants & Manufacturers Association.

Visitors and members present, George W. Kehr, Secretary of the American Industrial Lenders Association; A. S. Ezekiel, chairman of the Pennsylvania Association; R. M. Rutherford, secretary of the New York Association; William Young, A. L. Wick, V. D. Moss, H. T. Mattingly, F. B. Snyder, H. H. Larsen, E. S. Armstrong, W. J. Oliver, Jr., J. D. Goldrick, R. A. Long, R. L. Smith, J. J. Wood, E. E. Hougham, H. C. Moore, L. H. Pumphrey and R. L. Ryan.

Mr. Young introduced Mr. A. S. Ezekiel, Chairman of the Pennsylvania Association, who gave us a very interesting talk on what could be expected in the way of entertainment at the National Association Convention in New York City next September.

Report of Officers.

Report of Chairman Mattingly:

GENTLEMEN:

Having served two successive years as your chairman, I desire to retire. Naturally, my first thought is for the welfare and future progress of this, Our Association.

I respectfully ask, that our future officers have the undivided support of each and every member of this Association at all times; and beg this opportunity to say that those who are elected to serve, are good enough for the officers of our organization to function through.

Gentlemen; the word unity means absolutely nothing unless carried into actual effect.

The Small Loan Business of to-day has earned its right to exist, this right has been earned by fair, square, and open dealings, and by unity. The eyes of the business world are upon us, let us not fail.

It is needless that I speak of the activities of your officers during the past year. But believe I can safely say that due to splendid coöperation, progress has been made for which I appreciate and thank each and every one.

Our Seventh Annual Banquet will be held this evening at seven-thirty at the Emerson Hotel. A number of distinguished guests have been invited and will be present. Among them his Excellency Albert C. Richie, our Governor. An enjoyable evening is promised.

To my successor, I pledge loyalty at all times.

Respectfully submitted,
H. T. Mattingly.

Report of Secretary Larsen:

MR. CHAIRMAN, FELLOW MEMBERS AND VISITORS:

Owing to the very limited time alloted us the use of this room, I will make this report as brief as possible.

Since our annual meeting held on the 14th of June, 1921, we have lost two members, but have obtained two new members so our present membership stands at seventeen. All of which are also members of the A. I. L. Association with dues in both associations, paid up in full as of June 1, 1922.

During the year $482.33 has been collected in state dues, and turned over to our treasurer, and $849.50 in National dues collected and turned over to National Secretary, George W. Kehr.

Meetings were held in Nov., Jan., March, April and May and attended by an average of 9 to 12 members at each meeting. Several special meetings were also held by the Executive Committee.

Respectfully submitted,
H. H. LARSEN.

Report of Treasurer J. D. Goldrick; showed a balance of $165.85 on hand after all bills were paid.

The treasurer further reports that the dues of all members are paid to date.

The Executive Committee Chairman reports that no formal meetings were held at any time during the year.

By regular motion, all the above reports were accepted and ordered filed.

An informal discussion by members of the association relative to the Exchange Bureau took place, and an effort made to put into operation the original plan for an Exchange Bureau with a central office. No definite conclusion was reached in this connection.

Election of Officers.

By motion of Mr. Wick, the following members were nominated for membership in the Executive Committee, and elected unanimously; H. T. Mattingly, H. H. Larsen, F. B. Snyder, J. D. Goldrick, H. C. Moore, E. E. Houghman and C. R. Morris.

The Executive Committee immediately elected the following association officers; H. H. Larsen, chairman; F. B. Snyder, vice-chairman; H. C. Moore, secretary; J D. Goldrick, treasurer.

Chairman Larsen was escorted to his chair, and at once adjourned the meeting until 7:30 p m. when a banquet was held in the Exhibition room of the Emerson Hotel.

The members of the Maryland Industrial Lenders Association were highly honored with the distinguished guests at our Seventh Annual Banquet as follows: Albert C. Ritchie, Governor; A. S. Goldsborough, secretary Merchants & Manufacturers Association; Wm. I. Norris, president of the Senate; Howard Bryant, President Second Branch City Council; John J. Ghingher, Deputy Bank Commissioner; Wm. J. Barrett, Bank Department; A. S. Ezekiel, Chairman Pennsylvania Association; R. Evans, The Baltimore News; Forrest Gesswein, Member of House of Delegates, 4th Legislative District, 24th Ward; Randolph Barton, Jr., well-known Baltimore Attorney, and Chairman Committee of Legislation Merchants & Manufacturers Association; R. J. Beacham, well known Baltimore Attorney, and Legislative Agent, M. & M. Association; R. W. Alexander, Vice-president; The Equitable Trust Company; E. Asbury Davis, President Merchants & Manufacturers Association; E. Paul Mason, Baltimore Attorney; Wm. J. Delcher, Cashier National Bank of Baltimore; R. Rossiter Revers, Assistant Cashier National Bank of Baltimore; T. F. Fox, of the M. & M. Association, and well-known Baltimore Attorney; Jos. A. Goldstein, of the Twentieth Century Printing Company; G. W. Worsham, Jr., of the Merchants and Manufacturers Association; Julius Levy, of M. S. Levy and Sons; A. J. Lilly, Chairman of the Workman's Compensation Committee, M. & M. Association; A. E. Duncan, Chairman of the Board, Commercial Credit Company; W. J. Donnelly, of Maury & Donnelly-Williams Co., Insurance Brokers; H. M. Lucies, Secretary The Automobile Club of Maryland.

REPORT OF PROCEEDINGS.

Mr. Howard Bryant: Gentlemen, I have been requested by the management to introduce to you to-night a man who has been absent in the flesh but always present in the spirit, your old friend and fellow member, Dr. Mueller, who will act as toastmaster for the evening. (Applause.)

The Toastmaster: (Dr. Mueller) Fellow members of the Maryland Industrial Lenders Association, Guests and Friends: It is a distinct pleasure to come here and welcome you to this festive board. It is also a fitting occasion to celebrate the history of your successful organization and its past achievements, to review past experiences, and to create resolutions of new idealistic effort.

I am wondering if you are really cognizant of the history you are making in the conduct of your business. Are you aware of the new remoulding of public opinion? Are you appreciative of the new standard of ethics that your present method of conducting business is setting up? It is one of the most surprising things I could announce when I tell you that for the first time in the history of the small loan business that the economical and sociological phases of the business are being included in the educational subject of the curriculum of some of the leading temples of learning in this country. What has happened has been of your choosing, of your own effort. It will be encouraging to those who are outside of the business.

In their effort to make a coöperative plan in promoting this new area of good-will, in promoting the success and continuance of this business to know that the moulding of favorable public opinion is in your hands. It is one of the pleasures of our business to learn that what has happened has been done not alone through your organized efforts but as someone has very aptly said, What we owe the other fellow. May God speed your combined efforts through your organization to higher and nobler standards, and I congratulate you. (Applause.)

In presenting to you the first speaker of the evening, I am going to be careful not to mention anything about oratory. There are no orators. Demosthenes is dead; Cæser has too long passed into the unseen temple; and I—I am very ill. (Laughter.) The speaker who will address you now needs no introduction. He has already made an intimate acquaintanceship with you through an official capacity in a previous assignment. What he has done speaks for itself. How ably he has executed the public trust in his service to the people is best evidenced by the fact that he is now honored with the highest gift within the giving of this appreciative people within your commonwealth. This man to whom I refer you will now have the opportunity of hearing; you will have the opportunity of hearing the rich message that will fall from the lips of that fine, clean, able son of old Maryland, a gentleman and scholar, a clear thinker and a man of high purpose and clean lineage. I have the pleasure and the honor of introducing to you at this time Honorable Albert C. Ritchie, Governor of Maryland. (Loud Applause.)

Governor Ritchie: Mr. Toastmaster and gentlemen: I am not here to-night for the purpose of making any speech, but only for the purpose of saying one or two words of greeting. The real reason which prompted me to come was this fact: It is quite possible that there may be many people in the city of Baltimore or in the state of Maryland, who when they hear that this association of small money lenders, if I may use the popular phrase, is holding a banquet to-night, may not appreciate its real significance.

When you hear a meeting of the presidents of the great banks of Maryland, that meeting is heralded all over the state, and yet the reason why I wanted to be here was to testify to my appreciation and knowledge of the fact, that all the great banks in Maryland put together have not done a bit more, if they have done as much, for the poor and needy and unfortunate people of the community as you gentlemen who are around this board to-night have done. (Applause.)

The fellow who goes to deal with one of the large banks can generally take care of himself, and if he does not take care of himself or does not do so, it does not necessarily make much difference. He is there to put a deal through. Or he is there to make a fortune. Or he is there to put over some constructive consolidation. It all tends to make the country industrially and economically better and better in a business way and more prosperous and successful, makes the country a better place to live in, but it is not half as important that the man who is able to make a large loan at the rich bank should have a square deal assured to him as it is important that the poor man who wants some money for his ill children or sick wife or who has to go out and buy food or sustain him with or do something toward lifting the mortgage off of his property, that is not half as important that the rich fellow should get a square deal from the bank as it is that the poor fellow should get a square deal from the small broker who lends him the small amount of money that he needs.

I remember the first case that I had when I came to the Bar. I expect this has been the experience of a good many other young fellows. It was the case of a young woman who had fallen into the hands of a loan shark. The money that she borrowed was not much, a couple of hundred dollars, and yet it was necessary for her to have. She was being charged I do not know how much percentage, a considerable amount, a hundred per cent, as I recall it. The only significant thing in referring to that is that when you take a case of that kind in court we had to raise the money, the legitimate money with which to pay off the loan shark, and it was a problem to know where to get it. That was a good many years ago, about 1900, but it was a problem to know what company to go to, what lender to go to, what broker to go to who would not treat the woman as unfairly when the loan was made to her to pay for the loan shark as the loan shark himself had been. Now we do not have any more trouble of that kind, and the reason that we don't have any more trouble of that kind I think is that a band of honest men, a band of clean men, a band of men who recognize the importance of this loan business, assembled themselves together, as you have done in order to see that the business was put on a basis where it ought to be in order that the laws which will protect all interests in it are passed and are on the statute books.

I think that you are to be congratulated on the work which you have done. You are to be congratulated because now it cannot be said that anyone who needs a small loan of fifty or a hundred dollars, or anywhere up to $300, it cannot be said that they need run any risk of falling into the hands of people who will rob them. They have honest brokers to deal with, they have honest lenders to borrow from. That situation as it exists to-day is due I think to the splendid services which you gentlemen have rendered and to your recognition of the vast importance of that field in the money lending business. (Applause.) It is simply in order that you may know that I am not unmindful of the importance of that field, but in order that you may know that I recognize the fine work which you gentlemen have done and the splendid elevation which you have given to this important phase of the financial work of the state, important to so many poor unfortunate and needy people, that I testify my appreciation and gratitude and tell you that I am glad to have the privilege of being with you here to-night. (Applause.)

The Toastmaster: I knew the Governor would bring you a message that you would not forget, because he is the only man to my knowledge who has ever supervised the Industrial Lenders in this country who has succeeded to the governorship of any state in this country. He brings you a message and I desire that each one of you display an earnestness in maintaining your high standard of clean ethics.

The Governor very ably touched on the human phase of the money-lending business. There can be nothing more touching than to alleviate the needs of our country's citizenship, that citizenship which is the backbone of the industrial branch of our country, which means its success, and when you hear of the service that the lenders are rendering, when I tell you that many fine minds have assigned themselves to the hazardous task of research and survey, and that they have been able to illuminate the dark places, it has been like bringing a lighted torch into a darkened place, you can understand that these new truths are going to put your business out where the world can see and appreciate it. But that task, as I said, before, lies in your furtherance of the ideals of your business. The Governor very graciously touched on what it means to the big business man who is surrounded with his friends, with his training as a business man, with his opportunity of knowledge, when he wants to get advice he can go to a bank, he has the confidence that is engendered by dealing with any particular banker or a group and he is assured of having an opportunity of tradng with the bank. But need cannot bargain with greed or cupidity. That is too much. And he touched upon a subject that was like this:

The money lender has learned to render a real valuable service. It is unlike the man who died and left his entire belongings, his entire possessions, to a small orphanage, and when the trustees of that orphanage heard it they looked at their impoverished treasury and they were indeed happy, and on the day when this dowry came to his impoverished orphanage they found he had presented it with twelve more orphans. (Laughter.)

In presenting to you the next speaker, I have the privilege and the honor of telling you about one who is interested in commercialism. Ever since the day of primitive barter where commercialism was born, commericialism has been responsible for the success and development of our country. You know that during the World War America has made its vast contrbution and has hung up a new record for production through its industrial work. This man of whom I speak to you understands business, understands business affairs and business organizations. And there is another side to his nature. His versatility is so multitudinous that I do not mean to touch on some of them. One of them is that he is a raconteur, a wit, and also he is a farmer, does intensive farming and extensive farming. He has had the privilege and honor of being classed, on account of his activities in trading in motorcars and the like, as being the David Harum of the Iron Vehicle. And it gives me great pleasure to introduce to you the boy wonder of the Eastern Shore, Mr. A. S. Goldsborough, Secretary of the Merchant and Manufacturers Association. (Applause.)

Mr. Goldsborough: Mr. Toastmaster and Gentlemen: All I can say about the versatility is that our old friend who wrote so many tales of the Deep in comparison with your descriptive power is as a piker. (Applause.)

I have been charged with many things, ordinarily to most crimes I have pled guilty, but upon my soul, some of the things charged against me to-night have been sprung so suddenly that I have hardly had a chance to frame any character of defense.

Moreover, I have been just a little bit disconcerted since I have been at the table, I have endeavored to gather my thoughts together for a word or two, but there have been two groups of conversationalists, one on each side of me, and I have overheard just little snatches of conversation and it has gotten my mind entirely off of what I hoped might be the subject of my address this evening.

I heard Mr. Bryant say a moment ago, using language that perhaps is unknown to most of you, "He raised me and he raised me and he raised me until he pushed me out." (Laughter.)

I was very much disturbed and I asked him if he talked about a poker game, and he said, no, he was talking about his apartment landlord. (Renewed laughter.)

That is not quite so discouraging though to me personally as my usually amiable friend Senator Norris. I have known Senator Norris for a long while and I have known him well enough to know that he will say nice things about people during campaign periods even if he has to lie about it (laughter). I suppose it is a bit refreshing to him however, to feel that now and then he can really tell the truth to a man face to face without feeling that he is going to commit an offense. He was talking about this matter of speechmaking tonight. He and I were both commiserating with each other because we had been put on the program to "sing for our suppers" instead of getting a free meal, and the Senator said, "Well, Goldsborough, it is easy for you, you can get up and say nice things and pleasing things and all that kind of thing, but the difference between you and me is that I cannot speak unless I really have something to say." (Laughter.) So with poker on one side and condemnation from the Honorable Sentor on the other and the knowledge that I am to talk without saying anything, you can see that I am just a bit handicapped. Moreover, I did want to pose as an orator. I did think that maybe I might, with the name of Aristides, get into the Demosthenes class, but inasmuch as the Toastmaster has absorbed unto himself all of the reputation for oratory I hardly have a leg to stand on.

So we will just talk together my friends, as an average man to an average man about some things that we all may be interested in. You fellows, because you have the money, and we fellows, Senator Norris and myself, because we want it. (Laughter.)

Would it be altogether out of place if I were to ask a direct question as to how many of us have ever bothered ourselves for a minute about analyzing the construction of a monument? We all stand at the foot of a monument, if it is particularly beautiful, and we note is embellishments, we notice its symbolism, what it is supposed to signify, and if there is the slightest touch of the artistic about us we will admire that which we see as beautiful. And yet I will warrant that not many of us ask ourselves anythng about the relation between the monument as we find it constructed and some of the principles involved in the course of that construction. If we see a low shaft that goes but a few feet in the air it contains in itself nothing particularly remarkable about its engineering genius. But if, on the other hand, we find a monument whose shaft lifts high into the atmosphere, hundreds of feet, above the average man's height, almost challenging the laws of gravitation, then we begin to say to ourselves there must be some of the principles of mechanics involved in order to make that monument stand firmly. Now, my friends, you and I know enough about the average piece of masonry to know that the higher a shaft goes into the atmosphere the deeper and more solid and more dependable must be the foundation upon which that shaft rests. Otherwise the slightest bit of quivering on the part of Mother Earth will cause the foundation to crack and the shaft, under the crackage of the foundation and the possible interference with the laws of gravity, will be percipitated to the ground. Now, you know there is no difference between the ordinary laws of physics, the laws with which you and I are related in our connection with human beings. You men are engaged in business, you men are engaged in a particularly specified type of business. You men are engaged in a business which has in the past had hovering over it more of the shadows than you were proud of. Now as a result of that, knowing that an honorable business in order to become honorable has got to lift itself above the lower shadows and clouds in which it has existed, it becomes incumbent upon the builders, or those who would undertake a task of that kind to understand in the beginning that if they intend to build, they must rest their structure upon a foundation so definitely dependable it matters not what vicissitudes the future may present, the shaft in its rising elevation can be relied upon to maintain its position.

Now you know and I know that in the great complex machinery which we call busines life, that there are different kinds of demands, big and small, from the affluent and from those in some distress. Men dealing in big undertakings and men who have the dreams in their minds that sometime they may become magnates in the field of finance, but who need one little particular beginning point as represented sometimes in a very small loan. You and I could run through the personal history of hundreds of the leading men in the industrial field or in the mercantile field, men who started perhaps with some little corner business, or started with some little beginning of industrial activity coming out of the natural mechanical genius that they have possessed, and those men have found the real beginning in some little loan which they were able to accomplish by some means that laid the basis out of which ultimately they evolved their great triumph. In business, my friends there are cases where the small lender is just as essential, as the Governor has said, as is the big lender. You have in this room men of large business activity. Pardon the personal allusion, but within a very few feet of where I am standing, and seated about the circular table are a number of men big in business here in Baltimore, men representing millions in banking, men representing millions in manufacturing, men representing millions in all of the other various lines that are of some consequence, and they are here with you to find out whether or not you men are in dead earnest when you make the statement that you are laying the basis of a business ethics out of which the small lenders will emerge, of a kind and of a character such that there will not be a single man in connection with the business who cannot look square in the eye of the most penetrating gaze of any man in the city, knowing that in all of their dealings, in all of their financial relationships, they have been above reproach. The longer we live, the more we come to the conclusion that there is no business of any kind or character that is going to survive that does not rest upon a basis of decent, high-toned ethics. (Applause.)

I do not care whether it is manufacturing, I do not care whether it is banking, I do not care whether it is industrialism, I do not care what is the nature of the vocation or activity, if underneath it there is not some basis of sound ethics, it is utterly impossible for that business in the long run to stand squarely and firmly and independently in the circle in which it is going to operate.

Now I concur in what the Governor has said that there is an opportunity here for people who patronize the small lenders, an opportunity to the people of Baltimore City of infinite value. As a matter of fact the small lender fits into the business of the big lender. It is not merely, as I said a moment ago, the man or the woman who comes to your banking house under the feverish demand of necessity—and God knows that is important enough—but there are plenty of people who come to you for financing for definite purposes of business, not merely to buy bread, not merely to pay another debt, not merely for the purpose of staving off a legal execution, not merely for children crying for bread, and under the stings of a condition of that kind they are wild to find the money that is going to relieve the conditions, but they are men, as I said a moment ago, who have within themselves the natural fire of ambition, who may not have a half a dozen dollars that they can clink together and call the capital with which they want to begin business, and yet if they have the character, if they have the honesty, if they have the diligence, if they have the industry, if they have the resourcefulness, if they have the manhood out of which a successful business can be brought, isn't it right that we should have the mechanism in our midst to which a man of this kind can go and, with what he may be able to gather together, as needed collateral, lay down his proposition, get a small loan on a fair and square and honorable and manly basis and use that as the nucleus of something that may be ultimately enable him to make his thousands and then go to banking houses like that represented by Mr. Alexander or represented by Mr. Duncan and gather in their larger loans needed for bigger expansions and bigger enterprises and bigger undertakings. Now you men can establsh ourselves on exactly the same basis as the financial institutions of other kinds provided that you have within yourselves sincere and definite determination to fix a fine spirit of ethics and then have the leadership to enforce it. Now please understand that neither Baltimore nor any other community is going to believe in ethcial principles that are merely professed. The profession of high tone, does not give high tone. One moment of definite high tone practice is worth six months of high tone profession, and the matter of the practice of the real ethical principle is within yourselves, and you should find out the personnel of the men who are the actual leaders instead of the circle of the small lenders and discover whether the moral tone is in them, not only to lead but to compel all to follow. You hear people say that when they want to accomplish something good, they are perfectly willing to stand at the hill and push the ideal up. My friends, that is a reversal of the proposition, that is taking a chance on the idea, and if you can push it forward, you will follow it. The position for you men to take is to put yourselves in front of your ideal and pull it up behind you. Be one step ahead of that which you want and not one step behind that which you want. And when they find in your personnel that there is a perfect reliability so that they can talk business with you in exactly the same way that they would talk business with the finest spirit of financing in the city of Baltimore, then the small lenders work, or the small lenders status in this community will be so utterly unchallengable that the moment you mention it, the man or the woman who wants a dollar will not have to ask in a spirit of anxiety, where can I go without being fleeced, where can I go without having my flesh torn from my bones, figuratively speaking. They will know that when they look in the list of those associated with this organization, comprising men who have professed that which brought them into the circle of honest dealers to lift the business beyond possibility of reproach, they look down that list and they can say to themselves and their companions, We can go there and do business without having to apologize to our neighbors because we were seen in an institution of that kind. That is what you want. A man or woman can enter your doors without having to veil the face, or having to come out with all kinds of explanations, saying that they do not usually borrow money that way, but this just happened to be some kind of an exceptional exigency and because of that they took the chance. That is not the kind of business you men want. You want to demand the very best in the community. The people of the community want a small loan place where they can enter exactly as they would enter any bank in Baltimore City, with head up and shoulders back and lips squared, with a consciousness, that they are dealing with men and not dealing with things that I dare not put into English. My friends, as I said a moment ago, the whole thing is a matter of masterful leadership. In all movements of this kind inevitably somebody has got to set the pace and take the lead. What you want in the matter of your leader is not merely the man who has the genius for making money, not merely the man who stands at the head of that institution which is paying the largest dividends in your circle, but you want to find the man whose moral fibre is sound, absolutely sound, out in the center light or under cover of darkness where nothing can penetrate. You must have men of that kind and let them take the leadership, men who have the masterful spirit, masterful qualities, the man who will not only say to you, Let us do this, but the man who will say to you, You must do this because it is right and doing anything else is wrong. When you do that I can hear these men over here in the field of big business say to you, Here, gentlemen, you belong in the circle of bankers, maybe not in the circle of those lending millions for big operations, but bankers who stand out in their endeavor to take care of those who are needy, and those who are to-day looking after the relief of the needy may tomorrow be the prosperous men of the community. You all know that the needy man once helped often emerges into the atmosphere of the prosperous, and when he does, he never forgets the hand that lifted him up. A man or a woman of that kind dealing with institutions which have treated either him or her in the most perfect kind of open hearted, open handed, open conscience way in their business operations, will always be your foremost champion in connection with what may be circulated abroad about you and your business. I thank you. (Applause.)

The Toastmaster: Mr. Goldsborough very aptly presented to you the aspect as it appears to a man of business, a man of affairs. He reflects an intimacy with you and your business that is absolutely amazing to me and elicits my profoundest admiration. What he has said should give you the greatest encouragement to stick by the high standards that you have set for yourselves. It shows clearly that it takes time and persistency to wear away that prejudice of centuries. But it can be done. And that in due course by persistent application to that right thinking standard you are about to come out in the spotlight clean, respected and admired for your courage.

And Mr. Goldsborough also raised a thought in my mind, and it is this: He showed very clearly that the service of the industrial lenders is reaching to the merchant who appreciates the value and necessity of that service in any given community, because it makes possible for these folks in temporary financial embarrassement to come and have that relief that is necessary for them to go out to their merchant and secure their bills and keep self respect by retaining their credit standing. It also shows clearly to the employer that more and more these men who have difficulties at home, and many times have positions of responsibility, and enables them to come and make a small temporary loan to relieve that stress, where, if that opportunity were not accorded them heaven only knows whether or not he might be tempted to help himself to his employer's property. Then again there comes the understanding with the banker, the banker knows he cannot have time, and the economics involved would prohibit his being able to make many small transactions that are required by the small lender. The economics involved in that are self-evident when so many of the bankers say, We cannot even handle accounts of those who give us their money and attend to their bookkeeping unless we make a charge. It may be nominal, but it must be sufficient to cover that small care that is necessary for that transaction. And as the lender fills that niche between nowhere and where the bank starts, you can see that there is a broadcast understanding between all business men.

In looking down the list of speakers, after it was emphasized and called to my attention, by Mr. Goldsborough, I see a galaxy of gentlemen who are spellbinders and who would enthuse any ambitious campaign manager (Laughter).

The next speaker is a gentleman who has had a great deal to do in making possible the very functioning of your daily business life. He has devoted a great deal of effort and energy as patron of the very bill under which you are operating, and which has placed the jurisdiction of the supervision under the banking department. He has worthy ambitions, and if you have read the papers recently, in fact so recently that the ink is not dry on the issues, you will find that the appreciative people of this district in which he lives are going to send him into the Senate under the shadows of the Capital. (Applause.) Make you no mistake about that. And those of you who are in a postion to make that possible, it is your bounden duty not to lose that opportunity. If you are not in the district, you can attest the worthiness of this able representative of the common people. I have the privilege of introducing to you at this time, Senator William I. Norris, President of the State Senate. (Applause.)

Mr. Norris: Mr. Toastmaster, fellow guests and gentlemen of the Association: You now know that my friend Goldsborough here is all that the Toastmaster said about him and a great deal more. I read the program here to-night and naturally I saw my name placed there as about to speak. I would not put it like my friend Goldsborough here, that after having a good dinner, which I certainly have had, that we had to "sing for it" but it just struck me after I saw my name, that it looked to me like one of those five cent sandwiches, a whole lot on each end and very little in the middle—meaning myself (laughter).

Mr. Goldsborough: Oh! (Renewed laughter.)

Mr. Norris: I shall have to be very careful what I say here this evening, because, as has been said by the toastmaster, I am a candidate for public office, and unfortunately the kind of office that I am candidate for I am told comes high. It comes very very high. So, Gentlemen, it may be that in my dire stress and extremity that I might have to call upon you gentlemen. (Laughter). If so, I pray you, treat me gently.

I am somewhat worried over the fact that I believe your limit is $300. I am pleased, however, at the number who are here (laughter) because I might do some things that you gentlemen have been familiar with in your business, that is repeat. There is only one thing that stops me from that line of procedure, and that is, cautious gentlemen as you are, you might ask me where the collateral is. If you had been invited here ten or fifteen years ago, you would have expected to see a lot of fellows with horns on their heads, most outrageous looking fellows. Well, you have played Maryland My Maryland, and all the patriotic airs, and Way Down South in Dixie, and really, you look to me like as fine a looking bunch of American citizens as I have seen most anywhere.

But I am not going to give you very much flattery and tell you a lot of nice things like some of the gentlemen who have preceded me, because I am always reminded of Cy Cummings' story when he went down in Southern Maryland and got off his big speech in his oratorical way, and some old negro down at the bottom of the audience, said to another, "Who is that gentleman up there talking?" And the other negro replied, "I don't know, but he certainly is recommending himself most highly." (Applause.) So, gentlemen, I don't propose to say very many flatteringly and nice things to you to-night.

I do not see many worried countenances here to-night, I suspect that there are not many notes on the desk for tomorrow that are due, notes that you are afraid will not be met. You have heard the story about Ike and Jake, how Ikey walked the floor and he said to Rachael, "I can't sleep, that note is due tomorrow, I have got to tell Jake that I can't meet it." So he goes over and tells Jake about it, raps at Jake's door, and he says, "Jake, my note is due tomorrow, and, Jake, I can't meet it and I can't go to sleep, and I came to tell you that I cannot meet that note." And his friend Jake said to him, "Ike, you darn fool, now I can't go to sleep." (Laughter.)

So I do not see very many worried countenances here, but, gentlemen, seriously speaking for just a moment all of the thoughts that come before my mental vision and all of the pictures that I thought would be appropriate for this occasion have been taken away from me by the gentlemen who have preceded me. But I remember years ago, and I happened to be attorney then for some loan companies, and as a young lawyer I received retainers from those companies, and I want to say to you gentlemen that after a year of that kind of service it was practically the only practice that I had, and I was compelled to resign my attorneyship for these companies. And why? Because I did not feel I could serve any longer in the character of attorney for those companies in view of the practices that they were following.

Just for a minute, gentlemen, let me contrast the conditions that existed in your line of business in this city about fifteen or twenty years ago with the conditions that exist here to-day. Double mortgages! Yes, I know one company had two mortgages made out for the same loan, one to show and the other one to put into the safe. I know of assignments of wages, and when the employees appeared at the United Railways or the B. & O. offices in the evening on payday, they would find that nearly everything had been taken that was takeable. I know sometimes that they were met with what you call beats who tried to beat them, but gentlemen, the conditions in those days were terrible, and sooner or later the law had to step in, and sooner or later the law did step in and stopped it. Now you are allowed special privileges by the law, you are allowed to charge more than six per cent interest, and you are permitted to do that because of the precariousness of your collateral, most of it being in use while you hold it, and because of the very hazardous feature of your business. But it is unnecessary for me to say to you that the law will only continue to permit you to charge 3½ per cent per month interest so long as you gentlemen live up to the high standards and the high principles that the law has set and that your Association and you men have set. (Applause.) It is unnecessary for me to tell you that. I am reminded that not all of you do a business which is made up of the business which comes from people in great distress. I am attorney for a good many building associations and I find that men and women who come to us for loans of one and two and three hundred dollars that the expenses attached thereto are too great. By the time the title is searched and the application made, the president's fees paid and the committee fees, for looking into the property, the papers put on record, the notary public and the attorney paid, it is too much money for a loan of $300 and time and time again we have turned them down, and there is always an opportunity on occasions of that kind where you gentlemen can rise to the occasion: I have known people who have been temporarily out of work, installment houses were about to come down and take away their installment furniture, and they went to the small money lender to borrow the money in time to tide them over. Now, gentlemen, you have a clear place in this community. As you know, there is nothing to be ashamed of in your business. The only thing you have to remember is that in the business where only private capital is invested, and where you do not get your deposits from the public that where private money is invested, there is at times a temptation to override the law, or take advantage of the people. But those men have no place in your association, and I for one want to testify to the fact, that I do not believe there exists in the city of Baltimore to-day, hardly one, certainly not to my knowledge any, who are taking advantage of people's distress.

Now, gentlemen, you have a real place here in the community. You are welcome in this community, the people need you. You are performing a public service. You are making a fair return on your money and you are giving value received to the people who come to you to borrow. I think that the state of Maryland is to be congratulated because of your existence in the community, and now, gentlemen, if you will let me quote to you just a little line from the poet that occurred to me while I was sitting here, I do not want to class you as angels with wings sprouting, but these words seem to be very appropriate, and with them I will close:

"Never to the chambers where the mighty rest,
Since their foundations, came a nobler guest,
And never was to the bowers of blest conveyed
A fairer spirit or more welcome shade."
(Applause.)

The Toastmaster: Senator Norris brings us a corroborative message, and it is from the sublime to the ridiculous, but if you can draw sufficiently strong on your imagination for a moment, you can picture a loan man with a halo. But, my friends, it has got to come because there can be no period of probation, it is now or never, if you do not make it now it will be never.

Senator Norris reminded me of the fair lady who sat in a field of daises surrounded by their humble blooms and plucked one of them off and started in a characteristic fashion, but it was not, "He loves me, he loves me not," no, because just a few summers before she had married a minister, and that was not her trouble because she was all provided with a husband, but she sat there and she conjectured and the first was that she was quite satisfied with her lot, she saw some of her girl friends who had married other men, men of professions, and she said, "Now, if I had married a doctor I could have had medical attention for nothing; if I had married a lawyer I could have had legal advice for nothing, but now, as I married a minister, I get good for nothing." (Laughter.)

No occasion, gathering, or assemblage of this kind where money lenders abound would be complete without bringing to your attention one who has given untiringly of his life's energy, who came and gave his personal endorsement and assurance and influence in the hours when this business looked the darkest, and so I give you this opportunity of hearing one whose fellowship and friendship is one of the dearest gifts within the power of man to give,—I present to you Honorable Howard Bryant. (Loud applause.)

Mr. Bryant: Mr. Chairman, Governor Ritchie and Guests: I can truthfully say that I am very proud to be here to-night, and you men who are members of this association will readily understand what I mean. Your governor and our invited guests may not understand what I mean when I say that. Therefore just a word of explanation.

Twenty-five years ago I was employed by the money lenders in the City of Baltimore. All that had been said about them then is true. And much more could be said that would also be true, but it remains better unsaid.

There was a man then in that business who had been in the business not only in Maryland, but in a great many states in the Union, who saw that the time was coming when if they did not take charge of the affairs and put them upon a different basis from that upon which they were being run, that the legislatures of the various states would interfere. And they did it from a source of self-protection, as well as from a sense of duty in regard to the business itself. They realized and they knew that the business that they were carrying on was absolutely necessary, that that field was a field which was necessary, and that as long as men lived the business would still be there. And therefore they had the vision for self-protection and with an idea back in their heads that they would like to get it upon a basis whereby the business would stand alone and would be respectable.

Gentlemen, that was a quarter of a century ago. Four or five men in Maryland, imbued with that idea, took me into their confidence, and I want to say to you that it was one hell of a task to get the thing going. But don't be alarmed about it. While one man was in favor of it you found twenty in the business who were opposed to it. But those men persevered; those men formed an idea, they formed an idea and they stuck by that ideal, and I am not going to tell you, as I might tell you in detail, gentlemen how that ideal grew, how they saw and how they reasoned and how they stuck and with a mere handful of men in Maryland whom you could count upon the fingers of my hand, imbued with this idea and imbued with this purpose started toward the goal at which we have arrived to-night. And fifteen or twenty-five years ago if you had told us that in this hotel we would get together, a body of men such as are here to-night, honored by the governor of our state, honored by the bankers and brokers in this city, it would have been a dream. But it has been realized to-night. You have heard from our Governor. He has told you why he came here to-night, and, gentlemen, that is a realization of the ideals of these men who are behind this association, the men who are behind the ideal, behind the ideal of the man who sits here at the other end of the table from another state who is connected with an association that is not only composed of the members of Maryland, but members from the various states of the Union in which this business is being conducted. About ten or twelve years ago they organized a National Association, and as soon as that National Association was organized, some, and I might say all of these men that I named and that I could point out, men that I could enumerate on the fingers of my hand, men who were interested in the formation of the National Association, and, I want to say to you that we have a National Association which is composed of members of the various State Associations of this Union, that if you were to attend one of their conventions, although you may be bankers, I want to say to that you would come away from that meeting imbued with the idea that there was an ideal and there was a purpose based upon integrity, based upon fair dealing that this National Association stands for. (Applause.) And this Maryland Association is imbued with the same idea. And I say that I am proud to be here to-night because our ideals have been realized. But, gentlemen, they will fall by the wayside and let you gentlemen who are members of the Maryland Association, members of the National Association, continue in the same direction that you have been going for the last ten or fifteen years.

Now, gentlemen, you can do it. You can do it by just going on. This banquet to-night ought to be an impetus to the members of the Maryland Association such as you have never had before. It is an encouragement when you have the governor with you, when you have representatives of the business interests of this town here with you. Gentlemen, your ideals have been realized. Now let us not fall behind; let us keep on going. You have an association here that comprises almost all of the money lenders belonging to your class in the City of Baltimore. Do not stop until you get every industrial lender who takes out a license in Maryland as a member of your Maryland Association, and thereby becomes a member of your National Body.

Gentlemen, this ought to bring in every one of those non-members, and if they do not come in, I will go so far as to say that you ought to run them out of the loan business in the City of Baltimore.

Now, hold on a minute. A body of men associated together for one purpose is all right, but you have a body of men belonging to your Maryland Association that ought to be able to take an interest in other affairs besides your own.

Your own business is your personal matter, but I personally know you have got men in this association in Baltimore who ought to take, through your association, a lead in other matters besides the loan business. You have not only to live for yourselves but you may live for somebody else, and by helping yourselves you may help somebody else and thereby be a benefit in a way other than the mere lending of money.

This association now as constituted in Maryland has a body of men around it which can form the nucleus of an organization with a broader field, with a broader purpose, and I stand here to-night to ask you gentlemen—and I am talking to you who are members of the Maryland Association—to take an interest in the affairs of your city and in the affairs of our state, because, gentlemen, you cannot go simply by yourselves, because if you do you are selfish, and while your purpose is all right along the lines that you are organized for, yet, in the name of the State and in the name of the city I want you to take an interest in the affairs of your city. I call a spade a spade and always have and always will. I advised some of you men to join the Merchants and Manufacturers Association. You made application, and I want to say to you here in this presence, that for a time, owing to the character of the business that you were supposed to represent, it was a question of whether or not this Merchants and Manufacturers Association would allow you to become a part and parcel of it. But when they found out the ideals for which you stood, they welcomed you to that association, and I want this association, those men who have joined it, to become a part and parcel of the workings of the Merchants and Manufacturers Association. I want you to comingle your business with their business, and I want you to take an interest in their affairs, and I want this association to take an interest in the affairs of the City of Baltimore and the State of Maryland. You now have an opportunity. Your ideals are all right, and if your practices correspond to your ideals then the business community will gather around you as you are gathering around the business interests of the community in the City of Baltimore to-night. And I do not want you simply to stop in the operations of your Association with the simple ideals that relate to the lending of money, but I want you to take an interest in the business affairs of the city, then I want you to take an interest in the political affairs of the state and the nation. You have an opportunity, gentlemen, with the men who belong to this association, to make yourselves felt in this community, first by comingling and taking an interest in the business in the city through the Merchants and Manufacturers Association and in that way your interest and their interest will be comingled and you will stand as a solid body. I want you also to take an interest in the civic affairs of your state, and in the civic affairs of your city. You men come in communication with a class of people who cast a vote, who are responsible, or will be responsible for the kind of political government that you have in your city and your state. The bankers have their clientele, they take interest in the civic and political affairs of the city and the state. There is no reason why you should not do the same thing, because you reach a class of people whose vote counts just as much as the vote of those men from the large interests throughout the state. Their ballot will determine the character of men who represent you in your city and in your state just as much as the bankers or the large brokers may control their clients. Your clients' ballot will count just as much as theirs. There you have a field that will help the kind of legislation that is beneficial to the state. They can determine the character of men who shall represent you in the city council and represent you through the mayor of the city of Baltimore, through the governor of the state and the United States Senator coming from this state. You there have a field not only to help yourselves, and to help the business interest of the community, but you have an opportunity to help your state and to help your city.

I don't want you to take an interest in party politics. Those of you who are democrats may be democrats if you want to. Those of you who are republicans may be republicans if you want to. But there comes a time, in my humble judgment, and I am older than most of you are, there comes a time when the political affairs of the state, there comes a time in the political affairs of the city, when the interest of good and honest government the people ought to rise above party ties and party affiliations for the good of the state. When you have a good governor of your state who is ready and willing to stay there, and his record is such as to qualify him and to make the people of the state have confidence in him, in God's name, I see no reason why he should not go there a second time. (Applause.) Therefore, gentlemen, I am proud to be at this banquet to-night, because in our fight, Governor Ritchie, for what we have in a measure accomplished to-night, we have sent out invitations for a dinner in which we hope to discuss the matters. A half a dozen have responded to the call. Some said, what is the use, but "No," said the others, we will go on, and four or five years ago when the thing was going on the National Association was saying, What is the matter with Maryland? We went down to the Legislature and we passed the Act of 1918. That helped us a little bit and perhaps some of my banker friends, as I heard a gentlemen say to me this afternon, when he invited me to go somewhere, and I said, No, I am going down here, and he said, "What? What are you going there for?" And I told him and he said, "Are you going down there with those fellows who charge 42 per cent interest a year?" Now, he does not know what he is talking about. Before I left him, he did. And maybe some of these bankers who have not given this question a study will say, What do you mean by charging 3½ per cent a month or 42 per cent a year? Gentlemen, there is something that can be done only in one way. The only way that a man can enter into the loan business and do it honestly and do it straight and take the risks that the business requires him to take, and get his money out and get his money in is to charge 3½ per cent to do it to get a fair return on the money invested. It just costs that much money. That is all there is about it. You cannot do it and make a fair return on your money unless you do charge that much. That is all there is to it. If you build a machine it cost you so much money to make it a good and honest and efficient machine, and if you undertake to do it for less you do not get the results. Now, gentlemen, you cannot go into the loan business and conduct it as it ought to be conducted and make a success out of it unless you charge 3½ per cent a month. That is all there is about it. It has been figured out; that is the result of experience. The Legislature of Maryland recognized that and it passed the law. The Governor this session has tried to get this same law passed in every state in the union. The only persons who are fighting this law when it is offered in the various states of the union are the outlaws or the loan sharks in the business. Every man that belongs to this association, every man who belongs to the National Association, and the Russell Sage Foundation and all those that investigated this matter, and all those that know anything about it, are in favor of the Maryland law being the law in every state in the union. The only people who are fighting us, the only fight that we had, is from the men who are strictly loan sharks, men who do not want to take 42% a year, or 3½% a month, but men who want to take 100 per cent or 150 per cent or 200 per cent a year. Those are the men that are fighting us.

That is the only trouble we have. As soon as our proposition is presented, as soon as the books are open, as soon as the figures are shown, those who are honest are with us, and this Association and the National Association will never stop until the law is uniform in every state of the Union where this business is carried on. And I am proud to know that we have the endorsement of the business community in this state, that we have the endorsement of the Governor of this state, and I congratulate the men who started the proposition in Maryland, and I congratulate the men who formed the National Association, and I congratulate you men who are following in the footsteps of the men who formed this association to make it grow in Maryland until every lender who takes out a license is a member of this association. And you should see to it through this association that every member of the association is imbued with the ideals of the association and conforms to its rules and regulations. Then, gentlemen, when you want to have your public functions, the bankers, the brokers, the Governor, the United States Senator, and anybody else that you will invite will be glad to attend your public function. (Loud applause.)

The Toastmaster: After you have heard this resume and heard what Mr. Bryant has said, there is not a thing that I could add, there is not a thing that I need to say that will evidence more clearly the appreciation expressed by the members, the affectionate feeling that we have for Mr. Bryant. One cannot turn his back on the friends who stand by him in the places of our history when the lenders were lonely and when the men outside, in the position of service passed them by. You could not hope for men of clean purposes to come into a business that was ostracised and isolated. It required the courage and stamina that came from the wise counsel and judgment of one like Mr. Bryant. You can understand the extent of his service when I tell you that recently there came into my hands data which showed that only approximately eight per cent of the population of the United States carried checking accounts, that four per cent of the population was indigent, that eighty-eight per cent of the population are prospective borrowers from institutions of this kind. Is not that something to take into consideration when you legislate for people, for the masses? Isn't it worth while? It would seem so to me.

And now, just before we go, I want to show our appreciation to the Governor for his kindness in coming and dining at our festive board. Won't you rise and let us give him three hearty cheers for himself and the other guests who have been kind enough to come.

(The diners arose and gave three hearty cheers for the Governor and the invited guests, and then, after the singing of Aulde Lang Syne, the meeting adjourned.)

HOW TO EDUCATE A CUSTOMER TO PAY WITHOUT NOTICE.

By H. P. Gatter, Philadelphia

I cannot help but feel the weight of the privilege of addressing the members of the Pennsylvania Industrial Lenders Association and their employees on this subject. Many of you I have known for a long time, and fully realize your superior knowledge of the loan business, but rather than apologize for my shortcomings in handling the topic assigned to me, I hope that you will accept my recommendations at par. Should they be contrary to your judgment, accept them not critically, but rather as a well-meant effort on my part, unfortunately misdirected.

How to educate a customer to pay without a notice is in itself of little value if the expense is all that is to be considered, but the account in your office that receives the first reminder of an overdue installment, is like the first snowflake of a snowstorm—one never knows what the end will bring forth.

We are able to trace to this class all our slow accounts, as well as those where the addresses are most desired. The teaching should be given serious consideration at all times, from our ad in the newspapers which first attracts the customer, until we finally say goodbye after the deal is paid in full.

The topic can well be divided into several classes, but the main subject in each class is "Impression." It has long been said "a loan well made is a loan well paid." I am, therefore, going to ask you to come along with me in our efforts which first attracts the borrower, the impression made on his first entrance into our office, the taking of the application, our outside man's handling of the deal, and how the loan is finally closed.

Newspapers and circulars are the methods through which most offices get their new business, and it is also the channel through which our first impression is made on the public, and while I recommend such advertising as will be in keeping with a financial institution, I feel there should be no doubt in our minds as to the value of truth. Advertising containing elaborate statements made purposely to mislead the public, may get you new business, but the customer so obtained never entirely forgives you for your misrepresentation, and they have lots of opportunity to return the same compliment, and it is a well-known fact that they generally do. The office that can be supplied with a new business, recommended by the Firm's customers, is most fortunate, not only because it is most economical, but it generally comes to us already impressed with the firm's way of doing business, and needs but little educating to pay promptly.

The prospective customer when entering your office, has already had his first impression lesson. This was formed before we had personal contact with him, but the effort of the office should now be to teach him the real way of doing business. The very atmosphere in some offices indicates promptness and courtesy. The well-lighted lobby, the quiet manner in which the office is managed, is sure to make him feel comfortable, and impress him with the character of the Firm with whom he is about to do business.

It would not please you, I am sure, if you went shopping and were forced to waste your life waiting for attention, or be permitted to listen while someone complained about the poor cloth or the bad eggs. This sort of impression, however, is made on the prospective customer or open account when they are permitted to be an audience while some loud talk about the interest this month being more than last, or an argument with a slow account on the telephone over an extension of time, is being carried on. Care should be taken to avoid talk of any kind through the cashier's window that would expose a delinquent condition of another account. This is not only embarrassing for the particular customer, but should an applicant overhear it, he is apt to think such an affair is a continuous performance in your office, and at a later date feel inclined to delay his own payment for a very trifling reason. An invitation into the private room not only impresses your customer with the importance of the deal, but you gain his respect, and when he is seated comfortably and privately in one of your small offices, he feels more at ease, and consequently is willing to talk. We all know the opportunity to size up a new loan when he is prone to chatter.

The successful loan man must learn diplomacy. He must always remember that he is his Firm's personal representative before the public, and upon him devolves the responsibility of getting new business, as well as retaining the old. The applicant may be new at borrowing money and should be considered so at least. He will be much impressed with his initial reception, upon which his entire future handling of the loan may depend, therefore, the taking of an application for a new loan should never be left to inexperienced help.

The loan man is obliged to protect the Firm's interest, but very frequently in our ambition to learn whether or not the prospect has other loans, we lose sight of the fact that we are exposing that possibility, and I firmly believe that many customers who to-day are carrying other loans, first learned this habit through our teaching. It is, therefore, very essential that special tact be used in your effort to size up the quality of the risk. Keep in mind too that your outside man has the loan to look up, and your final judgment is not yet necessary. Asking too many questions when taking an application, not only causes the loss of a loan very frequently, but is certainly displeasing to a new borrower, and has a tendency to tell him that your firm is doing business with housekeepers not up to his standing. Remember, the applicant comes to you for information only, and should not be expected to willingly expose his past life until he knows whether or not he wants to deal with you.

A prospective customer should be deeply impressed with the value of the service he seeks, the cost for the same, the date of the payments, the amount of each installment, and the company's willingness for him to pay larger sums at more frequent periods, if it is convenient. The security should not be overlooked, but not talked about to such an extent as to frighten the customer in believing that you are very apt to take his home if he does business with you.

The value of an outside man's visit to a new customer's home and its effect on prompt payments cannot be questioned, provided he is the sort of a fellow who is trying to improve his position by his best efforts. Just a few of his duties that will help in the education are:—He must first realize the importance of the transaction itself and that he is representing a financial institution. His position is not one of authority, and much assistance can be had if he will demonstrate his full knowledge of courtesy. Courtesy will assist him materially in getting the information the company desires, and his very action in securing this data will impress the new customer with the importance of the deal.

The inventory should be taken very carefully and receipts be requested, should any questions arise as to ownership. All instruments having numbers should be recorded. Never list an article that the housekeeper requests if you cannot see it. This takes away the importance of what you are doing, and is in no way fair to your company. Rent receipts or tax bills should be requested, and notes made of their condition. The income from which we hope to get back our loan should be recorded and the date it is received. It is often necessary for you to explain at the house your rate of interest, the monthly payments and when they are due. You should never try to see how quickly this work can be done. We would much rather you attempt to do the job thoroughly and impressively. Never commit yourself definitely whether or not a loan is to be made from your report. This is the manager's duty and while a great deal of stress is placed upon your look-up, it will convey a much better impression on the new customer if they know the office is the place where final judgment is given on such important matters.

It is very satisfactory to let it be known that you feel confident general conditions warrant the making of the loan, and it is most fitting for you to make an engagement for them to call between a certain hour, either that day or the next. This usually encourages a loan, and certainly makes it appear more important.

When a prospective customer calls for a new loan, they should be ushered into a private room as quickly as possible. This, for the very same reason, explained while taking the application.

The making of loans may not be a science, but it does require scientific procedure. Our first aim is to be certain that the deal is absolutely clear to the man and his wife, and to be sure of this a repetition of your explanation is again necessary. The papers about to be signed should be explained by all means, and it is very wise in some cases to read from them certain paragraphs that would apply to points where you think the customer is weak. On most of the notes used, the amount of the payment is mentioned as well as the date it is due, and I am sure no customer is permitted to overlook this fact, but unconsciously the manager will break his own contract by permitting a permanent extension on the deal until the Saturday after it is due, or the pay day on the first. It is one of your main duties to state to your customer when the payments are to be paid, not for him to tell you. A permanent extension does nothing more than expose a weak link in your contract, and I have learned that with proper tact it can almost be eliminated and much more respect given to the deal.

Only a very weak loan man will attempt to frighten his customers into paying the loan promptly. If you are doing this sort of thing, please change your methods at once, for you are not only ruining good business for your company, but you are jeopardizing the loan industry as a whole. Can you imagine several thousand customers in your office paying promptly every month just because they are frightened into doing it? Try to show the value of your service and the importance of the transaction. You can make a customer pay you promptly by impressing him that it is his duty, and if your position in his mind is what it should be, he will stand everyone else off if necessary, so that your obligation will be taken care of when it is due.

We can lose or gain lots of our impression in the signing of the papers. I know of an office where no signature is ever taken on the outside, excepting in the case of illness, and then only in the presence of an employee and with the consent of the manager. It is, of course, best to have both parties call at your office at the same time when a deal is to be closed, but when it is impossible, insist on the endorser or husband calling first. This permits you to pay the money to the wife, who is usually the one most interested in the security, and adds materially to the impression. Frequently you may have to refer to that part of the law which makes it so advantageous to make our loans to the wife instead of the husband. If it is absolutely impossible for the husband to sign first, then a power of attorney should be given by the wife, authorizing you to pay the money to her husband. The wife also must pay the twenty-five cent revenue stamp used on this document.

It is considered wise by some managers, with whom I agree, to have two employees' name appear as witnesses on all their notes. The duty of one is, of course, to make the loan. The second employee is called in with the money just before the loan is closed, and it is his or her duty to confirm and witness the signature of the maker, and also verify the understanding as to the amount of the payments, the interest and the date the installments must be paid at the office.

Now I feel sure that if you carry out all of the recommendations that I offer, you will still find need for sending notices, for most of the dope that I have given you is composed of the same old stuff. My only excuse is that probably some of the later employees are hearing it for the first time, and just a possibility that some of the older ones will profit by having their memories refreshed.

LEGAL REFORM BUREAU.

June 16, 1922.

Dear Mr. Kehr:

Will you please advertise in the next edition of the "LENDERS NEWS" that we would like to secure several copies of the Money Lenders Handbook, 1919 and we would be glad to pay $1.00 for them.

Please include in the ad that if the people who have them would send them in to us with a memorandum of their name and address, we would be glad to see that the remittance goes forward to them promptly.

Our supply of these is exhausted and the new ones are not yet ready.

Will you please advise me when you have attended to this.

Very respectfully,
H. S. TURNER, Secretary.

GEORGIA.

The annual meeting of the Georgia Association was held Thursday evening, June 22d. The meeting was called to order at 8:00 p. m. by Chairman A. B. Madison, with all members present.

The membership committee reported one new office for membership, the Beneficial Loan Society of Macon, Ga. A vote was taken and unanimously elected to membership, followed by the election of officers for the preceding year.

A. B. Madison, chairman; J. B. Otey, vice chairman; B. L. Lassiter, secretary and treasurer. After a number of interesting talks from members of the association, the meeting was closed in due form.

BOUQUET.

DES MOINES, Iowa, June 28, 1922.

Dear Mr. Kehr:

We are in receipt of your June issue of the INDUSTRIAL LENDERS NEWS, and wish to congratulate you on the excellent material contained therein. It is in our opinion, one of the most valuable issues, and we have gone so far as to read several of the articles at a meeting of our organization.

Respectfully yours,
State Loan Company,
H. O. HULLING.

SEVENTH ANNUAL CONVENTION, INDIANA INDUSTRIAL LENDERS ASSOCIATION.

Mr. Stratton: I take pleasure at this time in introducing to your Judge Collins, of Indianapolis. (Applause.)

Judge Collins: Mr. Toastmaster and gentlemen; I was in receipt of an invitation the other day to be your guest on this occasion, and I went home this afternoon and put on all my glad rags and came down here to be your guest, without the intention of making any speech; I am not here to make a speech, but I cannot permit the opportunity to go by now I am on my feet to say to you that I rejoice with your toastmaster in the wonderful growth and development of the business in the state of Indiana. The fact of the matter is I like it. John Aufderheide and Will Zumpfe, when I think how they have grown and developed into industrial money lenders, poor Father Gavisk and myself are now the only loan sharks in Indianapolis. The Industrial Loan Association of course has for its purpose the keeping on the statute books of Indiana, the law of 1917, which was enacted as the result of a great deal of hard work on the part of Brother Stratton and a few of us who were meeting in small rooms in those days to create an influence for the enactment of the legislation. It is very gratifying to know that the floor leader of that time, Judge Robinson, is here and will speak to you a little later

One of the fine things about this business of yours is that you can teach the poor thousands' thrift. I do not mean, however, in the sense of the young fellow in Sullivan County, near Stratton's home, that sent that little order to Sears-Roebuck. One morning they received an order that read something like this: "Sears-Roebuck & Company. Gentlemen: Inclosed please find post office order for 40 cents, for which please send me four rolls of toilet paper." The clerk replied to this order, —"Your valued order received. If you will look on page 1215 of our 15,000 page catalogue, you will note that toilet paper is 15 cents a roll. On receipt of the additional 20 cents, we will be glad to fill your order." The young fellow from Sullivan wrote back: "Gentlemen: If I had owned one of your 15,000 page catalogues, of course I would not have sent this order." (Laughter.)

I do not know what Judge Robinson has in mind, but right here at my left is John C. Foster, secretary of the Charity Organization Society of this city, a gentleman who comes in daily touch with the great problems of the poor—the thought I have in mind is this; that if a bankers' convention or any other organization of men who have to do with banks, are gathered together in the city of Indianapolis, talking over the plans for bringing us back to normalcy, and restoring industrial conditions, we would see in the paper in the morning their views, suggestions, counsel and advice for those things that would all be tremendous and impressive, but I want to say to you, if you could tell the story of what you have done in the twelve months to relieve conditions and alleviate the misery of the poor, gentlemen, it would be a story that I want to say to you the American people would appreciate and understand. (Applause.) And that is the side of it, of course, that is never given out; it is a sort of closed chapter. The loan is made and paid, and yet nobody understands what a wonderful thing is being done.

I am glad that Mr. Hartz has invited me to be here, and I am always glad to meet with the veterans in this work, and glad that I have had something to do with the placing on the statute books of this state the law of 1917. Two years ago, when Senator Dailey, was here and delivered that splendid address in the Riley Room, and took occasion to say that I was wrong in saying that Indiana was the first in enacting the loan bill, but afterwards he apologized to me, because I was right. We did put the first act of that kind on the statute books, and my good friend here was the floor leader at that time, and aided us in that work, and it was the best thing for Indiana, and your business, and the citizenship of this state that could have happened, and I want to say to you, as a citizen of the whole commonwealth, I am proud to be with you. (Applause.)

Mr. Stratton: I present to you now, with great pleasure, Mr. Walter R. White, of Indianapolis.

Mr. Walter R. White: Mr. Chairman and gentlemen: Now, that the judge of the Criminal Court has gone, I think we can proceed with safety.

I cannot turn the keys of Indianapolis over to you, but I can bring to you, and it is a pleasure to bring to you, greetings from 250 Kiawanians, who, I think, are working perhaps along the same lines that you are working. In other words, we have for our motto, "We Build."

I presume I have had the same experience that most every other young man has had who came up without a dollar—and hardly without a dollar yet —I came into the hands of one of the old fashioned loan sharks. I mortgaged my wife, household goods and my life, and my future, for $50.00, and heaven knows, I do not know how long it took me to get out. I remember distinctly that before I got out, the interest was practically what the principle was that I borrowed. But it is gratifying, gentlemen, to see an organization of this kind, living under the law and abiding by the law that is a protection to the people. I understand you started out with something like forty members, and you now have something like ninety or ninety-five; in other words, you are entering into the spirit of all other like organizations, that of coöperation, that of an exchange of ideas. This is a sort of a day of listening in, and of the helping of each other.

I think I can see in the future of this organization founded upon the principles that I understand it has been founded upon, this industry of yours spreading to every state of the union.

If I am right, I understand that such a law as we have in the state of Indiana, which was the first law enacted, is now in existence in something like fourteen or fifteen states of the union. I once heard a story of two men who went out hunting. They got where there were no houses, where there were no places to hide from danger. They had a gun apiece and some ammunition. Before long ahead of them they saw a pack of wolves coming. There was no place to go, no place to hide, so upon quick thought, they started firing to get themselves out of the danger. The wolves began to fall and come and fall and come and keep piling us, and they kept piling them up and piling them up, and they shot there for six days and nights, and finally thought they had killed the last wolf, and they started over the hill, when they saw the main herd coming.

I think, gentlemen, with your work here, as you have started it, if you can get into every state of the union, you are only now beginning to see the main herd coming.

I want to say I am glad to be a guest here, and I am glad to see a bunch of men that do not look like real sharks. I thought some of you would have horns, but you look like all the rest of these civic organizations that exist in the various towns of our state. I have no doubt that your home town, where you are, you coöperate with other civic organizations in upbuilding and helpfulness, and you are giving your people and city a social side of life, just as in this town.

If we all enlisted in one common cause and worked with unity, we could put over any good and big thing for the betterment of our citizenship, and we always get out of a thing proportionately to what we put into it. Some of us forget that in our daily routine, but when we get home at night we find there is something more that we can do tomorrow.

Due to the fact that you have lawyers and judges who know how to speak and say things to you, I am going to thank you for the invitation to be here as Mr. Aufderheide's guest and your guest, and I want to say that any time you are in Indianapolis, on Wednesday, I would be mighty glad to have any of you drop into the Kiwanis Club and accept our hospitality. (Applause.)

Mr. Stratton: I take pleasure in introducing Mr. H. D. Deweese, of Columbus, Ohio, our field secretary.

Mr. H. D. Deweese: Mr. Toastmaster and guests of the Indiana Association: I am glad to be here. I am always glad to be where loan men meet for sweet counsel. It occurs to me, however, that when I know the actual talent that is on the program, I feel more or less timid. In that respect I am in the same position that George Prentis, of Kentucky, was. He lived in the days when Henry Clay was known as the greatest orator, not only in Kentucky, but in this country. It seemed as though he was billed to make a speech on a certain occasion, but was not told that he was to appear on the same platform with Henry Clay, and when he arrived in the city and saw his name on the bills, scattered throughout the city, that Henry Clay and George Prentis would speak this evening, he did not say anything until he arose to speak, and then he said: "When eagles are in the air, buzzards and bats should hunt their holes."

I feel very much in that position tonight. However, here is where I come in, You had a splendid program, and it is only splendid because I was not here to mar it.

You know when Rastus went to the dance. He found a yellow gal there, and the boys all wanted to dance with her, and he wondered if there would be a place for him on the program, so he finally started up to 'Liza, and he said, "Liza," he said, "is your program full?" She said, "Look here, Rastus, you are sure some fool nigger if you think one little measly dish of ice cream would fill my program." I do not think my speech can make this program any fuller; I thank you. (Applause.)

Mr. Stratton: I think I forgot to mention that Mr. Deweese was the traveling secretary of the National Association. Next I want to introduce to you Mr. Mellis, of Indianapolis. (Applause.)

Mr. Mellis: Mr. Toastmaster, gentlemen and loan men: I understood the Toastmaster to say at the time he made his announcements he was going to call on the visitors for a talk. Now, I do not feel I am a visitor among the loan men. There has been a time when I spent the best part of my life in the loan business, and I do not feel I could tell any of you men anything that would be of any benefit to you. I see we have with us to-night several visitors who can probably make you a talk, from which you could get some benefit, and I am willing to give way to them. I came this evening for the purpose of listening and not to be heard; I thank you. (Applause.)

Mr. Stratton: I have now the pleasure of introducing to you our Banking Commissioner, Mr. Camps.

Mr. Charles W. Camps: Mr. Toastmaster and gentlemen: Just before five o'clock this evening the Governor sent word to my office that it would be impossible for him to attend this banquet on account of important work with the Reformatory Committee. He did not say in what respect that was to be connected up with this banquet, but he desired me to express his regret and inability to be here to-night. The Governor is one of the common, plain people, and likes to meet with the people; he does not make an engagement for the purpose of breaking it, and it is only on account of important business that he is not here to-night.

I am not here to make any speech; I suppose I was invited by Mr. Hartz, on account of the fact that my department of the state has the loan and credit business under its supervision. I have listened to what Mr. Stratton has to say about complaints and so forth, and I will say to you in all sincerity, that the loan and credit people have given me very little trouble. We have had few, some few complaints; and those have been investigated and sometimes the licensee has been found at fault, often times not. We endeavor to investigate every complaint where there seems to be any evidence to substantiate it.

We have 270 licensees, and I congratulate you on the large number that are present to-night. I think you owe it to the Association and yourselves to gather in as many of the licensees as possible in order to get the most benefit out of the act.

I say further, speaking about supervision, the banks give me a lot more trouble than the loan and credit men. In fact, they keep me busy a good part of the time. Now, I do not know what I can say that would be of any special benefit to you, except this; it occurred to me, and I took it up with some of your officers, that I believe the loan and credit Act should be amended in this respect; that no licensee should be permitted to be engaged in the selling of securities; that no loan and credit business should be closely affiliated with any other business, particularly any business connected with the selling of securities. I think the loan and credit men should operate separate and distinct offices. I think in the course of time, possibly in the next session of the Legislature, the Act should be amended so that we could make an examination of the business of each and every licensee. This is impossible at this time, on account of the lack of revenue. We do undertake to supervise and examine the loan and credit companies in the city of Indianapolis; that can be done without any expense to the State. Violations have been few and far between, and there are reasons why the licensees should obey the law under which they operate. If you get into trouble with any of your loans, you can have no right of action in court unless you are properly licensed.

I thank you very much for your invitation to be here, and I congratulate you on this large gathering and hope to meet with you again. (Applause.)

Mr. Stratton: We also have with us the Chief Clerk of this department, the man who really, as I understand it, comes in contact and has charge of this department. I introduce to you, Mr. Elmer Johnson.

Mr. Elmer Johnson: Mr. Toastmaster and members of the Association and visitors: I can only coöperate with Mr. Camps in this work, and while he is the man on the throne, I look after the details of the work and I try to keep Mr. Camps informed on the plans, and in answering complaints we advise with him, and we have answered every complaint that has come in, either by personal touch or correspondence, and if I am reliably informed from the list of licensees, I do not think we ever had a complaint from any member of the Association. I have a list of your membership, and I always try to see if the licensee complained of is a member of your Association, so that I can take it up formally with the Organization.

I believe if you get all the men in the organization, you will have the complaints eliminated. I find it is either due to error or misunderstanding that complaints are made.

We had a complaint the other day that came in, and we sent the man over to Mr. Hartz, and I trust that man will soon become a member of your Association. There was no wilful intention to violate the law; I believe he violated the law not knowing it.

The business is practically up to you men to make it what you want to make it and Mr. Camps' suggestion along the line of further legislation I think would be good at this time. There may be other measures that would still improve the business.

I do not want to take up your time, but I wish to assure you personally that I am willing to coöperate with you in any of the work. If there are any complaints, submit them to Mr. Camps, and I and he will be pleased to advise as to the proper method of solution. (Applause.)

Mr. Stratton: I next want to introduce to you Mr. Russel Wilson, President of the American Club.

Mr. Russell Wilson: Mr. Toastmaster and gentlemen: I am one of the buzzards, and not one of the eagles or "waa-hoo" birds, and got cooled off. You notice the difference between the thirty minute speech that Mr. White made, the five minute speech Stumpfe made—as soon as the Criminal Court Judge left the room, Walter White considered he was under no more restrictions.

Mr. Stumpfe and I are rather embarrassed this evening, as the Judge of one of the civil courts, before whom we must practice, is present, and even though we both were eagles, we do not dare to sore out to-night, for to-morrow, "off goes our head." I had rather expected to leave early to-night, but when I understood the Chair to say that we are soon to repair to the bedroom and close all the doors, I decided to stay it out.

Gentlemen, there is something really wrong with your publicity bureau, if you have one. Fifteen years ago when I first came here to practice law, one of the chief occupations of a young and new lawyer was Justice of Peace cases against institutions such as yours. Every few days we learned you were on the map by some poor man coming in and claiming he had been beaten out of his furniture and piano by one of you. We were always busy. Of course, we never got any place. If we had won the case we would not have accepted any fee.

When I received an invitation to come her to-night, I asked somebody what this Association was. They told me, and I said, "Oh, no, those fellows have long since gone out of business, because we have not had a complaint in our law office in the last ten years." Something has gone wrong in your publicity. We do not hear you sworn at or cussed any more, and how a young lawyer gets any practice I do not know, but you ought to have some consideration for the lawyers. How do you expect us to make a living? We cannot all be judges with ten and fifteen thousand dollar salaries, and you put us out in the cold.

My object in coming up here was mostly in the hope that I would be able to establish a credit in one way or another, and when I see these industrial money lenders, I think, there is a place for me; I am expecting confidently to make a few loans before I leave this time, with the money coming in on me.

Seriously, I enjoy being here very much indeed. It is my good fortune to represent as vice-president the American Club of this city, and I think the main business of the lunch club is to scavenge, because I certainly scavenge a good deal. But I enjoy learning something about the business, and I will take it upon myself to distribute something of the information that I have learned among our members, and I want to say to you that if you are here on Tuesday, I extend to you a cordial invitation to come and lunch with us. (Applause.)

Mr. Stratton: I have the pleasure of introducing to you at this time Mr. John C. Foster, General Secretary of the Charity Organization of Indianapolis.

Mr. John C. Foster: Mr. Toastmaster and fellow civic workers: Judge Collins got up with a Tuxedo coat on and said that he did not expect to be asked to say anything, but I believe when a fellow comes to a banquet and didn't have time to go home for his Tuxedo, you will believe him when he states he did not expect to make a speech. I am happy to be here to-night. When I first came to Indianapolis, I was asked to come and make a speech, and it was a hot night, but I dressed up in my Tuxedo coat and got on the street car and started down town to make my speech, and some fellows on the car punched another and said, "That fellow is Secretary of our Charity Organization," and the other fellow said, "The hell he is." (Laughter.) Do you know I have not been on a street car with a Tuxedo on since, unless I had my overcoat on over it.

You know the social worker is like the industrial money lender to-day. There was a time that the social workers were long haired men or short haired women. There was a time when money lenders were not the group of people we have around the table to-night, and as in the social workers, it has been remarked a lot of us are interested in the same family situation and we are both doing the same thing, the same kind of work in behalf of those families, that is demonstrated time and again when our social workers have conversations with your representatives. And the only thing I can say to-night that might be helpful to you is that we both need a knowledge of facts. We need to know our families and the situation pertaining to them, and then we can prescribe treatment. We can give relief. You can give a loan, but it is only on that kind of basis.

Mr. Camps says, "Keep your tub standing on the bottom," but we say in social work, "Know your family, and keep both feet standing on the ground while you are dealing with them, and do not let anybody tip you over."

Case work and family helpfulness is the same thing. Make an investigation and know your facts before you prescribe your treatment.

I am very happy to be here to-night.

MICHIGAN.

A meeting was held in Lansing at the Hotel Downey, April 20th and an unfortunate circumstance made it impossible for me to attend. Mr. Ryan of the Provident Loan Society acted as secretary.

The minutes of the meeting show that there were present, F. E. Stroup, of the Chattel Loan Company, of Grand Rapids; J. E. Ryan, of the Provident Loan Society, of Detroit; Mr. Buckner, of the Buckner Loan Company, of Pontiac; Mr. Kelso, of the Welfare Society, of Lansing; Mr. Hueman, of Beach and Hueman, of Jackson; Mr. Hanes, of the Lansing Loan Company, of Lansing; Mr. Mosher, of Lansing; Mr. Bentley, of Detroit; Mr. Whaler and Mr. Jordan, of Grand Rapids; Mr. Firth, of Kalamazoo; Mr. McCuen, Mr. Smith and Mr. Carter, of Jackson, and Mr. B. E. Henderson, of Chicago.

Mr. Henderson called on the Commissioner of Banking previous to the meeting urging him to accept our invitation to attend, but the pressure of other business made his attendance impossible.

Mr. Woll's letter as regards the change of the National Association dues was read and it was decided that dues in the association would be figured at the rate of seventy-five cents per thousand of the average loan outstanding. The association also went on record as being in favor of interest being figured on daily unpaid balances.

John E. Ryan of Detroit, was appointed as delegate to the convention. Mr. Carter, of Jackson, as alternate.

The meeting I am informed was filled with lively discussion and was very interesting to those in attendance.

Very truly yours,
J. A. Macbeth, Secretary.

SUGGESTION.

Indianapolis, Indiana, June 17, 1922.

Dear Mr. Kehr:

Some of the members of our association in making applications for membership in some of the civic bodies have been informed that they find no classification "Industrial Loans" or "Industrial Lenders."

It occurred to me that in asmuch as we are classifying ourselves as Industrial Lenders it might be well for the association members in the cities where city directories are published, to get together and see that the directory insert a classification "Industrial Lenders" instead of "Chattel Loans" or "Personal Loans" or if need be combined with one or the other of these classifications so that there might not be any need for the report back that there was no such classification.

Classifications might be a matter that could be talked over at the Annual Convention at New York in September. I only offer this as a suggestion and you may do with it as you see fit.

Very truly yours,
W. R. Hancock.

INDIANA.

The Fort Wayne Journal Gazette, and the News Sentinel announced the election of Joseph Baum of the Indiana Loan Company, as Chairman of the Fort Wayne branch of the Indiana Industrial Lenders Association, and W. A. Rich as Secretary-Treasurer.

In the early part of April, a dinner and business meeting was held at the Chamber of Commerce. The program consisted of discussions of general interest to members and inaugurated a new plan to hold monthly meetings of the organization.

The following are members of the local branch: Fort Wayne Loan Co., Indiana Loan Co., Peoples' Collateral Loan Co., Peoples' Finance Loan Co., and the Welfare Loan Co. Meetings are to be held on the first Wednesday of each month.

Efforts are being made to hold in Fort Wayne, one of the meetings of the State Association and should they result successfully, a State meeting will be held there in September. All the Fort Wayne members have signified their intention of attending the State meeting of the Association to be held at the Claypool Hotel, Indianapolis, May 17th and 18th.

NEW YORK.

On March 3, 1922, Senator Fearon introduced in the Senate of the New York Legislature, an act to amend the Banking Law in relation to Personal Loan Companies and Personal Loan Brokers, the purport of which was to change the existing rate of 2% a month and fees to a 3½% per month rate of interest. It was reported out of committee unanimously and passed the Senate unanimously. In the House it was referred to the Committee on Rules, and there it was lost in the shuffle incident to the closing of the session. We are informed that the State Superintendent of Banks and the Deputy Superintendent approved the amendment.

FINANCING THE SMALLER MAN.

People Who Have Not Credit at Banks Do Borrow $100,000,000 a Year Nevertheless.

By Joseph A. Reichart.

The average man does not have sufficient financial resources in the day of his greatest opportunity or need. The usual commercial bank is organized to make loans primarily upon property or other recognized business credits; and the man without tangible collateral of some kind, no matter how honest and thrifty he may be, no matter how good his character, will scarcely be accommodated at a bank.

This is as it should be, for it is said that only seven persons in one hundred maintain a bank account. True, some of them maintain several bank accounts, but the fact remains that ninety-three persons in one hundred have no bank account at all. National banks, state banks, trust companies and savings institutions are admittedly not equipped or conducted with a view to engaging in the business of loaning small sums of money to the average man who has neither a bank account nor the kind of readily liquidable security banks necessarily require as collateral to loans. To do so would materially increase their clerical staffs and would consume the time, attention and energy of bank officials and considering a multiplicity of loans, and advising a great number of small prospective borrowers concerning their personal and financial difficulties. Moreover, it is essential that such small loans to the average man be made upon a convenient weekly or monthly repayment plan, adjusted to the need of the borrower. This in a large number of small credit payments would necessitate the computation of accrued interest on innumerable small items and largely increase bookkeeping overhead.

Now it is perfectly obvious that with the necessity to serve the business community well, banks would not be justified to undertake to add to their already great problems and responsibilities in financing the substantial manufacturing, shipping and mercantile businesses of their communities, the risk, effort and expense of financing the small loan needs of the average laborer, clerical worker and professional man. This is a business separate, distinct and apart from the business which national and state banking institutions are chartered or expected to perform. The two businesses, so different in clientele and methods, could not be conducted advantageously by the same institution and are never found together.

Who, then, is to furnish this necessary small loans service?

Why the Gap Must Be Filled.

There are two distinct classes among those who seek to borrow money outside the field of the commercial bank; but the one class is enormously greater in number than the other. The first is made up of the chronic borrower, the down-and-outer, and the man who was always in hard luck. Their borrowings are of paltry sums, merely a few dollars to tide them over until pay day. These we may pass over with some sympathy for their frame of mind rather than the conditions that brought about their predicament.

But the second and far the more numerous class, so numerous, in fact as to almost hide the drifting human derelicts from view, is made up of men and women, exactly like you or like me. They come from those great armies of steady and habitual industrial workers employed in stores and offices, foundries and workshops of the great cities. They are also recruited from the ranks of the Federal, state and municipal employees, artists, professional men and women, etc. In many cases they have homes of their own, children and usually good employment at their profession or trade. They are earnest, thrifty citizens, bent steadfastly upon the worthy ambition to get ahead in life and ordinarily amply able to carry their financial obligations. But misfortune or sudden opportunity requiring the use of ready cash comes at unexpected moments. Unforseen emergencies develop in the lives of all of us. Illness, death in family, temporary unemployment or other mishap; or perhaps a chance to better our condition in life, take hold of this, that or the other opportunity—all these call for almost immediate use of ready cash. Perhaps there is a small savings bank account, but this is exhausted all too soon. To turn to friends is unsatisfactory and the great majority are loath to appeal to charity. What they need is not advice but money, and money only.

The legitimate need for money, left unsatisfied, makes young men thieves and young girls shameless.

It makes anarchists and "bums" out of honest working folk.

It makes beggars out of self-respecting people. It makes straight men sneaks.

One may not expect in these restless days of socialistic and "red" agitation that the multitude will stand by forever humbly and be thankful for inadequate facilities. If we are to fight Bolshevism, we must deprive its advocates of all just cause for complaint against our modern civilization and economic life. It has been in many cities a just complaint that adequate provisions have not been made for the necessary and legitimate borrowing needs of the working class. The result is that many are restless because they feel that their interests and their rights have not received due consideration.

Filling the Gap.

There is no reason for this great gap in the money loan service supplied to citizens of our country, except the inattention of the public to a great necessity. As Theodore Roosevelt once said, "This country will not be a better place for any of us to live, until it is a better place for all of us to live in."

As a moral risk and as a risk that offers obligations and security that are certain and realizable, the industrial borrower is on a par with commercial borrowers. This has been clearly seen for years by public spirited persons and organizations and many have been the attempts to introduce a small loans service to take care of the need of the average man.

Probably the best plan worked out for this loans service is that of some small loans societies which is based on extreme simplicity. Loans are offered in moderate amounts up to $300 to any man or woman who desires the use of money for worthy purposes, upon two simple requirements. The first of these is character—reputation for simple honesty; the second, a record for holding one's job. Given the borrower's application for a moderate sum to be used for a sound and thrifty purpose, the loan is made on a schedule of costs figured at a minimum consistent with stability in business and a fair interest return on the money invested. Moreover, monthly payment privileges are extended so liberal and easy that no man could have any difficulty in repaying any reasonable sum, the installments being spread over a period of eight to fifteen months if necessary to suit the convenience and usual income of the borrower. There are no fines for delinquency and interest is paid only on the actual balance due when each payment is made. No fees or charges are exacted and there is no charge at all unless a loan is made. Responsible guarantors are not required, but both husband and wife must join in the loan. Small loans on this plan are called industrial loans and are regulated by law in many of our most wide-awake states.

This plan has leaped into a marvelous popularity. The borrower has seen that a great opportunity is offered him for financial betterment. The merchant and storekeeper recognized that such an unusual service provides countless easy ways for an honest debtor to work off obligations which chafe his pride and sense of independence, and the banker and man of public spirit recognized in such loan systems a vital force working along the same broad and constructive lines they do for the solid betterment of all the people of the community.

Everyone Ought to Help.

Good citizens ought to do their bit to see that the number of states having a Uniform Small Loan law is increased and that little by little every one of the forty-eight states in the Union takes this only practical way to shut out the loan shark.

At this time seventeen states have adequate laws legalizing industrial loans and establishing a maximum rate of interest. The seventeen states include Maine, New Hampshire, Massachusetts, Connecticut, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Maryland, Virginia, Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Michigan, Iowa, Georgia, Arizona, Utah, Oregon. In every other state conditions are deplorable and the loan shark thrives either because there are no laws whatever regulating his operations, or because laws restrict the interest to a rate which makes it impossible to operate an industrial loan system at a fair profit.

In the category of states which have no laws whatever may be mentioned Vermont, West Virginia, Kentucky, Missouri, North Dakota, South Dakota, Montana, Washington, Nevada, New Mexico, Oklahoma, Mississippi, Arkansas and Alaska. The failure to enact any legislation whatever in these states in effect legalizes the exaction of the loan sharks because there is no penalty attached to the practice of usury. Loan sharks are at perfect liberty to charge any rate of interest which they may obtain for small loans made to needy borrowers. The result has been that in some instances leaders in these communities have established industrial loan organizations operating at a fair rate of interest in an effort to curb the loan shark. It is hoped by demonstrating the very great benefits which accrue from these organizations that adequate legislation may shortly be enacted in many of these states.

In a different category, indeed, are such states as New York, Colorado, Nebraska, California, Texas, Alabama, Minnesota and Wisconsin. In these states very strict laws fixing a legal rate of interest for loans of all types have been passed, and penalties of fine and imprisonment for their violation have been fixed. In all of these states the maximum rate of interest has been fixed so low that it is impossible for a well-conducted and legitimate small loans enterprise to operate without loss unless they are specially favored as to location and capital. Thus it is seen that the public indignation against the loan shark evil, in some instances, has merely deprived the general public of all facilities for loans in times of emergency. If the small loans legislation is to be effected at all it should be practical, as well as idealistic, so that it does not make impossible a cure in an effort to stamp out the disease.

Chambers of Commerce, Boards of Trade, The Russell Sage Foundation, division of remedial loans, and numerous other social welfare organizations in principal cities of the country have sponsored the Uniform Small Loan Law, considering it a duty to give it full recognition and to work with head and heart toward its adoption throughout this broad and beautiful country of ours with a view to extending to the eighty-six per cent the same efficient, thorough, satisfactory loan service now enjoyed by the favored fifteen.—United States Investor, July 8, 1922.

OPEN LETTER.

Please read the following letter from National Chairman Wood:

Gentlemen of the Association:

While we are barred from publishing the actual doings of your hard working Convention Committee, there is no reason why its activities should not be recognized in an expression of appreciation, for the time, worry, effort, personal expense and sacrifice, each one of them is so generously, unselfishly and unstintedly contributing for the benefit of the rest of us and the ultimate glory of our association.

True justice cannot be rendered to that committee, however, by acknowledging our debt. There is so much to be grateful for; so many things to appreciate, and so much to admire in the preparations for our entertainment, education and enjoyment, that mere words expressing appreciation, will not do full justice to the efforts made in our behalf, so I admonish all of you who are interested in increasing the prestige of our association, that we cannot discharge our duty by simply acknowledging the debt and our sense of obligation.

Many conventions have come and gone. All of them have been successful, surprising and enjoyable and each one an improvement on the previous one, but unless the world comes to an end before September ? or the coöperation of our membership is refused, the 1922 convention will be superior to anything that has gone before.

Nothing has been neglected and nothing has been forgotten or overlooked but the important thing for all of us to remember is, that the stage is set this time in New York City and that New York demands a crowd if it is to take notice.

So please bear in mind, all of you, that if we desire to recompense the committee for its efforts and sacrifices, discharge our duty to ourselves and assure nationwide recognition of our association, we must turn out in large numbers.

This is the year and New York the place for large accomplishments, so do not miss the opportunity. Sincerely yours,

W. G. Wood,
National Chairman.

MARYLAND.

The July meeting of the Maryland Industrial Lenders Association was held on the 11th at 8:30 p. m. in the Board Room of the Merchants and Manufacturers Association.

Members and associates present were Messrs. Samuel J. Masters, H. T. Mattingly, E. E. Hougham, R. L. Ryan, R. A. Long, H. C. Moore, H. H. Larsen and R. L. Smith.

Owing to this being vacation season, and several of our members being ill because of the intense heat, they were unable to be with us, however, we hope they were with us in mind, if not in body.

Our former chairman, Mr. Mattingly, gave a short but interesting talk on the complete success of the annual banquet held on June 6th. He also called the association's attention to the valuable assistance given us by our printer, Mr. Goldstein, of the 20th Century Printing Company, and recommended that the secretary send Mr. Goldstein a letter of thanks. Upon motion of Mr. Masters, seconded by Mr. Hougham, and unanimously carried by the members, the secretary was requested to send letters of appreciation and thanks to each speaker at the banquet for their able and valuable talks on the progress of the loan business in Maryland. Said letters to be recorded with the minutes of this meeting.

Upon motion the papers prepared by Messrs. Wood and Moore which were read at our May meeting were filed to be brought up for discussion at our September meeting.

On motion of Mr. Hougham, seconded by Mr. Masters, the Executive Committee was instructed to arrange for printing the speeches made at the banquet. The number of copies printed to be determined by that committee. In a general discussion in which all present took part, it seemed to be the consensus of opinion that other state associations might be interested in having copies of these speeches, and the secretary was instructed to contact Mr. Kehr in this connection, and if in his opinion a demand might be made for them a supply sufficient to cover the demand might be printed and sold to the State Association at cost.

Mr. Hougham, of the Executive Committee, gave our members a very interesting and impressive talk on the value of advertising in the Baltimore Magazine, "the official news organ of the Merchants and Manufacturers Association." This magazine advertises progressive business, civic growth and general prosperity of our city and state. Mr. Hougham made a motion that the association advertise as a body in this medium. This motion, seconded by Mr. Masters, and recommended that the association as a body contract for one-fourth page by the year and suggested that the Executive Committee draw up the "ad" and submit it for approval and discussion to the members at our next meeting. The chairman so ordered.

A general discussion was opened as to how many members contemplated attending the National Association Convention held in New York in September. Upon suggestion of Mr. Masters each manager was instructed to communicate with his headquarters asking that he be delegated to represent his office at the convention in New York in September. The expense to be covered by each individual office. It was hoped that thereby the Maryland Association would have a 100 per cent. representation at the convention.

It is hoped that each member will be present at our September meeting, as we have many things to discuss that will be of interest.

As there was no further business to transact, upon motion by Mr. Ryan, seconded by Mr. Masters, the meeting adjourned. H. C. Moore, Secretary.

PENNSYLVANIA.

The regular meeting of the Pennsylvania Association was held at the Eagles Mountain Home, Reading, Pa., at 2:30 p. m., on Thursday, July 13, 1922.

The meeting was called to order by the chairman, A. S. Ezekiel.

Eighteen members were present at the luncheon which preceded the business meeting.

REPORT OF OFFICERS.

The treasurer reported on hand, July 12, 1922, $1,021.12. On motion of Mr. Wick, seconded by Mr. Brown, the report was accepted.

The secretary reported a membership of 80—79 in good standing as of July 1, 1922; 60 are also members in good standing of the American Industrial Lenders Association as of August 1, 1922.

REPORT OF COMMITTEES.

The secretary read a letter from the Executive Committee chairman, Moss, reporting a meeting of his committee on June 9, 1922, at which the following matters were considered and referred to the association without recommendation.

1. The proposition of Mr. A. G. Zimmerman that a resolution be passed by the association effective in the cities where new offices are being opened, that the firm opening the office be allowed to have unlimited space in the newspapers for advertising purposes for the first three months instead of the maximum space as now permitted.

2. Resignation of the Hart Loan Society of Philadelphia.

The committee went on record as favoring the drafting and mailing of a letter by the secretary to all association members, requesting a special contribution toward defraying of expenses incident to the forthcoming annual convention of the American Industrial Lenders Association—such contributions to be turned over to Dr. C. G. Mueller, chairman of the Finance Committee of the Arrangement Committee.

UNFINISHED BUSINESS.

The chair announced that an Exchange Bureau for the purpose of avoiding doubling-up of loans and making undesirable credits, is being established in Philadelphia, Wilkes-Barre and Scranton.

NEW BUSINESS.

The resignation of the Hart Loan Society of Philadelphia, on motion of Mr. Wick, seconded by Mr. Zimmerman, was laid on the table.

On motion of Mr. Wick, seconded by Mr. Kehr, the Beneficial Loan Society, 69 S. Main Street, Wilkes-Barre, Pa., and the Beneficial Loan Society, 341 Pine Street, Williamsport, Pa., having complied with all requirements for membership and applications approved by two-thirds of the Executive Committee, were duly elected to membership.

The secretary read a letter from Mr. W. P. Woll, chairman of the National Finance Committee, addressed to the National Secretary and referred by him to the secretary, with reference to membership and dues in the National Body, setting forth two propositions:

1. To have the rate of dues in the American Association made $1.00 per thousand, average invested capital for the preceding year with no minimum but a maximum of $200.

2. To have the rate of dues $.75 per thousand of invested capital for the preceding year with neither a maximum nor a minimum.

After a general discussion, it was moved by Mr. Kehr and seconded by Mr. Brown, that it is the sense of this organization that the delegates to the National Convention be authorized to vote for the rate of dues in the American Association in accordance with the second proposal in Mr. Woll's letter, which is $.75 per thousand of invested capital for the preceding year with neither a maximum nor a minimum. Carried unanimously.

On motion of Mr. Kehr, seconded by Mr. Wick, the question of extending the privilege to a member opening a new office to have ultimated space in the newspapers for the first three months instead of the maximum space now permitted by the association, was put to a vote. The motion was lost.

The secretary read a letter from Mr. George H. Myers, of Williamsport, stating that he had a personal interview with Mr. John G. Reading, a member of the Re-Codification Committee of the State Banking Laws, and had been assured that no changes were recommended for the Small Loan Business, and to the best of his knowledge, the present act is satisfactory to the bankers in general. He was also advised that we should be on the lookout for adverse legislation at the next session.

A letter from George W. Wagner, of Reading, was read, expressing regrets of his inability to attend the dinner as guest of the association. The chairman also announced that a letter of regrets had been received from Mr. Orth of the Banking Department.

The chairman announced that the State Banking Department advised having 151 Licensed Lenders in the Department as of June 1, 1922.

The chairman called the attention of those present to the need of funds for defraying of expenses at the National Convention, and urged personal contributions by the members to the Convention Fund, sending such contributions to C. G. Mueller, chairman of the Finance Committee.

On motion of Mr. Brown, seconded by Mr. Wick, a vote of thanks was tendered the committee from the Reading Group of Lenders, for the delightful place selected for the meeting and the splendid entertainment provided.

On motion of Mr. Wick, seconded by Mr. Davis, the meeting adjourned at 5 p. m., there appearing no further business to transact.

At 6 o'clock dinner was served at the Eagles Mountain Home, to the members and their wives, friends and guests.

Mayor John K. Stauffer, of Reading, and State Senator James E. Norton, also of Reading, were the guests of the association at dinner and gave short addresses which were interesting and enjoyed by all.

E. F. MOORE, Asst. Sec.

READY FOR PROMOTION.

There's going to be a vacancy above you later on
Some day you'll find the foreman or the superintendent gone,
And are you growing big enough, when this shall be the case,
To quit the post you're holding now and step into his place?

You do the work you have to do with ease from day to day,
But are you getting ready to deserve the larger pay?
If there should come a vacancy with bigger tasks to do,
Could you step in and fill the place if it were offered you?

To-morrow's not so far away, nor is the goal you seek;
To-day you should be training for the work you'll do next week,
The bigger job is just ahead, each day new changes bring—
Suppose that post were vacant now, could you take charge of things?

It's not enough to know enough to hold your place to-day,
It's not enough to do enough to earn your weekly pay;
Some day there'll be a vacancy with grater tasks to do—
Will you be ready for the place when it shall fall to you?

GOVERNOR ADDRESSES MONEY LENDERS' BODY.

Praises Members for Strides in Profession.

Commenting on the great changes brought about in the money-lending business in recent years, prominent speakers at the banquet of the Money-Lenders' Association held last night at the Emerson referred to the great improvement in the conduct of their institutions.

Governor Ritchie complimented the members on their determination to comply with the law by which they are governed.

President Howard Byrant of the Second Branch of the City Council, who made the principal address, told of the remarkable evolution in the conduct of affairs. He was counsel to the lenders 25 years ago and is to-day the counsel to the association.

Other speakers were President William I. Norris of the Senate and A. S. Goldsborough, general manager of the M. & M. Association. One hundred and twenty-five attended the dinner and among the guests were a number of bankers and business men. W. P. Mattingly is president of the Money Lenders' Association.—Baltimore American.

THE DEVELOPMENT OF THE INDUSTRIAL LOAN BUSINESS.

The address with the above title by Hon. Arthur R. Robinson, Judge of Marion County Superior Court, Indianapolis, Ind., published in our last issue has been reprinted in booklet form by the Indiana Association and a limited number of copies are available and will be sent any where by the National Secretary upon application. Here's a chance to do some good educational work.

NO STAMPS REQUIRED.

This office is in receipt of a letter from the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, enclosing copy of your letter inquiring whether it is necessary to affix documentary stamps to chattel mortgages, a copy of which you enclosed.

You are advised that the Bureau holds that the mortgage form submitted is not subject to the stamp tax.

Respectfully,
F. C. FERGUSON, Collector,

250 NECESSARY.

To get the reduced railroad fare to the National Convention, New York, September 20th to 23d, we must have 250 people in attendance from outside New York.

It will encourage the committee in charge if upon receipt of a communication from the general chairman, E. P. East, soon to be released if you will respond to the questionnaire presented at once.

ATTENTION!

What important subjects would you like discussed at the National Convention and who do you recommend to handle them?

The committee in charge of arranging the program is anxious to please and instruct those who are planning to attend the convention but it needs your help.

Any suggestions will be welcome if received by the National Secretary before September 1st.

COMMITTEES BUSY.

At the time this will be published less than a month will remain before the big National Convention at Hotel Pennsylvania, New York, September 20 to 23. From reports thus far received indications are, that this convention will break all records for attendance, and that those who plan to attend will not be disappointed with the entertainment and educational features provided.

The attendance trophy won by the Illinois Association last year will be hotly contested this year, because it seems to be anybody's race although it would be singular if one of the eastern states would not capture the trophy this year. But to just which eastern state the honor will go, will be answered by Massachusetts, Rhode Island, Connecticut, New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Maryland, West Virginia, Virginia and Georgia.

Dr. C. G. Mueller, chairman of the Finance Committee, has been much encouraged by the responses which he has received from his appeals for money with which to carry out the elaborate program, which the committees are now busy arranging. Judging from the Doctor's letter, which went out during the month, it appears that he is willing to accept more cash from eastern members who will be the hosts of the convention this year.

Fred M. Jackson, chairman of the Entertainment Committee, promises a real treat in the show he expects to arrange with high-grade New York professional talent.

The Ackerman Publicity Service will have charge of letting the world know that we are having a convention in New York, and will see to it that the Press throughout the country takes some notice of this important gathering, and important things that will be said and done. Mr. Ackerman by the way, will also give a talk on Publicity as related to our business, which is sure to be of much educational value.

George Hodson has charge of the sightseeing, and will be responsible for many of the pleasing features of the convention. Some time ago he suggested in a communication to the NEWS, some of the things worth while seeing in a great city. These and others are on his schedule, which will start soon after the arrival of the delegates at headquarters, and will take up all the spare moments the ladies have during the time the business meetings of the convention are in session.

R. M. Rutherford is taking care of all the details incident to hotel and railroad reservations. If you have not heard from him about this you may expect to do so before very long.

C. H. Watts is arranging for the speakers which may include an address of welcome from Mayor Hylan, a representative from the big businessmen's organization, John M. Glenn, director of the Russell Sage Foundation and other equally notable persons.

A. S. Ezekiel is arranging for the souvenir badges, and making preparations for the proper registration of all delegates who attend.

V. D. Moss assisted by the members of his committee, will be on hand to receive the guests as they come in and see to it that they are made acquainted with all persons in attendance.

The National Secretary is at work arranging the business program which will be filled with a discussion of the important problems of every day business, and some other subjects somewhat foreign to our business but which have an important bearing upon it.

The banquet is to be the big event that has characterized previous occasions. George Hodson and A. S. Ezekiel are in charge.

Mrs. R. M. Rutherford and Mrs. George Hodson will have charge of the Ladies' Reception Committee, and promise to make all the ladies who attend comfortable and happy.

Do you know that a survey of the Small Loan Business is now being made and the person who has been selected for this important work is Dr. Louis N. Robinson, who will be at the convention and tell you what he has learned up to date?

Miss Caro D. Coombs, who has long been connected with the Division of Remedial Loans of the Russell Sage Foundation, is to talk on Credit Unions. There is also to be an open discussion to members only, on the subject "Financing Industrial Loan Offices."

Col. Clarence Hodson, president of the Beneficial Loan Society, upon whom Washington College, Maryland, recently conferred the honorary degree of Doctor of Laws, will deliver the address of welcome in behalf of the Eastern State Associations.

"Financing Industrial Loans during the Strike Period," is to be one of the important subjects discussed at the convention. And there is to be a whole afternoon session given over to the managers who attend, at which any subject which they may desire to have discussed will receive attention.

The subject of dues which has had consideration by most State Associations during the year, will come up for final disposition at the convention. Other constitutional questions may also come up if submitted to the National Secretary at once.

THANKS.

We are very much obliged to those members who responded so promptly with checks for their dues in the national body for the last half of this year. If other members would follow this example, much time and money could be saved for both the state and national associations. Little time remains before the records of the National Secretary must be made up for the National Convention. Will you be in good standing or delinquent? Your check is the answer.

CONVENTION FINANCES.

DEAR FELLOW MEMBER:

The Great Passion of the human mind is to succeed, to get on in the world, to win the things worth while, and to write one's name imperishably upon the bronze tablets of history. It is a laudable ambition, but for its accomplishment are required certain qualities of mind and heart, without which the best efforts will leave no more impression upon the world than a pebble cast into the sea or words written upon the sand.

After the Battle of Thermopylæ, the Amphictyonic council erected two simple columns on the summit of the mountain near the famous Pass. One of them bore the inscription, "Traveller, go tell at Sparta that we repose here in obedience to her sacred laws." The other legend read, "Here three hundred Greeks of Sparta fought against four thousand Persians." No need to tell the result of that battle; it was engraved upon the history of the world. No need to name the three hundred Spartans who fell in defense of their native land; that list of heroes could be repeated by every school child in Sparta.

The answer may be found in the fact that the Persian hordes were driven to the combat with the lash, while the Spartan soldiers struggled with one another for the honor of defending the Pass, and of giving their best, their all, for the defense of their altars and firesides.

Here and now is the summons containing the warning that today is your opportunity of making voluntary, personal contribution to the National Convention Fund of the members of the Eastern State Associations who are to act as hosts to all members of both State and National organizations and their guests, friends, employees and associates. It may be you have already made your contribution, aside from that of the State Association, if so you are commended for the fine spirit which inspired your prompt response.

If you are a Lender enjoying the privileges conferred and safeguards surounding your business occasioned through united association effort you will want to make a personal contribution of some modest amount, thereby feeling justly proud in the part you will take in making the next National Association Convention, to be held in New York in September, another stepping stone in the development and progress of Industrial Lending. Many of the Lenders most active in perfecting the program have contributed $25.00 per office besides personal services, railroad fare, etc. You will want to do your part also. Remit your contribution today by check drawn to my order.

Give to the world the best you have, and the best will come back to you.

Yours very truly,
CHARLES G. MUELLER,
Chairman Finance Committee.

GEORGIA

Here is a Report on the Attempt to Amend the Scientific 3 1-2 per cent. Rate of the Uniform Small Loan Law in Georgia.

By JOSEPH J. GUENTHER and HENRY F. WOODS.

It is the general experience that the amending or repealing of laws is brought about by a conviction of their proven ineffectiveness. The attempt in the present session of the Georgia Legislature to amend the small loan licensing law now operative in that state is, however, an exception to that general rule. The attempt is induced by the fact that the law has operated only too well to bring about the reform it sought—the elimination of the loan shark evil. The attack on the law is a refutation of the old copybook aphorism that "virtue is its own reward."

While happily there is good reason to believe that the attack on the law will fail—indeed, it has met decided checks in its initial stages—it is significant of the die-hard spirit of the extortionate money lender and of his tenacity of purpose in seeking to regain lost ground by making the conditions of operation impossible to the legitimate money lender.

It was about two years ago—August 20, 1920, to be exact—that the act licensing and regulating the business of making small loans at the scientific rate of 3½ per cent. interest per month was approved and became a law in Georgia. Since that time it has worked well, too well, in fact, and while it has earned the favor of economists, sociologists and those interested in social service, it has earned the hostility of those whose illegal exactions it makes impossible as long as it remains on the statute books of Georgia.

Accordingly on last July 5 House Bill No. 633 was introduced in the lower House of the Georgia Legislature by Representatives John R. Williams of Miller County, and D. F. Walker of Baker County.

The bill was entitled:

> "An act to amend an act approved August 17, 1920, entitled 'An act to license and regulate the business of making loans in sums of $300 or less, secured or unsecured, at a greater rate of interest than eight (8) per centum per annum, prescribing the rate, interest and charge therefor, and penalties for the violation thereof, regulating the assignment of wages or salaries, earned or to be earned, when taken as security for such loans and for other purposes,' by striking the words and figures 'three and one-half (3½) from lines five and six of Section 13 of said Act, and substituting in lieu of such stricken words and figures the words and figures 'two and one-half (2½)' and for other purposes."

The enacting clause of the bill fully explains its intent and purpose, and repitition of the text of the bill itself is not necessary to add to its clarity.

This bill on its first reading was referred to Judiciary No. 2 Committee, which at a meeting on July 18 appointed a sub-committee of three of its members to take the bill under advisement and report back its recommendations at the meeting of the full committee one week later.

At the meeting of Judiciary No. 2 Committee on July 25 the sub-committee submitted its report, which came in the nature of a decided surprise both to the members of the full committee and to those who were present to speak in opposition to the bill at a hearing to be granted by the committee. The report of the sub-committee was adverse to Bill No. 633, but recommended in its stead a bill repealing in toto the present law licensing and regulating the business of making small loans.

Representatives of the public were present at this meeting and were prepared to speak against the bill at a public hearing. Joseph J. Genthner addressed the committee at length and was questioned exhaustively by members of the committee. The meeting lasted far beyond the length of the usual public hearing and it was apparent that the arguments against the bill had been convincing with a majority of the committee members. This was borne out when after the executive meeting of the committee that same night it was announced that the committee had voted an unfavorable report on House Bill No. 633.

Accordingly, on the following day the chairman of the Judiciary No. 2 Committee reported to the House that the committee recommended that House Bill No. 633 do not pass. It was supposed that this effectively disposed of the bill for this session, as the day of adjournment for the Legislature is not far distant and there is an enormous amount of business yet to be transacted, including some major legislation around which the greater interest of the legislators is centering.

But two days later Representative Thompson, of Goweta County, a member of Judiciary No. 2 Committee and the chairman of the sub-committee appointed to study and report on House Bill No. 633, moved for unanimous consent to recommit the bill to Judiciary No. 2 Committee. The motion was made shortly before adjournment for the day when a great many of the members were absent preparing for a week-end journey of the Legislature to Savannah to inspect the port facilities there. Without a great deal of interest in the bill on the part of those present and without any special knowledge of what it was all about on the part of most of them, the motion carried and the bill was ordered recommitted.

Accordingly, the bill was sent back to the Judiciary Committee and at first it appeared that it would not again come up for consideration. The impression which had been made on the members of the committee by the appeals of the representatives of the public, and by other friends of the existing law were very impressive. But the interests behind the repeal of the 3½ per cent. rate, although apparently realizing that they were finally to be defeated, used every effort to obtain a favorable report on the bill. In this they were successful after a long and argumentative session of the Judiciary Committee on the night of August 3rd. The bill was reported favorably and is now on the calendar for consideration by the House of Representatives.

There is an extremely small likelihood that the measure will reach the House for a vote this session. It is practically at the bottom of an overcrowded legislative calendar and on this calendar there remains for consideration some legislation of state-wide importance upon which public attention is centered. The only manner in which the bill could possibly be brought into the House for debate and a vote would be to advance it on the calendar and in order to do this, it would be necessary to first obtain the consent of the legislators. Considering the attitude of representatives in the House toward the bill and the state of public opinion in regard to other legislation which now has their attention, it is not believed that this course can be followed. Should the bill pass in the House of Representatives, it must then go to the Senate where the representatives of the public welfare organizations are informed on the highest authority that it will undoubtedly be killed.

The genesis of this measure and its hardihood is of course the result of an underground campaign by well-financed influences who see in the manipulation of this legislation a chance for gain.

The fight for the repeal of the 3½ per cent. rate cannot be successful at this session of the Legislature. The major effect of the consideration of the bill can only be to lay the foundation for a further attack on it at the next session. Public sentiment in the state thoroughly favors the retention of the present law. Should the bill by any chance progress to the point where it is considered on the floor of the House, the members of the House and the general public will not lack information regarding the exact influence behind the effort at repeal and the real purposes for their activity.

Retention of the present law with the 3½ per cent. scientific rate has been urged in the resolutions adopted by the Y. M. C. A., the Kiwanis Club and the Baptists Preachers' Association of Atlanta. Other organizations are prepared to endorse the existing law and to actively campaign for its maintenance in the event that the attack on it is brought to the floor of the House. In the upper branch of the Legislature there is an almost unified general sentiment against any attack on the present law. And very powerful influences actuated by a desire to retain unimpaired the social effect of this law are prepared to use every legitimate and ethical means to prevent its nullification by an amendment that would reduce the rate to a point where the conduct of organized and regulated loans organizations would be made impossible.

MARYLAND.

"Baltimore," the monthly publication of the Merchants and Manufacturers Association, in its August issue under the caption of "Industrial Lenders Association Has Killed the 'Loan Shark' So That It Will Never Rise Again in Maryland," gives a complete account of the Annual Meeting of the Maryland Association held June 6 at the Emerson Hotel. As we covered this meeting fully in our July issue, it will not be again repeated. It must be a source of great satisfaction to those who had any part in arranging this annual meeting which turned out to be a great success, when it is noted that the leading business-men's organization of Baltimore pays such a high compliment to this occasion in its official organ.

WAYS TO LOCATE A SKIP.

In with this issue, we are sending to each member of the national body, a copy of the booklet, "Ways to Locate a Skip." This booklet was prepared by men who have had long experience in the industrial loan business and includes perhaps every conceivable means by which skips may be located. The booklet will be sent to any non-member on receipt of 10 cents in postage.

PENNSYLVANIA.

In an opinion dated July 13, 1922, to G. H. Orth, chief, Bureau of Private Banks, Department of Banking, Harrisburg, Pa., Colonel Fred Taylor Pusey, Deputy Attorney General, draws some very important conclusions with respect to the privileges of licensees under the Small Loan Act, as well as those who are authorized to engage in the investment business under the Act of May 5, 1921. Colonel Pusey says:

"In reply to your communication of June 16th referring to the practices and methods of doing business indulged in by several so-called "Loan Companies" incorporated under the provisions of the Act of June 17, 1915, P. L. 1012, as amended by the Act of June 4, 1919, P. L. 375, operating under the supervision of your department, I beg to advise you seriatim as follows:

"First. (a) As to the.......Company of.........,—I am of the opinion that the method adopted by this Company in making loans in connection with the issuance by the Company of so-called 'Class C. Investment Certificates' is not within the authorization of the provisions of the Small-Loans Act of June 17, 1915, as amended by the Act of June 4, 1919, above referred to.

"On reading the collateral note submitted, and which appears to be used in connection with Class C Certificates, it is apparent that the payments made on the certificate may or may not be used for the payment of the loan. The Company may demand additional collateral and a note may be paid from that collateral and not from the Class C Certificate, or the note may be paid independently of the collateral.

"The note provides that:

> 'It is understood and agreed, however, that the Company shall not be compelled to resort first to the collateral hypothecated for the security of the obligation, but may at its election require such obligation to be paid by any maker or makers hereof * * * * * * * * * and upon the payment of this obligation by the said maker or any of them, this note, together with the collateral aforesaid shall be transferred to said makers without recourse against the Company.'

"The possibility of the note being paid otherwise than through the maturity of the certificate and the certificate thus remaining as a certificate in the hands of the depositor after the payment of the note brings the certificate within the law relating to 'deposits.' It can never be known in any case whether the payments under the certificate will or will not be applied to the loan, and as they may turn out to be nothing more than 'deposits,' they must be treated as such, and therefore, such contracts come rather within the provisions of the Act of May 5, 1921, P. L. 374, pertaining to the business of investments by payments of instalments for accumulation,—and are not governed solely by the 'Small-Loans' Act above referred to.

> 'Any person, persons, copartnership, association or corporation who shall obtain a license in accordance with the provisions of Section one of this act, shall be entitled to loan money in sums of three hundred ($300) dollars or less, either with or without security to individuals pressed by lack of funds to meet immediate necessities, at his, their, or its place of business, for which said license is issued, and to charge the borrowers thereof, for its use or loan, interest at a rate not to exceed three and one-half (3½) per centum per month.'

"The so-called 'C' certificates according to your analysis do not exact interest at a rate to exceed three and one-half (3½) per centum per month, even though it may seem to the borrower, without considerable knowledge of mathematics, that the interest rate he is paying is less than the rate he actually pays.

"(c) It would appear, however, that the 'fine' or 'charge' of ten per centum for default in prompt payment of the instalments required by the certificate is in direct contravention of the provisions of Section 2 of the Act, which further provides as follows:

> 'No fees, fines or other charges, either in addition to or as a part of the above specified interest, shall ever be charged or collected under any pretext whatsoever.'

"The certificate above referred to stipulates that:

> 'In the event that the weekly instalments are not paid promptly each week on the day above named five cents will be charged for default in the payment of each instalment as said instalment originally becomes due upon each Fifty Dollars ($50) or part thereof represented by this Certificate, as stipulated compensation to the Company for services performed and expenses incurred at the request of the registered owner hereof by reason of some default.'

"While the total interest rate including the fine or charge or fee above specified may not in the aggregate exceed the rate of three and one-half (3½) per centum per month, the Act specifically declares and enjoins that no such 'fines, fees or other charges, either in addition to, or as a part of the above specified interest shall be charged or collected under any pretext whatsoever.' In other words, the Statute permits the Loan Company to exact an interest rate which is definitely fixed and distinct and which must not exceed three and one-half (3½) per centum per month, and this charge is intended to include all other fees, charges or fines in connection therewith. The Legislature evidently regarded the practice of adding other items of charge, in addition to the specified interest charges, under one pretext or another, as a scheme which would lead to abuse, overreaching or imposition upon needy borrowers for whose protection and interest the Act of Assembly was enacted.

"(d) Your statement that reports of examinations of this Company by your Department show that in many instances interest in excess of the legal limit of three and one-half (3½) per centum a month, particularly when loans are paid off in a shorter period than called for by the contract,—indicates a direct violation of the Act of Assembly and should not be permitted by your department. The specific cases of such overcharges where interest collected has amounted to as high as three hundred and forty-one (341) per centum a year, are illustrations of illegal and unconscionable practices which should not be tolerated, and in my opinion would justify the institution of Quo Warranto proceedings to oust the Company of its charter privileges, if such practices are knowingly and wilfully persisted in after due notice from your department.

"(e) The 'Class B Investment Certificate' issued by the ....Company, known as a 'full-paid certificate' bearing five per cent. interest, I understand is issued upon the completion of the payment of regular instalments used in a plan of accumulation for investment and is not issued for the purpose contemplated by the Small-Loans Act of 1915, as amended by the Act of 1919, supra, of making loans 'to individuals pressed by lack of funds to meet immediate necessities.' The issuance of such certificates, therefore, in my opinion, is not within the scope of authority extended to the.........Company under its charter and license as a Company engaged in the business of making small loans, under the provisions of the Act of 1915, as amended by the Act of 1919, supra, but such certificates are rather certificates of investment or deposit authorized under the provisions of the Act approved May 5, 1921, P. L. 374, providing for the licensing and regulation of companies engaged in the business of receiving payments accumulated for investment, which in Section 2 thereof provides as follows:

> 'After the first day of October, one thousand nine hundred and twenty-one, no corporation or person, shall, whether or not operating under a declaration of trust, or other agreement engage or continue, either directly or indirectly, in the business, within this Commonwealth, of receiving single payments, regular instalment payments, or contributions to be held or used in any plan of accumulation or investment, or of issuing, negotiating, offering for sale or selling any contract on the partial payment plan, or of assuming fixed obligations, or issuing, in connection therewith, a contract based upon payments being made upon instalments or single payment, under which all or part of the total amount received is to be repaid at some future time, either with or without profit, unless such corporation or person is licensed to transact such business within this Commonwealth by the commissioner in the manner hereinafter provided.'

and the Company so engaging in the business of receiving money for investment under this plan of operation is required to be separately licensed by the Commissioner of Banking, and in other respects to comply with the Act of May 5, 1921, P. L. 374, as aforesaid.

"Second: With respect to the so-called 'Thrift Notes' or 'Thrift Certificates' or by whatever name they may now or hereafter be designated, issued by the ....Corporation, or the......... Corporation, or the.........Company, or the..............Corporation, or the ....Corporation, similar to the certificate of the...........Corporation submitted to me with your communication of June 16th, which you state is sold on the instalment basis calling for regular instalment payments at stated intervals, used in a plan of accumulation until the principal amount of the certificate has been reached,—I am of the opinion that these so-called notes or certificates sold or issued in the manner aforesaid, merely for the purpose of investment by accumulation and not for the specific purpose of making loans thereon, are not within the provisions of the Small-Loans Act of 1915, as amended by the Act of 1919, supra, but are subject to the regulations and provisions of the investment business act of May 5, 1921, supra.

"Third: As to the so-called 'Premium Certificate' issued by the '........... Companies of Chester and Pottsville' where a small loan is made and repaid by instalments, with no permanent investment feature in connection with the payments received and the issuance of the certificate,—my opinion is that this method is not within the provisions of the Small-Loans Act of 1915, as amended by the Act of 1919, supra, if the said certificates are similar to the so-called 'Class C Certificates' of the........... Company. If the Small-Loan feature is or may be eliminated and the instalment payments on the certificate used merely for the purpose of an accumulation for investment in the hands of the Company or association, then the business so conducted comes under the provisions of the investment business act of May 5, 1921, supra, and should be licensed and supervised accordingly.

"Fourth: The so-called '........... Savings Bonds' of the.........Society, which are issued as five per cent. (5%) coupon bonds and may be purchased outright or on the instalment plan of accumulation for investment, are in my opinion clearly within the provisions of the Act of May 5, 1921, supra, and should be licensed and supervised accordingly.

"Fifth: With regard to the opinion of Honorable Bernard J. Myers, Deputy Attorney General, to your Department, in his letter of June 19, 1921, holding that the..............Company ,incorporated and licensed under the Small-Loans Act of 1915, as amended by the Act of 1919, may not under its charter and license issue so-called 'Thrift Certificates' which are mere evidences of deposit with the Company for investment, and not in connection with any small loan,—I beg to advise you that I concur in the opinion of Mr. Myers and in this connection I would state that it makes no material difference whether the contract so delivered is called a 'Thrift Certificate' or 'Note' or 'Bond,' or any other similar name or designation, if its effect and purpose is to engage in a savings deposit or investment business, and not primarily the granting of small loans to needy borrowers, it does not come within the authorization of the Small-Loans Act of 1915, as amended by the Act of 1919, supra, and such practices are, therefore, illegal and void.

"Since Mr. Myers' opinion the Investment Business Act of 1921, supra, has been enacted authorizing the incorporation and licensing of instalment investment companies, so that companies duly chartered and licensed for the purposes therein authorized, may now issue these investment certificates, notes or bonds in the manner authorized, but not otherwise."

MASSACHUSETTS.

Among the many interesting subjects included in the Annual Report of the Supervisor of Loan Agencies for the year ending December 31, 1921, we quote the following:

"There was introduced into the Legislature a bill to amend the Small-Loans Law.

"The bill provided for three amendments; an increase in the rate of interest for small loans from 3 to 3½ per cent.; that the borrower, in case of chattel mortgages, should pay the recording fee; that an assignment of wages need not necessarily be accepted by an employer, but that the delivery of a copy of the assignment, or order, should meet the legal requirements.

"These changes were suggested for the following reasons:

"In 1908 the loan shark evil throughout the country had grown to such proportions, and had become such a notorious evil, that the Russell Sage Foundation of New York decided to make a general investigation to ascertain how that evil could be lessened and the loan shark business brought under proper control. It recognized, as its reports show, that there was a vast amount of necessitous borrowing, and that there was vital need for the making of small loans. The first thought of the Foundation was, what rate of interest could be established to attract capital which would conduct the business along legitimate lines.

"The Foundation's representatives in the investigation started with the thought that 2 per cent. per month would be sufficient. As the investigation proceeded the rate rose to 2½ per cent., and in 1916 they had reached the conclusion that 3 per cent. per month was proper. Arthur H. Ham, representing the Foundation, came before our Legislature in 1916, and presented his belief that 3 per cent. per month was sufficient, but the Foundation had not finished its investigation. A year later it decided that the proper rate was 3½ per cent., and it declared that to be the "scientific rate," based upon what it termed a scientific investigation of the subject-matter.

"Prior to 1920 the rate for recording chattel mortgages was 75 cents. In some instances one record is made, in others two in accordance with the legal provisions. In 1920 the Legislature authorized town and city clerks to raise the rate of recording from 75 cents to $2, which placed such an extra expense upon the licensed money lenders that they absolutely refused to make the small loans which they had been accustomed to make. For instance, a necessitous borrower desired to borrow $50.00. The interest on that per month under the existing rate would be $1.50, the expense of recording it once would be $2; if it were necessary to record it twice, the expense would be $4; therefore, in either event it would be a losing proposition.

"If a borrower desired $100 for a month, the interest would be $3, and if the mortgage had to be recorded once, it would take two-thirds of the interest to meet the requirement; therefore, the lender was reducing his rate to 1 per cent. per month. If it were a case where the mortgage had to be recorded twice, the loan would not be made as it would be a losing venture.

"The only way under the circumstances by which a really needy applicant could be accommodated by the licensed money lender would be to have the applicant borrow a larger amount than he really needed, or to have a smaller amount extend over several months instead of one, in order that the lender might be reimbursed for the extra expense thus created. It is obvious that this worked a hardship upon the borrower, and it was thought better for his interest, and for all concerned, that he, as in the case of other classes of mortgage, pay the cost of recording, and that expense could thus be taken care of and he not be deprived of an opportunity to effect a loan.

"In the making of assignment of wages it is now necessary that the assignment be accepted in writing by the employer. There are many large concerns which have an inflexible rule that no assignments will be accepted; therefore, all their employees are debarred from making an assignment of wages for a necessitous loan however urgent a case may be. The bill provided that the mere notification to an employer, instead of the assignment being accepted in writing, would be sufficient. Many small concerns whose employees have been borrowers have not objected giving their consent in writing, but the attitude of the large concerns prevented their employees from borrowing from a licensed money lender to meet necessitous demands which might be created through sickness, accident, or other causes.

"The Committee on Legal Affairs, before which the bill was heard, reported 'leave to withdraw.'"

Reference is also made to the organization of the Massachusetts Association in these words:

"In the summer of 1921, as the result of careful consideration of the advisability of so doing, there was formed the Massachusetts Industrial Licensed Lenders Association. The announced principal objects of the association are to approve the small loans business; to advocate legislation, having the approval of this association, uniform in character and providing for State license and bond, a supervision and examination by State officials; to assist in the education of the public to the service rendered by its members; to obey the uniform loan laws and police the business; to regulate public advertisements and circulars so that they shall be truthful and straightforward; to establish uniformity in forms, books, and accounts satisfactory to the licensing officials; to maintain good relations with all State officials and their examiners, and deal with them frankly in a spirit of co-operation; to assist and co-operate with all members of this association and affiliated State associations in respect to accurate credit information, and assist in the collection of accounts, dealing with them always in a spirit of fraternity and helpfulness.

"At the meeting when the organization was effected there were represented twenty-five industrial loan agencies of the State. Preceding the business meeting and following the banquet, those present were addressed by the supervisor of Loan Agencies, H. G. DeWeese, field secretary of the American Industrial Licensed Lenders Association, William E. Pool of this city, and Edgar P. East of New York. At the business session an executive committee was elected as follows: W. E. Pool, Boston, chairman; Daniel J. Wholey, Lowell, vice-chairman; H. J. Desormaux, New Bedford, secretary; George A. Ingalls, Boston, treasurer; Michael R. Connelly, Lynn; Warren J. Baldwin, Boston, and Edgar P. East, New York. At a meeting of the directors held December 15, 1921, the following resolution was passed by way of preparation for another effort to have enacted in this Commonwealth a 3½ per cent. law as advocated in the Uniform Loan Law, the sponsor of which is the Russell Sage Foundation:

"Whereas, The Massachusetts Industrial Lenders Association feels that it is desirable to have introduced at the 1922 session of the Massachusetts Legislature an amendment to the present Small-Loan Law in order to make it more consistent with the Uniform Small-Loan Laws now in operation in a number of states; Therefore be it

"Resolved, That a committee, consisting of W. E. Pool, E. P. East and H. J. Desormaux be appointed to confer with representatives of the Russell Sage Foundation and the officials of the American Industrial Lenders Association, and solicit their assistance and support of the proposed amendment; be it further

"Resolved, That the (above-named committee be and is hereby authorized and empowered to act for the Massachusetts Association in connection with the amendment and take the necessary steps to further its passage; be it further

"Resolved, That as January 10th is the last day on which bills may be introduced in the Massachusetts General Assembly, that the secretary of the Massachusetts Association is hereby directed to immediately address letters containing copies of the above resolutions to the acting director of the Division of Remedial Loans of the Russell Sage Foundation, and to the general secretary of the American Industrial Lenders Association."

Members who are not on the mailing list should write the Supervisor of Loan Agencies, Department of Banking and Insurance, Room 102, State House, Boston, Mass., for copy of this report for their edification.

ILLINOIS.

The Fifth Annual Meeting of the Illinois Association Was Held July 28, 1922, at the Morrison Hotel, Chicago.

Chairman Snite called the meeting to order at 3:15 P. M.

Twelve members were present when the meeting was called to order; eighteen just before adjournment and 20 after close of meeting. Mr. Heywood and Mr. Rose apparently using double daylight saving time.

REPORT OF REGULAR COMMITTEES.

Treasurer J. D. Lynch reported $1,134.77 in the Treasury with all bills presented to date paid.

W. P. Woll—Chairman
F. Tyson, 1st Vice Chairman
L. C. Harbison—2nd Vice Chairman.
L. T. Baker, Secretary
J. D. Lynch, Treasurer.

EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE.

Albert P. Snite
Arthur Weinschenk
Chas. Turgrimson
John Breen

The Nominating Committee stipulated that Mr. Harbison be authorized to represent our Association at all National Council meetings.

On motion of Mr. Weinschenk and duly seconded the nominations were closed, one ballot was cast and the nominees were elected unanimously.

Mr. Woll arose and in his usual, impressive manner stated that while he felt honored, it was his duty to decline the nomination, on account of so much of his time being devoted to National Association affairs and legislative matters in connection with his own organization, which takes him out of town for extended periods and that he may be out of the city during one of our Association meetings. Mr. Woll was unable to change the minds of the members and gracefully accepted.

Our newly-elected president was escorted to the chair amid much applause. Mr. Woll thanked the members for the honor bestowed upon him and pledged his best efforts to guide the Association craft through calms and storms to a harbor of safety and in order to do this successfully, urged the coöperation of all the members.

At this time, a press representative called for an interview. Mr. Woll was in the midst of his speech and assigned Mr. Henderson to the matter. He returned and requested a photo of the president that he might give to the newspaper man.

After this interruption, Mr. Woll continued and strongly urged a big attendance at the National Convention from Illinois and suggested that as many as possible from Illinois make the trip together and get acquainted. Each member present was asked whether or not he would attend; 12 out of the 18 present answered in the affirmative—3 uncertain and the remaining 3 in the negative. This is an indication of a good representation from Illinois.

Mr. Woll then hinted of something big in connection with the Industrial Loan Business, now taking place, but of which he was not at liberty to explain at this time. He made it emphatic that this something is the biggest thing yet and means much to the business, both large and small interests. He further stated that there is a possibility of the detail of this stupendous undertaking being discussed at the National Convention.

Mr. Henderson suggested and discussed at some length that the title of Chairman be changed to President. He related that this had been done in Indiana at their last association meeting and that many good reasons in favor of the change were presented. Mr. Weinschenk also expressed himself in favor of President and explained that Chairman is the usual title for heads of committees.

It was then moved and seconded that the Association Secretary be authorized to notify all members that at our next regular quarterly meeting, the matter of changing the constitution and by-laws so as to enable the presiding officer's title to be changed from Chairman to that of President and making the title applicable also to the Vice-Chairman, would be considered and voted upon for final disposition.

Mr. Turgrimson moved and it was unanimously approved that a letter of appreciation be drafted by the secretary and presented to our esteemed ex-Chairman, Mr. Albert P. Snite, expressing the appreciation of the Illinois Industrial Lenders Association for his two years of tireless effort in guiding the Association to its present high standard and for the many personal kindnesses extended to the Association and its members.

We had the pleasure of meeting Mr. Carlo Liggett, of Cleveland, Ohio, Western Representative of the Beneficial Loan Societies.

The meeting was adjourned at 4:15 P. M.

Edward Steimle,
Acting Secretary.

CLIPPINGS.

In the June number of The Nation's Business we ran an article on "Sizing Up the Borrower" by Albert N. Hogg. Glenwood Macomber of Minneapolis, Minn., read it and, taking his pen in hand, gave us a report of his own experiences with a banker which does not agree with the Hogg article to any appreciable degree. Mr. Macomber says:

The gods of finance surely must have been dumbfounded when the gentleman spoken of in a recent article in The Nation's Business sauntered in and calmly demanded a loan of $200,000; but the ease with which he ran their guard lines and slipped away with the money is what amazes me. They must have let him in with just merely a password and a receipt showing his dues were paid. The next gentleman, as the article stated, only wanted $100,000 and they gave him first degree just to assure themselves that he was legally qualified to handle that small an amount. The third gentleman, only wanting a mere $5,000, was put through two degrees before being handed the roll of bills and told that lodge was over.

Those boys got off with exceeding ease. I just wish—as one might say—you could have seen them put on third degree one beautiful day when I brazenly, brashly and utterly without shame, walked in among the gods sitting in judgment among mountains of money and with unsurpassed coolness of nerve asked for a loan of two hundred dollars.

The president of the largest bank in town—resources sixty-four millions; or is it sixty-four billions?—I forget—anyhow, the president stepped nimbly down from the pile of gold that served him in lieu of a throne and greeted me with all the enthusiasm with which the morning sunshine greets the rose, for, as I was duly bedecked, unctuously anointed with Havana Perfecto and was wearing a new forty-watt necktie, he did not know—what he did not know was this: that I might own the rest of the world that he did not own.

I told him I wanted to borrow two hundred dollars. I had some difficulty in making him understand what it was I wanted. He had never heard of such a small amount. Finally it dawned upon the lonely watcher in the mountains of gold that what I wanted was dollars and not millions. Then the clouds began to gather.

Lightning flashes of doubt and suspicion seemed to play about the towering peak of Old Baldy. The frigid line of eternal snow, spreading quickly from point to point, overspread his countenance with the fierce severity of an Arctic winter. Not for long, though, did the ice age last for, after all, business is business, and as the Venerable Mountaineer of the mountains of money rose from the pile of gold he was sitting on to light a match on the non-skid part of his trousers, he had an idea. Then from out through the blue smoke ring of a dollar seegar Old Guardian's voice was asking me if I could give security. Sure. Security was the watchword, I was told, that would pass one through the portals into the bulging money vault and that with the proper security one could obtain accommodation for one's needs no matter how small the amount.

I went forth treading on eggshells as one transfigured, for had I not walked among the gods of finance and come out unscatched? I was vibrant with joy for I knew what I always did know—that if I only had a couple of millionaires to sign my note for ninety days I could walk into any bank in town and they would shovel my wagon full to overflowing with all the money I could haul away!—The Nation's Business. August, 1922.

DATES EARLIEST FORM OF LOAN.

Two thousand and more years ago there were creditors and debtors just as there are to-day. Originally the loans were not of money but of actual commodities.

The earliest loan safeguarded, according to modern investment standards and of which we have any record, was made in 430 B. C. It consisted of 30 bushels of dates secured by the land of the debtors. The clay brick on which it was recorded was dug up in the ruins of Nippur, Mesopotamia, by an archæological expedition of the University of Pennsylvania.

"Thirty bushels of dates are due to Bel Nadin Shun, son of Marashu, by Bel Bullitsu and Sha Nabu Shu, sons of Kirebti, and their tenants. In the month of Tashri (month of harvest) of the thirty-fourth year of King Artaxerxes I, they shall pay the dates, 30 bushels, according to the measure of Bel Nadin Shun, in the town of Bit Balatsu. Their field, cultivated and uncultivated, their fief estate, is held as a pledge for the dates, namely, 30 bushels, by Bel Nadin Shun. Another creditor shall not have power over it."

Note how carefully the loan is recorded and how the time and place of payment are named. The creditor is, in fact, given a first mortgage on the land of his debtors, for the document declares "another creditor shall not have power over it (the land)."

The brick was found with 730 similar clay tablets in the remains of a room that had once been part of the business establishment of a wealthy firm that would have, according to the parlance of to-day, been known as Marashu Sons, Nippur, Mesopotamia.

The fact that the first loan of this kind was of dates testifies to the antiquity of dates as a food and to their lasting popularity through the centuries. —Baltimore Sun, July 30, 1922.

COMMUNICATIONS.

New Bedford, Mass., June 29, 1922.

Dear Mr. Kehr:

At our last meeting it was voted to forward a check for $310 to Mr. C. G. Mueller, which is the amount due from this association as an assessment from each member, to help defray expenses for the coming National Convention. The amount should have been $320, but we find that the Beneficial Loan Society of Boston, forwarded their check direct.

Regarding the matter of dues in the American Association, at our last meeting we voted to go on record as favoring a rate of $0.75 per thousand outstanding with no minimum nor maximum and I have been instructed to notify you of these two matters.

Cordially yours,
H. J. DESORMAUX,
Secretary.

LOUISIANA.

Representative Barrett of New Orleans introduced in June 1922 into the House as an emergency measure under a suspension of the rules, the Uniform Small-Loan Act (H. B. 424). The bill was actively supported by Mr. C. H. Patterson, secretary of the Charity Organization Society in New Orleans, secretary of the Legal Aid Society there, and a member of the State Board of Charities and Corrections, in a personal letter to Senator Fred A. Earhart, he urged the introduction of this bill as one in which Charity Organizations are deeply interested.

Mr. Patterson is authority for the statement that some loan sharks in New Orleans are charging as much as five and six hundred per cent. a year.

Mr. Frank E. Wood, Commissioner of Labor of Louisiana, wrote in support of the bill:

> "I sincerely believe that if it were possible to lay before the individual members of the law-making bodies of this state some of the many complaints that come to my attention, the outrageous rates of interest often charged, the abominable practices resorted to, the rank injustice exacted of the borrowers, the price they pay in persecution, and the sufferings endured and the privations made by the wives and innocent children of men unfortunate enough to get tangled in the meshes of the average 'loan shark' there would not be a single dissenting vote to eliminate this despicable and trouble-making business."

GEORGIA.

The Luncheon of the Industrial Lender's Association of Georgia was held Wednesday evening, August 9th, at the Ansley Hotel, Atlanta, Georgia. There was a good representation of members present, including all of the officers, Chairman A. B. Madison, Vice Chairman J. B. Otey, and Secretary and Treasurer B. L. Lassiter.

The principal guest of the evening was Dr. Joseph J. Genthner, of New York, field director of the Legal Reform Bureau, who was in Atlanta in the interest of preserving the present small-loan law, now effective in Georgia, namely 3½ per cent. interest. A bill pending in the Georgia Legislature sought to amend by making the rate 2½ per cent. a month. At the invitation of the Association, Dr. Genthner spoke on the practical working of the uniform small-loan law and upon the effort to nullify its intent through the legislation now pending.

The Association by unanimous vote passed resolutions of appreciation and indorsement of the work of the Legal Reform Bureau in general.

Mr. Madison presided as toastmaster and in introducing Dr. Genthner explained the purpose of his visit to Atlanta. He said that, as it is always well to "see ourselves as others see us," he believed that what Dr. Genthner would have to say about the business of industrial loans and about industrial lenders should prove of great interest to the members of the Association.

Dr. Genthner at the outset sketched the history of remedial loan legislation, the long study that had been made by economists, bankers and sociologists before the uniform small-loan law was drafted, the educational campaign that had preceded its adoption by some twenty states of the union, and the beneficial results that had flowed from the enactment of the law in the states where it is now operative. These results, he declared, were not alone to the borrower, although it was the borrower that it was sought in the first instance to benefit. The law, he declared, had been not less a boon to the lender himself, since it gave him the protection and sanction of law, had removed in large part and would eventually do away with altogether the prejudice existing in the public mind against a business as legitimate and respectable as any other department of banking, and had given the industrial lender a status of which he should be proud of since he filled a legitimate and pressing need in the way of social service.

"I am in Georgia to-day," said Dr. Genthner referring to the bill pending in the Legislature, "because the passage of House Bill No. 633, which would repeal the vital clause of the small-loan law now on the statute books for two years, threatens to undo the good work under which the industrial borrower has enabled to obtain on fair and equitable terms the credit which is not available to him as to his more fortunate neighbor to whom ordinary banking facilities are available."

He represented no groups either of borrowers or lenders, he said, but acted through the Legal Reform Bureau for the great mass of industrial workers in whose interest the uniform small-loan law had been drafted by public-spirited men and made effective in 20 states of the Union. This law, he declared, had been demonstrated to be the sole effective means of putting the small-loan business on a higher plane.

At the close of Dr. Genthner's address Mr. Madison called on members for remarks and discussions of the address. It was the consensus that the speaker had very fairly stated the case of the industrial lender, his status, problems and his future, although one speaker declared that he believed Dr. Genther in putting the period of the ultimate development of the business as far ahead as ten years had been too conservative. This speaker believed that at the present rate of growth and with a progressive trend in legislation, the next five years would see a development of the business that would be nation-wide and such as to cause its pioneers to wonder how they could ever have had doubts as to the future.

Dr. Genthner invited questions as to the status of the legislation then pending in the Georgia Legislature and in answer described the origin and progress of the bill to amend the present law. He suggested as a means to overcome prejudice and impress on the public mind the special risks attending the small-loan business and making the 3½ per cent. rate imperative for its success, that the Association members make the Legal Reform Bureau offices a clearing house for instances where, because of humane consideration, unpaid balances on loans had been written off voluntarily by the Lender.

He gave several instances in his own knowledge where a sudden, swift calamity or misfortune had befallen a borrower and which on becoming known to the lender had caused him voluntarily to write off the balance of the loan and interest due. He invited the members to cite instances such as those he mentioned that came within their own knowledge, as he stated that necessarily they could not with good grace give them publicity, but that it could be done by a disinterested agency and would serve the purpose of informing the public of the extraordinary risks in the industrial lending business and at the same time would demonstrate that the men engaged in it were influenced by humane considerations.

The members present at the meeting were: A. B. Madison, Surety Loan Company, Atlanta; Henry Sharp, City Investment Company, Atlanta; L. E. Pope, Southern Superintendent of the Beneficial Loan Society, Richmond, Va.; Walter L. Adair, Fulton Loan and Discount Company, Atlanta; J. M. Marion, Citizens' Loan Company, Atlanta; R. L. Montague, Beneficial Loan Society, Macon, Ga.; and B. L. Lassiter, Southern Security Company, Atlanta, Georgia. R. F. Davis, Securities Investment Company, and J. B. Otey, Beneficial Loan Society, all of Atlanta.

ME TO MYSELF

Tuesday Evening, Aug. 8th, 1922.

Start!! Start that paper you promised to write or you never will get anywhere. You've lost over a week now and next week's the time, for Heaven's sake start something! and say, don't waste time telling them you can't speak. They'll discover that, all right, don't overwork yourself trying to be funny, don't lecture or scold or try to teach, don't assume they were never introduced to a worthy motive or high ideal until you came along the pike, just give the boys credit for having an ounce or so of gray matter, a bit of warm blood in their veins and an uncanny capacity for telling the difference in short order between real stuff and bunk. Now go ahead! So here goes—

Mr. Chairman and Gentlemen of the O. L. A.:

In answer to Tom's request to write and read a paper on "Our Managers' Meeting," how it is to be appreciated, its purpose, benefits and pleasures, I had to confess that I had used hours and hours writing parody songs but never in my life had written an "essay."

I am not so sure I can confine myself strictly to the subjects given me, I only know that there are many things I want to say and wish not to take all credit for quotations repeated and ask for your kind indulgence for a short while and if you'll do but this I will do my "durndest" to make good—

"Our Managers' Meeting."

This will be the fourth time I've met with the O. L. A. and last September I was fortunate enough to be at the National Meeting at Chicago. There is undoubtedly a vast difference between a state and a national meeting. Our State Meetings seem more like home to me, seems more like meeting with my own people, my home people. At Chicago I found the owners, governors, organizers, auditors directors and officers of loan companies from all over the United States it seemed and what a wonderful class of men they were. Big in Business, Big in Capital, Big in Success and Finance, yet humble and broad in their manner and making a desperate effort to make greater progress in the building up of the mor*al* of our business. As I recall it there was but one "Manager" on that program besides myself, and Arthur Ham, probably the most renowned man in our line of business in our country to-day, was broad enough to pay a glowing tribute to that young Manager before he started his own talk. A National Meeting is a wonderful place to go and yet were I to choose for myself I would prefer our State Meeting because one gets in closer touch with the real workings and everyday experiences of our business and I feel that the State Meeting, composed mostly of the Managers of the various companies throughout the state should have time allotted to a Managers' Meeting and personally I feel grateful to our Executive Committee for its arrangement. Surely a State Meeting without a Managers' Meeting would be a mistake and right here I wish to say that I'd stake my life that there is not a state in the Union that has a more capable, more loyal, more congenial or more faithful set of men than our Executive Committee and the officers of our O. L. A. All honor to them and to any man called upon by them for assistance, no matter how menial it may be, who does not do his best to help them is worse than a slacker and if that man be a manager he must be a darn poor one indeed—

"I sometimes think that never has the earth
From days so ancient as its time of birth
Seen men, so many men, seeking goodly ends
Striving to make this world of better worth."

The Purpose.

Of our Managers' Meeting surely is to bring about a closer relationship between managers and a place where we can trade experiences and give one to the other the benefits of our experiences but more especially to draw a closer harmony between competing managers.

It is a mistake to suppose that you have to fight your competitor, nothing was ever gained permanently by fighting for fighting of any kind is pure destruction. Your competitor does not have to be your enemy—he can be your friend. Competition does not kill trade, it builds trade, stimulates trade and makes new trade. Hate is always expensive; get acquainted with him. you may learn something. Don't knock your competitor: it sounds bad and it is bad. Be a good sport, play the game, give prompter service and be more courteous if you can, but don't fight by cutting rates. Keep good-natured. Anger is without reason. It cares nothing for consequences. It regards no holy ties. It is the beast in full control. In a moment of anger a man does that which an eternity cannot undo. Straight business and good nature win out always in the long run—your competitor will do you a lot of good and he will make you energetic, careful, more attentive to business and altogether will be a good tonic for you, if you know how to use him.

The Managers' Meeting should have a portion allotted to a get-acquainted-with-each-other stunt where friendships can be formed that will carry on and on. A man's greatest assets are his friends: surely, without friends the richest man is poor indeed; do you appreciate the loyalty and value of your friends? Have you ever thanked them for the cheering word and helping hand? Are you as eager in turn to serve them? Settle these things in your mind ere you leave this our Managers' Meeting and if you have not been a good friend, remember this: it is not easy to apologize; to admit error; to be unselfish; to be charitable; to be considerate; to keep on trying; to shoulder a deserved blame—but it always pays.

Sing.

"If I knew you and you knew me
If both of us could plainly see
And understand with sight divine
The meaning of this heart of mine
I'm sure that we would differ less
And clasp our hands in friendliness
Our thoughts would pleasantly agree
If I knew you and you knew me."

Benefits.

There is no end to the benefits of a Managers' Meeting, nor space, nor time could tell them all, but I have just a little time to give you some of them.

No two offices are run alike—each manager manages differently and the trading of ideas and systems is one great benefit: a nom de plume has written the following which he has named Systematitis.

Oh, isn't it great to be up-to-date,
And live in this year of grace
With a system and place for everything
Though nobody knows the place.

We've an index card for each thing to do
And for everything under the sun
It takes so long to fill out the cards
We never get anything done.

We've loose leaf ledgers for saving time
The Lord knows what they cost
But half of our time is spent each day
Hunting for leaves that are lost.

I dreamt I lived in a sectional house
And rode a sectional hoss
And drew my pay in sections from
A sectional section boss.

Oh isn't it great to be up-to-date
And live in this year of grace
With a system and place for everything
Though nobody knows the place.

Another benefit is to be derived from the enthusiasm of the other manager in his work—do you feel driven in your work? If so, then time is your tyrant; yank him around by the forelock and make him your slave. Yesterday's left over task is a merciless mortgage on today; lift that mortgage, then turn the tables and become a manger who owns mortgages—not one who makes them. The devil has his faults but procrastination is not one of them.

It isn't a bit harder to get up at 6:30 than 7 o'clock: once you are up and the pride and joy of entering your office ten minutes before you must, starts the day with a sense of mastery that follows you through it, while the guilt of slinking in five minutes late gives you that "hired" feeling that belittles and unnerves; Strong Will is never late, Flabby Will is often late; Strong Will is working for himself—using the time that God gives him and the tools supplied by the boss—Flabby Will knows not the value of time and life is one long weary wait for pay day.

"How long has Flabby Will worked for you? About four hours—I thought he had been here longer than that? He has: he has been here for four months—do you get me? Be a "pep-ti-mist:" a pessimist closes an eye, wrinkles his face, draws up the corner of his mouth and says, "it can't be done;" an optimist has a face full of sunshine: he beams on you and says, "It can be done," then lets George do it. But a "pep-ti-mist" takes off his hat, rolls up his sleeves, goes to it and does it.

A benefit coming from closer acquaintance gained in a Managers' Meeting is the help we receive in chasing skippers. The following lines will help possibly some manager who is worrying about some. You are not the only one.

"We, too, have skippers;
The dear little souls,
And talk about slickness:
They've got it on moles.
They pass from their homesteads
In darkness of night;
They pass 'neath the roots of
The grass—out of sight
And when in the trap that
We set on their way
We catch them, we learn
They're dead, and can't pay.

LAST CALL FOR THE NATIONAL CONVENTION

INDUSTRIAL LENDERS NEWS

Vol. VII. No. 3. SEPTEMBER, 1921. Price, $1.00 a Year.

NOW OR NEVER

If the printers who do the mechanical work on this job do not fail, most every industrial lender of any consequence in the U. S. A. will receive this paper in time to make an important decision if it has not been made before. If your mind was made up months ago to stay at home and all the appeals which have preceded this one have had no effect upon you then read what follows. Since the time of our last annual national convention in Chicago about a year ago, when Edgar P. East by his famous speech captured the eighth annual convention for New York, the committees of which Mr. East has been the general chairman, have been busy planning for this big event.

You may not be interested in the time and money they have spent in the preparation of a program so filled with educational and entertaining features. You may have forgotten that five months ago Mr. East issued the first call and plead for your attendance, and in each issue of the NEWS since there has been some convention news, all for the purpose of advising you that if you are not among those present you will be missing something worth many more times than the expense. The A. I. L. A. is fast assuming the position in the industrial loan field which the American Bankers' Association occupies among the commercial bankers. To be outside the fold and take no part in its activities is very much like the man without a country.

To hear the reports of the committees which have labored for the cause of industrial banking in a national way is to learn of the progress and strength of the movement "to improve industrial loan conditions."

To hear and meet the men who have been assigned and will discuss important phases of our business is a privilege not to be declined. Nowhere can you see more interesting sights or find a greater variety of entertainment.

We are going to try to settle for all time the question of dues, eligibility of membership, etc., so that there can be no question about these matters in the future.

O. L. A. RESOLUTIONS.

Questions of future policy will be decided in the disposition of the resolutions recently adopted by the Ohio Loan Association which are published here for the information of everybody:

"That the Executive Committee be authorized to select five delegates to attend the annual meeting of the National Association to be held in New York, September, and that our Association pay the necessary expenses of said delegates. That the Executive Committee also appoint our full quota of delegates to said convention and that all members be urged to attend.

"That the Executive Committee of the National Association be directed by resolution to hold at least three regular meetings of said committee at such times and places during the year as the chairman may designate, and that thirty days' notice of each of said meetings be given all members of the Association by publication in the LENDERS NEWS or by mail.

"That this Association go on record as favoring the enactment of or amendment to present statutes in the various states authorizing corporations to transact the small loan business; that the National Association be requested to pass a like resolution thereby establishing such legislation as a part of the established legislative policy of said Association.

"That any member of the National Association who may own, conduct or be interested in any concern which charges or receives more than the scientific rate of 3½% per month shall be ineligible to hold office or be a member of the National Executive Committee.

"That a copy of each of the above resolutions be mailed to the Secretary of the National Association with a request that the copies thereof be furnished to the secretaries of all state associations in order that the members of said associations may have previous knowledge of the nature of said resolutions before they are presented for consideration to the National Convention."

TRANSPORTATION.

Just a word to say it is important that everyone who expects to travel to New York by rail to note the following instructions:

How to Start.

A reduction of one and one-half railroad fare on the Certificate Plan will apply for members and their families attending the meeting of the American Industrial Lenders Association to be held in New York City September 20th-23d.

1. Tickets at regular one-way tariff fares for the going journey may be obtained on any of the following dates (but not on any other date) Sept. 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21. Be sure that when purchasing going ticket you request a certificate. Do not make the mistake of asking for a receipt.

2. Present yourself at the railroad station for tickets and certificates at least 30 minutes before departure of train on which you will begin your journey.

3. Certificates are not kept at all stations. If you inquire at your home station, you can ascertain whether certificates and through tickets can be obtained to place of meeting. If not obtainable at your home station, the agent will inform you at what station they can be obtained. You can in such case purchase a local ticket to the station which has certificates in stock, where you can purchase a through ticket and at the same time ask for and obtain a certificate to place of meeting.

4. Immediately on your arrival at the convention, present your certificate to the indorsing officer, Geo. W. Kehr, National Secretary, as the reduced fares for the return journey will not apply unless you are properly identified as provided for by the certificates.

How to Return.

5. It has been arranged that the special agent of the railroads will be in attendance at the convention on September 21st from 8:30 a. m. to 5:30 p. m., to validate certificates. If you arrive at the meeting and leave for home again prior to the special agent's arrival, or if you arrive at the meeting later than September 21st, after the special agent has left, you cannot have your certificate validated and consequently you will not obtain the benefit of the reduction on the home journey.

6. So as to prevent disappointment, it must be understood that the reduction on the return journey is not guaranteed, but is contingent on an attendance of not less than 250 members and members of their familiies holding regularly issued certificates obtained from ticket agents at starting points, from where the regular one-way adult tariff fares to place of meeting are not less than 67 cents on going journey.

Certificates issued to children at half fares will be counted the same as certificates held by adults.

7. If the necessary minimum 250 certificates are presented to the special agent and your certificate is duly validated, you will be entitled up to and including September 27th, to a return ticket via the same route over which you made the going journey at one half of the regular one-way tariff fare from the place of meeting to the point at which your certificate was issued.

8. Return tickets issued at the reduced fare will not be good on any limited train on which such reduced fare transportation is not honored.

9. No refund of fare will be made on account of failure to obtain proper certificate when purchasing going ticket, nor on account of failure to present validated certificate when purchasing return ticket.

All please remember we must have 250 present to obtain the reduced rate, and if anyone does not avail himself of this privilege it may keep the rest who attend from enjoying this reduction in railroad fare.

START EARLY.

Although the railroad strike is not yet settled and may not be before the Convention we anticipate no difficulty in transportation facilities. The Pennsylvania lines are reported to be in particularly good shape to handle all the travel on their road. At any rate, the Convention will not be postponed but will occur on the dates scheduled if we have to use automobiles to get there. To be sure you will arrive in New York on time, we suggest you start early.

WOMEN WANTED.

There would be some very disappointed people if the women did not turn out strong because we have gotten around to the point now where no function is a complete success without them. How they will enjoy the talkfest, the shopping, dancing and sight-seeing features can be best described by the committee of which George Hodson and Mrs. East, Rutherford and Hodson are members.

ATTENDANCE TROPHY.

Last year we inaugurated a plan to increase the attendance at the National Convention and awarded the Illinois Association the silver cup for having the greatest percentage of its members present. This year we asked one of the officers of the Illinois Association to bring the cup to the Convention, and he said he would comply, but that he expected to take it back again to Illinois after the Convention was over. Can you Eastern fellows imagine such nerve? The way to keep the cup in the East this year is to go to New York 100 per cent. strong.

STATE OFFICIALS.

The prospects are that we will have with us representatives of the departments which supervise our business in Massachusettes, Connecticut, New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Maryland, Ohio, and Illinois. Others may be present.

HOTEL RESERVATIONS.

If you decide at the last minute to attend the Convention, we advise you to wire Hotel Pennsylvania direct for reservations.

REGISTER PROMPTLY.

On your arrival at Hotel Pennsylvania be sure to register at headquarters and present your credentials.

The program so far as it is arranged two weeks before the Convention includes:

Seeing Lower Manhattan.

Passing through New York's busiest thoroughfares in the shadow of the tallest buildings in the world. The Financial District—Wall St. and Broad St. Viewing the Statue of Liberty, the large Suspension Bridges, Stock Exchange, Curb Brokers, Sub-Treasury, City Hall, Custom House, Bowling Green, Ocean Liners, Tenement House District, Jewish Quarter and a stop at the Aquarium (old Castle Garden).

Seeing Upper Manhattan.

An exhilarating dash around Central Park, Riverside Drive, Morningside Drive. Viewing the homes of New York's Millionaires, the Museums, Churches, Theaters, Clubs, Statues, Monuments, Retail Shopping District, etc. Stopping at Grant's Tomb.

Sight-seeing Yacht Around Manhattan Island.

Through the waters of the North, East, Hudson and Harlem Rivers, completely encircling Manhattan Island. An excellent view is afforded of the sky line of New York. Passing under all the great bridges. In close view of the Statute of Liberty, Ellis Island, the Ocean Liners, Coastwise Steamers, etc.

A well-informed lecturer occompanies each trip.

With reference to the program, Wm. E. Pool, Chairman of the Massachusetts Association, writes:

"I am returning copy of tentative program which you so kindly mailed to me for my inspection. It is a wonderful program and I have no suggestions to make. You have certainly crowded a whole lot into four days, and I only hope that it can be carried out without cutting out any of the features."

Judging from the calls received for the booklet, "Ways to Locate a Skip," the work done by the authors of this collaboration of practical information, should be gratifying. Here is an evidence showing appreciation: George H. Loh, manager of the Chattel Loan Society of New York, after sending for one copy of the booklet, replied as follows:

"We acknowledge receipt of your booklet, 'Ways to Locate a Skip,' for which we thank you, and enclose thirty cents in stamps, for which we would like you to send us three additional copies of the same."

"The little booklet entitled 'Ways to Locate a Skip' is certainly a jewel. I enclose twenty cents (20c) in coin for two more of them so that I can give them to people when they are out on a hunt."

And from J. V. Collier, of the Commercial Accounting Co., of Chicago, this:

"We this afternoon received the two copies of 'Ways to Locate a Skip,' and like them very much. We have some forty offices and credit clothing stores and would like to have one of these booklets for each place.

"I am mailing check for four ($4.00) dollars to cover cost of forty (40) copies, if you will be good enough to send them to us."

The requests of any other non-members of the A. I. L. A. will be taken care of at the rate of 10c per copy, as long as the present supply lasts.

ILLINOIS.

For the information of our subscribers we are publishing the fourth annual report of Division of Small Loans, Illinois Department of Trade and Commerce:

"During the period reported upon, that is from July 1, 1920, to June 30, 1921, the activities of this division have been very largely devoted to routine matters, in connection with the administration of this law. Not much of note or worthy of special mention has occurred during this time.

"The American Industrial Lenders Association, a national association of licensees under this or similar acts in the various states, held its annual meeting in Indianapolis in September, 1920, and invited a representative from this State to attend its sessions. The examiner of this division was delegated to attend the conference as the representative of this State.

"The department has endeavored to cause the office of each licensee to be examined at least twice each year. During this fiscal year there have been 173 examinations made, of which 66 were made in Cook County and 107 down State. For this same period 60 licenses have been issued to Cook County applicants and to down State applicants 81, making a total of 141, or 8 more than were in full force and effect on June 30, 1920. Removal consents have been secured by 7 licensees in Cook County and 3 down State. During this entire period 3 licenses were cancelled in Cook County and 1 down State. In the preceding three annual reports of this division the law and the rulings thereon arising from its administration have been repeatedly referred to and reviewed. Therefore, it is not believed wise to refer to such matters in this report. Reference to such reports for such matters may be had if desired.

"The administration of this law in Illinois, and the rulings promulgated by this department have brought to the borrower and the lender alike, almost uniform satisfaction. So much so, that when other states have come to consider the advisability of enacting such a law in their state, they have conferred with this department concerning the advisability of such proposed legislation. In three such states, namely, Michigan, Iowa and Minnesota, the civic organizations, which fostered the bill pending before the legislatures in those states, invited the Assistant Director of this department to attend committee hearings at which time the proposed bill in the respective states was under consideration, and this department believing that the administration of this law in this State had resulted in great benefit to its citizens, decided to send the Assistant Director who had been for three years in active charge of the enforcement of the law here, to the cities of Lansing, Des Moines and St. Paul, accepting the invitation of these various societies who were interested in the enactment of a similar law in their states. It may be noted here that the statements made by the representative of this department in these hearings were carefully and considerately received, the legislators being extremely desirous of securing all data and information possible upon the subject, and as to the practical working of such a law.

MEET ME

The Eighth Annual National Convention

"It should be noted in passing that Michigan and Iowa acted favorably upon the bills pending upon this subject. Minnesota failed to enact a law upon the subject.

"The licensees in this State are to be congratulated upon their ready acquiescence in following the rulings and suggestions of the department relative to the enforcement of the law. Careful and critical examinations are made of the transactions of these licensees at least twice a year, and the result of these examinations is reported to the offices examined and suggestions and directions made for the correction of any irregularities found to have existed. Invariably the licensees have corrected their records in accordance with the suggestions of the department without further action, all of which speaks well, not only for the administration, but for the licensees thereunder. All of which is commendable.

"An attempt was made at the last session of the legislature to permit corporations to become licensees under this act, they having theretofore been barred by reason of the opinion of the Attorney General. The attempt failed and the bill did not pass the House. Therefore, this situation is in the same status it was before. An attempt was also made to amend this law by reducing the rate of interest from 3½ per cent per month to 2 per cent per month. The bill was presented by well meaning people, but statements from the department to the effect that data was not ready or available, nor had Illinois sufficient experience to justify it in stating that the rate as fixed by the law, 3½ per cent per month, was not reasonable, were made to the committee having the matter under consideration, and the bill failed of passage.

"If the condition that now prevails in this State with reference to this law continues, and there seems to be no reason why it should not, the people of this State can justly claim that by virtue thereof Illinois has freed itself from the clutches of the old time 'loan shark,' and is now by law regulating small loans to necessitous people, and in this is rendering a very great service to a class of our people otherwise neglected.

"Small Loan Division—July 1, 1920, to June 30, 1921:

Licenses issued in Cook County	60
Licenses issued down State	81
Total	141
Licenses cancelled in Cook County	3
Licenses cancelled down State	1
Total	4
Removal consents given in Cook County	7
Removal consents given down State	3
Total	10
Examinations made in Cook County	66
Examinations made down State	107
Total	173"

COMMUNICATIONS.

Waycross, Georgia,
August 14, 1922.

Dear Mr. Kehr,—I was glad to receive your letter enclosing four copies of the pamphlet by Mr. Ham, which I have handed to four of my directors, and I note what you say about joining the State Association.

This institutions is operated upon the 12 payment (monthly) plan; to eliminate these so-called loan sharks, of which we have about eight in a town of 23,000, composed mostly of laboring men at a large railroad shop. A few of us fellows are trying to get an institution that will take care of the good railroad trade, without forcing the railroad boys, of which I am one, and have been 17 years, to go to the fellow that is plainly holding them up at 10% every thirty days on time purchases which can be done under Georgia law. When I tried to get them to put in the 3½ rate, they called me a loan shark, but after reading the pamphlet, they are readily coming to my joint of view. I believe at my next stockholders' meeting I am going to get it over, and if I can, then I am going to join the State Association, and when I have accomplished this I will have done a great deal to help the loan situation in Waycross.

Of course, the industrial lender is necessary; he will always be with us, and I am for the better class. The man that does the game fifty fifty. But the 3½ rate is the happy medium between the bank and the loan shark, all of which we must have to make a world.

If you can do so, I would like six more of the pamphlets by Mr. Ham, one for the other directors. I shall be glad to remit for them if you will be good enough to mail me the bill, and if I am successful in establishing the system in our little institution, I shall be glad to join the Association, and lift my part.

Thanking you for your kind attention in the matter, I am,

Yours truly,
John Bennett.

Chicago,
August 16, 1922.

Dear Mr. Kehr,—I have been wanting to call your attention to a firm that took over our very bad business when we closed our Denver, Colo., office, and from whom we got most excellent returns. Returns from what were P. & L.'s and hopeless accounts, and what is even more important we got regular monthly returns or remittances from him. This is so exceptional a case that I feel the information might be of value to our members who have skips in Denver. Use this as you see fit. The name and address of the Denver firm is:

Mutual Credit Company (not a loan company),
459-460 Gas & Electric Bldg.,
Denver, Colo.
Mr. W. C. Lydon.

Mansfield, Ohio,
August 9, 1922.

Dear Mr. Kehr,—I am enclosing a letter and a copy of another letter, and after you have read them, perhaps it might seem well for you to print some part of them.

I am not particularly anxious to have my name appear, and of course not that of the borrower.

The spirit of coöperation as shown by Mr. Dobyns for not only our interests, but that of the borrower, if carried out in every case will do more to uplift and advance our plan than any other thing we might be able to do.

I am not nearly so much pleased with getting our money in this case as I am to see the fine spirit as shown by Mr. Dobyns.

It is entirely up to you as to whether you print any part of the letters.

Respectfully,
M. L. Anderson.

[The correspondence to which Mr. Anderson refers is too long to be reprinted, but it shows how M. L. Dobyns of the Guarantee Loan Co., Philadelphia, rendered Mr. Anderson's Company efficient service in the collection of one of his accounts that had moved to Philadelphia,—one more reason for membership in the A. I. L. A.—The Editor.]

ME TO MYSELF.

Pleasures.

One of the pleasures of a Managers' Meeting as well as every session of this convention is the air of companionship that permeates it. For men to crave companionship is as natural as to desire to live. Most men are companionable and those who are not are only so because of artificial circumstances under which they have been elected or have have been forced to lead their lives. Lonesomeness is a misfortune and usually a product of selfishness. Let us instill into our managers' meeting an air of unselfishness and learn to coöperate with each other. I hear men sometimes speaking with an easy confidence of coöpertion as if it were a natural human instinct; in point of fact, it is not. Men have had to learn to coöperate and it has taken years marked by oppression and bloodshed to bring men to know that in sharing one another's burdens they insure the safety and contribute to the happiness and success of all—every honorable vocation is an opportunity to contribute to the total of human welfare and happiness and there is no work so humble that it is unproductive. Business success is not fairly won nor can it hope to endure unless it returns profit on capital and labor invested but I believe that profits are not all measured in terms of gold and silver. If Goodwill, Respect and Friendship are excluded man may become rich and still be as poor as a church mouse—honest service rendered is the basis of all worthy enterprise and genuine competition is in the quality and quantity of service rendered.

Loyalty and honesty demand that we conduct our business so that men will heed and heeding will understand. Listen to me, young manager, the cleverest man in the world is the man who tells the truth and tells it all the time. Sometimes you can profit by a lie, but it's like dodging bullets—you never know when you are going to get hurt. It is easy to see the crooked dollar to-day but hard to see the ten straight dollars it is going to lose us to-morrow. Real business success grows like a snowball and the one thing that makes it keep on growing, even while we sleep, is our persistent truthfulness and dependableness. It is well to be clever and keen and Johnny-on-the-spot; it is well to look out for number one, but best of all is to have the world say of you, "Whatever that man says can absolutely be depended upon."

When he values success more than character and selfrespect. When his friends like him for what he has more than for what he is. When he lets a day go by without making someone happier and more comfortable. When he does not care what happens to his neighbor or friend so long as he is prosperous. When he is so busy doing work that he has no time for smiles or cheering words.

There is one thing I never fail to leave in a home where I have made an appraisement or collection, that is a smile.

Laugh—

Build for yourself a strong box
  Fashion each part with care
Fit it with hasp and padlock
  Put all your troubles in there
Hide therein all your failures
  And each bitter cup you quaff
Lock all heartaches within it
Then—sit on the lid and laugh.

Tell no one of its contents
Never its secrets share
Drop in your cares and worries
  Keep them forever there.
Hide them from sight so completely
  The world will never dream half
Fasten the top down securely
  Then, sit on the lid and laugh.

What is it that makes our business affairs move smoothly? It is agreeableness—get the habit. Smile when you are shaving, then it will come natural all day long—be agreeable and you'll be in demand. Be agreeable and you will have little competition and you'll be pretty sure to succeed—an agreeable person lights up the room like a lamp. Study to make people like you, make love to the world; try it and see what happens.

If you would appreciate the Managers' Meeting give strict attention to every word spoken: any manager coming to one of these meetings who does not brush off the shoulder of some other manager or find something in this Manager's Meeting to take back home and apply to his work has either paid no attention to what has transpired or else he thinks he knows it all and such a manager should start a loan company of his own so that when he fails he loses his own money and not his employers' who have given him their confidence.

And now in conclusion permit me to say that twelve years ago when I became a manager of a Loan Company I was inexperienced, having spent the 20 years previous as a train despatcher. I found the managers and owners of those days unable to look me square in the face. Their very eyes told me they were hiding something: that they dared not tell the truth about their business. How different it is to-day, how proud we all are about what has been accomplished and as I look into your faces I thank God for the reconstruction. No man could possibly have loved this work years ago for down in his heart he must have been ashamed. I did my bit over in Stark County in this wonderful reconstruction and many, many times I thanked God Almighty for finding a place for me that has meant so much for my fellowman. "All things whatsoever ye would that men should do unto, do ye even so unto them," has always been my motto and when I am gone let it be written that I have worked earnestly and honestly and that I died gamely—but write, write that I have lived gloriously; that I have tried to play the game by the rules of honor and before I left that I built something of which it may be said that I tried to make the things that I touched just a little better.

The short length of time that I have been a member of the O. L. A. has been a great help to me and my company and we both appreciate it, I assure you: I'm sorry I have used so much of your time and sincerely thank you for the courteous treatment I have received to-day.

Finally.

When I lie down at night
  Make me not prey to thoughts that fear the light
Let not remorse, or shame, or doubt, or dread
  Have right to any place about my bed.

When I rise up at morn,
  Give me a slate clean as the day, new-born
Whereon to write, this day, a record fair,
  Unashamed though all the world see it there.

When that I trudge with burden of the day
  Grant me good friends to cheer me on my way
With whom my business shall be clean and true
  Taking not more but less than due.
  Till on that journey I must make alone
  All unafraid, I face the Great Unknown.

L. V. Busche.

WHAT'S THE ANSWER?

Recently the National Secretary received a letter from one of our members in a Middle Western state, which has recently enacted the uniform Small Loan Law, in which the writer asks for help in the following terms:

"We are after a bit of information and we feel you are in a position to give us the advice we desire. In Iowa we are making a concerted effort to put the loan business on a basis that will meet with the confidence and approval of the public.

"Just recently one of our circulars was returned to us by a Superintendent of Schools with a notation as follows: "It is an outrage to charge such a high rate of interest.' We immediately replied, a copy of which is herewith enclosed.

"Can you suggest a better or a more satisfactory method to combat and educate public opinion. Any plan you suggest will be recommended to the other members of the state association and will be greatly appreciated by us."

The National Secretary referred him to a number of pamphlets which have been published in justification of the rate, and said that the National Executive Committee has authorized the reprint of "The Facts About the Small Loan Business and the Scientific Rate of Fair Charges," by Reginald Heber Smith, of the Boston Bar. Distribution of this pamphlet will convince any intelligent person who is open to conviction that the rate of 3½% a month on unpaid balances for small loans, mostly unsecured, is justified.

The subject suggested by our correspondent is an important one, and the ways and means of meeting it will be discussed fully at the National Convention. It isn't sufficient for us who are engaged in the business to be satisfied with the rate, nor is it even sufficient if a small percentage of public-spirited citizens and agencies have recommended the rate, the public is not yet convinced. Ways and means must be found to carry on the educational work until there can be no question in the mind of any fair-thinking person that the Uniform Rate is justified.

OHIO.

"I would like some one to bring up the matter at the national convention concerning the Scientific Loan of $300.00, and that there should be at least a gentlemen's agreement in the State of Ohio to not loan over that amount. We have found that the Community Finance Co. and the Citizens' Finance Co., and several other small chains in the state make loans over $300.00, and if they are going to continue doing business in this manner it is going to cause trouble in the future.

"This matter was brought up by the Chief Inspector of Department of Securities, a branch of the Banking Department of the State of Ohio, at the convention of the Ohio State Loan Association, but there was not very much discussion at this meeting as no one seemed to favor reducing it to $300."

PAWNBROKER'S GAZETTE.

Those of our members who are interested in Pawnbroking or Loans on Collateral Pledge of personal property, may be interested in subscribing to the "Pawnbroker's Gazette and Trade Circular" published weekly in London. It is a leading publication and an authority in its field.

EIGHTH ANNUAL NATIONAL CONVENTION

For constructive deliberations and potential results the eighth annual convention of the American Industrial Lenders Association, which was held in New York City at the Hotel Pennsylvania on September 20th, 21st, 22d, and 23d, doubtless will rank as the most important in its history. There were several outstanding features about the convention that marked it as distinctive in the development of the association.

Probably the first among these outstanding features was the very evident spirit among the members attending the convention that they constituted a body which was attaining its stature among the great number of maturer business and financial organizations in the country, that their organization had gained the recognition of the best economic and sociological minds in the country to which its importance as an agent of social service rightfully entitled it, and that it was incumbent upon each and every member to aid to the fullest extent in his power in developing the ultimate possibilites for usefulness of the Association.

The eighth annual convention of the association was a large convention, handled in a large way. The programme had been arranged with painstaking attention to its proper balance and it was carried out without a hitch and in a way worthy of men whose daily affairs are of an importance that calls for competence and ability. The selection of the metropolis of the United States as the convention meeting place in itself was a wise measure calculated to focus the attention of the country upon an association and a branch of business comparatively little known outside the circle of those immediately engaged in it but which is fast claiming the attention of financiers and the class of men and women who make the study of humanity and its needs their special field. It had a significance also in the fact that the scrutiny of the most powerful among the "unredeemed states" was thus challenged by the association.

It is fair to assume that the business of industrial lending was presented in an entirely new and more favorable light to hundreds of persons who before the convention had but a hazy or distorted knowledge of it, and the presence at the sessions of the convention of a number of distinguished economists and students of social conditions gave to a little understood business a status which it may always rightly lay claim to when conducted along ethical lines, but which has not always been accorded to it by the unthinking and the uninformed.

Great interest all through the convention was manifested in the large map displayed in the convention room which showed the status of small loan legislation in the United States. This map, which was prepared under the supervision of Dr. Joseph J. Genthner, Field Director of the Legal Reform Bureau to Eliminate the Loan Shark Evil, Inc., showed by shaded areas the various states in which, the Uniform Small Loan Law was in effect with the scientific rate incorporated, the states where the main features of the law are effective without, however, a satisfactory interest rate fixed by law; those where inadequate laws regulating the small loan laws are in force, and those where the business is wholly unregulated by law.

It was the consensus of those attending the convention that the map was a graphic illustration of the development of legislation which will be a fostering influence for the business of legitimate money lending and at the same time protective of industrial borrowers, but that it was also made evident that the Association had before it a great task in extending adequate legislation to every state in the Union which now lacks such laws.

The volume of business done annually by the small loan companies of the United States was put at the sum of $140,000,000 on a combined estimated capital of about $50,000,000 and these figures, while impressive and not generally known, served to suggest to leaders in the Association the desirability of systematically collating the more salient facts and figures concerning the organized lending business of the country.

In point of attendance it was one of the greatest conventions ever held by the Association. Of its total membership of 431, some 350 members attended, and as many of the members were accompanied by their wives and members of their families there was a total of about 500 brought to New York by the convention. In addition to the members and their families, there was a good representation of officials from the banking departments of several states.

During the four days of the convention the weather was ideal, New York's forerunner of Indian Summer being a brand that added incalculably to the enjoyment of the pleasure features of the programme. These features, in so far as they were set for out-doors, consisted of sight-seeing tours of New York by bus and yacht. The first of these little journeys was conducted for the ladies of the party during the forenoon of Wednesday, the first day of the convention, while the business session was in progress. The programme makers had seen to it that there was not an idle moment unfilled and after the day's round of sight seeing there were many theatre parties at several of Manhattan's scores of theatres.

One of the most enjoyable of the entertainment features was the vaudeville show and dance in the grand ball room of the Hotel Pennsylvania on Friday night. And not the least enjoyable feature of that night was the excellent vaudeville sketch which was presented with the smoothness and artistry of professionals by "home talent" within the membership of the Association. When the last number of the evening's show had been applauded the floor was cleared and the guests danced until long after midnight.

The purely social side of the four day session closed its season of weightier discussions, when a sight-seeing trip around Manhattan Island was conducted aboard a yacht. This was on Saturday afternoon, the yacht leaving the pier at the foot of West 42nd street at half past two o'clock.

The registration of the members and visitors attending the convention showed a total of 163, with 17 states represented. Those who registered were:

The convention was called to order Wednesday morning about ten o'clock in the small ball room of the hotel. Because of the absence, due to illness, of W. G. Wood, of Providence, National Chairman, R. M. Rutherford of New York City, Vice Chairman for the Unorganized States, presided. Mr. Rutherford introduced John R. Young, manager of the Convention Bureau of the Merchants' Association of New York, who in a brief and cordial address welcomed the members of the Association to New York. An address of welcome also was extended to the members on behalf of the Eastern state associations by Col. Clarence Hodson, of New York. Mr. Rutherford responded on behalf of the Association to both addresses.

The convention then resolved itself into a purely business session at which the annual reports of the standing committees and national officers were read. These reports were: Membership Committee, by J. H. Dyer; Committee on Legislation, C. H. Watts; Law Committee, F. R. Hubachek; Publicity Committee, Edgar P. East; Finance Committee, W. P. Woll; Treasurer and Auditing Committee, C. H. Stratton and H. T. Mattingly; Secretary, G. W. Kehr.

At the close of the morning session a luncheon was held in the grand ballroom of the Hotel Pennsylvania at 1 o'clock at which about 400 were present. There were no set speeches at the luncheon, but Col. Hodson was called on to speak and spoke briefly of the development of the Association and of the business of industrial lending.

Wednesday afternoon's session was devoted to the reading of papers by Walter S. Hillborn, Acting Director of the Division of Remedial Loans, Russell Sage Foundation; and Dean Babbitt, Atlantic sales manager of the Safe Cabinet Company, Marietta Ohio. Mr. Hilborn's paper on "The Year's Progress and the Uniform Law," was an interesting resume of the history of small loan legislation in the calendar year past. Mr. Babbitt spoke on "Record Protection," telling of tests made in the work of preserving office files from loss by fire by means of modern office appliances.

The general discussion at this session was on financing industrial loan offices, on the advisability of making changes in the constitution and by-laws of the Association and on the question whether small loan capital in the larger cities has reached the saturation point.

With Thursday's opening session the convention hit its stride, the entire morning being devoted to the reading of papers which received the close attention of those attending and evoked much interested discussion. C. H. Stratton, of Sullivan, Ind., National Treasurer, presided.

A. L. Wick, of Philadelphia, read the first paper on the day's program, on the "Need of Credit Exchanges," in which he urged that members of the Association adhere strictly to the letter and spirit of the law and limit individual loans to not in excess of $300. R. F. Hartz, of Indianapolis, who spoke on the "Indianapolis Credit Exchange," described in detail the organization of that exchange and its practical workings.

Dr. Louis N. Robinson, of Swarthmore, Pennsylvania, formerly of the chair of economics and later Chief Probation Officer of the Philadelphia Municipal Court, the largest court of its kind in the country, reported on the results of a survey he made of the small loan business throughout the country. In formulating his plans for the survey, he said, he considered it should show what sort of men are engaged in the small loan business and what kind of persons constitute their clientele. The results of the survey convinced him, he said in the first place, that wonderful progress had been made in the business and that its personnel was such that the men engaged in it could welcome inquiry into their operations.

The survey had demonstrated, he declared, the need for more comprehensive historical data on the small loan business for the information and guidance of those who sought by study of it to solve the problems confronting it. In the second place, he said, his investigation of the borrowing class served by lenders had shown that the uninformed public estimate of them was erroneous, that they were on the contrary men and women of honor and character and of ability in their own lines of work.

Dr. Robinson urged the need of a codification of the laws regulating the small loan business and the necessity of facing the problem of justifying their interest rates before the public, using a basis of facts, not opinions, and showing by analysis that the scientific rate is an equitable rate. This, he said, would do more to place the small loan business on the plane on which it properly belongs than any other course.

Miss Caro D. Coombs, of the Russell Sage Foundation, described the origin, mode of operation and growth of credit unions. Miss Coombs said that, while she believed the credit union movement would spread, she did not consider that it could ever supplant the usual commercial lending agency.

William Hirsch, manager of the Federated Loan Association of Philadelphia, a semi-philanthropic organization, Col. Hodson and Dr. Robinson took part in a discussion of Miss Coombs' paper which was received with every evidence of interest by those who heard it read.

Philadelphia's census of deadbeats was estimated at 32,000, in the address of Henry H. Smith, secretary of the Retail Merchants' Bureau of the Philadelphia Chamber of Commerce, before the American Industrial Lenders' Association in convention at the Hotel Pennsylvania Thursday afternoon. Mr. Smith added, however, that he had learned from the same source that the number of dope fiends in Philadelphia totaled 30,000, which possibly accounted for all but 2,000 of the total of dead beats.

Mr. Smith's statistics on "skips," as the dead beat is known in the terminology of the small loan business, were given in the course of his talk on the elimination of duplication of loans, wherein he described the system of the exchange of information in operation by which the dishonest borrower is detected or circumvented.

"How to Bring About a Full and Favorable Understanding of Our Business by the Public" was discussed by M. L. Dobyns, of Philadelphia, who emphasized the value of personal contact and a full and free discussion of all phases of the money lending business by those engaged in it. Making known the true conditions in the business and showing how loans may be made with profit to both contracting parties in the transaction, he said, were two prime methods of engendering a better public opinion.

Publicity was described by F. Eugene Ackerman of New York in his talk on "Public Relations" as an "industry in itself which more than any other single activity furnishes the motive power that propels all other industries toward success. He said that publicity alone sold over $7,000,000,000 worth of Liberty Bonds, created a League of Nations and "awakened the aspirations of millions of nationals who were under alien domination."

A. G. Zimmerman of Newark, N.J, read a paper on "Getting Favorable Publicity." Legitimate money lending, he declared, is made possible only by the operation of far sighted loan legislation. He urged the convention to strive to secure the maximum publicity for their business, and praised the work of the Russell Sage Foundation in endeavoring to educate the states to pass proper legislation.

Dr. J.J. Genthner of the Legal Reform Bureau defended the justice of the three and one half per cent rate on unpaid balances. This he declared is not forty-two per cent a year but actually amounts to about two per cent a month. The next step forward, he said, is to educate the public through a campaign of publicity to understand the nature of the small loan business. The members of the association, he said, had nothing to hide about their business and could afford to lay all their cards on the table.

The industrial lender was portrayed in the role of a doctor of social relations by J. E. Ryan of Detroit. "We have a grave responsibility," he said, "when we make a loan to a husband or wife, and agree to keep it a secret from the other. There is usually some indiscretion behind their need for money which will come out if a pinch comes and the borrower is unable to meet his payments. The happiness of the family may be wrecked. It is our aim to make only loans that will be constructive in character and make for the happiness of the family."

The money lending business was described as one of selling service in the address of W. H. Patterson, of Columbus, Ohio, and he declared the way to get and keep business was to advertise and to tell the truth in the advertisements. Great emphasis was placed on the value of courtesy in dealing with clients, and he added that the mere "dollar chaser" does not render "adequate service and cannot survive."

The afternoon session closed with a general discussion on two set topics: Can Loans of $25 or Less be Made at a Profit at the Uniform Rate? and What Should the Average Loan Be?

The annual dinner of the Association was held Thursday night in the grand ball room of the Hotel Pennsylvania. The tables for the diners were arranged on either side of a cleared space immediately in front of the dais on which was the speakers' table. Those seated at this table were Dr. Robinson, Dr. John M. Glenn, General Director of the Russell Sage Foundation; R. M. Rutherford, of New York; C. H. Watts of Philadelphia; Dr. Charles R. Brown D. D., Dean of the School of Divinity Yale University; Frank H. Pope, Boston Superintendent of Loan Agencies, Massachusetts; Arthur H. Ham, of New York; and Judge James S. Baldwin, of Illinois.

While dinner was being served an excellent vaudeville program was being given on the cleared space in front of the speakers' table and between the numbers and the courses guests danced to the strain of an excellent jazz orchestra. There were about 400 diners present and a large number of them enjoyed the dancing.

C. H. Watts was the toastmaster and his expansive good humor, witty sallies and happy introductions of the speakers of the evening radiated to the diners and added greatly to the enjoyment of the evening's program of good cheer and speeches. The programs were attractive examples of the printer's art in brown, with half tone reproductions of Dr. Glenn and the Hotel Pennsylvania as frontispieces, a list of the speakers of the evening, the national officers and the committee members.

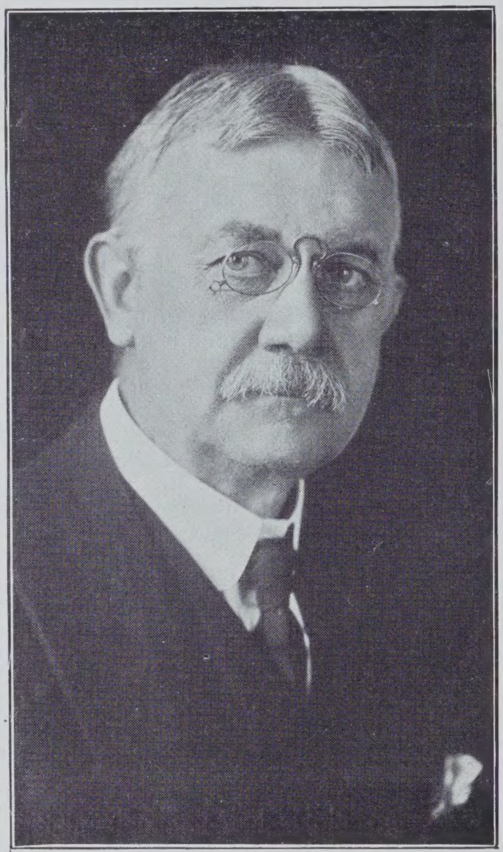
During the dinner and before the first speaker had been called upon Will Hays, formerly Postmaster General and now head of the motion picture industry of the United States, entered the ball room with C. H. Stratton, a life long friend, and was escorted to Mr. Stratton's table where he warmly greeted Edgar P. East, of New York, another friend of long standing. It was shortly before ten o'clock before the speaking began and the program of speeches was finished before midnight, when dancing was resumed.

R. M. Rutherford, speaking on the subject "Our Ladies," said in part:

"If in the beginning Paradise was lost through the evil counsel of our maternal ancestor, it is only through woman's guiding influence that it may be regained. The ideal woman is happy in girlhood, contented in wifehood, and glorified in motherhood. She is proud to be a woman—she does not want to be a man. She has wisdom, understanding and intuition. In every crisis her husband is guided by her instinct. She has character. She secretly molds the nature of her children. She is the power behind each one of them. She is the flowering rosebush in times of pleasure; she is a tower of strength in times of trouble. It is she who makes the home, and in motherhood fulfills the holiest end of her existence. Without her, man would be rude, rough, solitary, and would ignore all the graces which are but the smiles of her love."

Speaking of "The Sage Foundation in the Small Loan Field," Dr. John M. Glenn, General Director, among other things said:

"The day has come—not just recently, but for some time now—when the Sage Foundation and the Industrial Lenders are working for one and the same object, namely, to give the facilities that are needed for loans to small borrowers in a fair and reasonable way. There is one thing that I like very much about the situation, and that is that you frankly are in the business commercially. There is no foolish talk about philanthropy. You are in the business as a banker is in the business and as other people are in business, frankly to make money, and at the same time, to benefit the community and benefit the individuals who come in contact with you." . . .



Dr. John M. Glenn.

"I don't know in all our deals at the Sage Foundation — we certainly have found no set of men who are as willing to question and investigate themselves and know what they ought to do and try to find out what the right thing to do is than you. Therefore, I esteem it a real honor to have been able to come here and be with you to-night, and I want to express to you my heartiest sympathy with your efforts and my thorough belief in you."

After many attempts, C. H. Stratton succeeded in having that busy man, Will Hays, address the banquet. After a number of witty stories and an appeal for the moving picture industry, the ex-Postmaster-General gave this optimistic slant in his address:

"In spite of all the winds that have been blowing, in spite of all the strikes, if you will, we are right now entering and have entered into the greatest era of expansion and prosperity the country has ever seen. We all have known that it was coming. The only question was—when? Well, I say to you men of business, it is time to go out and meet it. I realize fully the difficulties, but I have no use for commercial slackers and I cry continually for the common sense of courage and confidence. It is time, my friends, I say again, to lay bricks and not throw them, in this country. Some responsibility on everybody. It is all ahead of us. We need have no concern."

Frank H. Pope, Supervisor of Loan Agencies of Massachusetts, in his talk "Stray Thoughts," after reciting a number of boyhood experiences in a humorous vein, paused to say:

"I never dreamed that the time would come when I would have the licensed money-lending agencies of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts under my thumb, and I hasten to assure you that that thumb is not being overworked, for the simple reason that 98 per cent of them are carrying on their business exactly as it should be conducted and their fidelity to the laws of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts and their allegiance to the rules and regulations of my office does not admit of any adverse criticism. I suppose I might have said 100 per cent, Mr. Toastmaster, but I naturally am a little modest and am not going to claim perfection, and certainly one ought to have at least 2 per cent to come and go on.

"How quickly you can catch on to that idea of a per cent, and I suppose that in order to be in strict conformity with the Small Loans Law I ought to say 3½ per cent, but, Mr. Toastmaster, the men identified with the business, with whom I have come in contact, both within and without my state, in my estimation represent as high a standard of business integrity as any other corresponding number of men in business and professional channels and I care not what the character of that calling or that profession may be, and I assure you that it is to me a source of great gratification that I am brought in contact, officially, and have business relationship with that class of men" . . .

"The objects and purposes of this Association have been emphasized many times in the course of the last two days. I have heard several gentlemen interested in your activities declare that as recently as ten years ago such a gathering as this in the United States would have been an utter impossibility, for the simple reason that the light had not shown.

"You know we have many problems, many mighty and vexatious questions which confront us as individuals, as an organization, as a state, as a nation, and which puzzle the world. The great majority of the people don't think of these great questions at all. A large number think at them. Once in a while you will find a person who thinks up to them, and occasionally one thinks into them, and suddenly the world receives a mighty shock. There has been a clarification of the situation. The opaque becomes transparent not because people have thought at the proposition, not because they have thought up to it, not because they have thought into it, but because some individual with marked mental penetrating power has thought completely through it, and it is by that process and by that process alone that the progress of the world has been made.

"You had not made that progress a few years ago. Some of you had been thinking at it and up to it, but I believe that it remained for the honored and honorable gentleman on my left, Mr. Arthur Ham to be the first individual in this country who has seen through the proposition and let in the light.

"You are now basking in that light, and let me offer as a final thought that the time may not be far distant when (and I can see it gradually approaching) you can say as the result of your earnest, united, co-operative efforts that at last the ideal which we hoped for has become real and the real is ideal."

In discussing "Human Relations in Industry," Dr. Charles R. Brown, Dean of the Yale Divinity School, made a masterly address in which he emphasized the adoption of the Golden rule in all kinds of business, and led up to the following close-up experience which indicated his understanding of by-gone conditions:

"I have been glad to come here tonight to speak to these men and to look into your faces. I have never before addressed an audience of men engaged in loaning to industrial people. I was a pastor for twenty-two years and for fifteen years of that time, pastor of a large city church, with over 1900 members, and a great many working people, and a great many poor people. I went into their homes and they told me their troubles because I was their pastor and I knew something about their financial distress and I was brought in contact with some of those men whom you are seeking to root out of your profession. I gained an impression there of their methods that has been with me during all these years.

"Let me give you a single instance of the sort of thing that you are combatting here at this convention and in your own several communities because you stand for the finer methods in your endeavors to stamp it out. I was once told about a woman who lived over a grocery store. I knew the man who kept the store. This woman was in trouble and asked if I could come over. I went up (she was crying) and she told me her story very quickly. She said, 'My husband was killed in an accident a number of years ago . I was left a young widow with three children. About a year after my husband was killed, I had the misfortune to be in a street car accident myself and I lost a leg. Now I am lame and have to walk with this artificial leg, but I did know how to teach music and I have been supporting myself and my children by teaching music. Three or four years ago one of my children was very ill and the doctor's and nurse's bill (for I had to go on with my work) got me in debt. I went to a man who makes loans to people who haven't credit or security here and I borrowed a hundred dollars. He charged me twelve per cent. interest a month—144 per cent. a year—and I have been struggling for three years now to pay off that debt. In that time I have paid him the principal three times over and a lot of interest and I still owe him one hundred dollars as well as being back on my interest.'

"I sat and listened to her story. She brought out the receipts and gave me the facts, and when I heard that story, I wasn't as Shakespeare says, 'morally indignant'—I was just plain mad. I went to see that man in his office and we sat down man to man and we talked it over. I gave him these facts. He admitted they were all true.

"'Now,' I said, 'there is that woman crippled by the loss of a leg, lost her husband, supporting herself in an honest way teaching music and supporting those three children. You already have your money back three times over and a good interest besides and she still owes you one hundred dollars. I think the best thing you can do is to write across the fact of that note, 'Paid in full,' and give it to me and let me take it to the woman.' He refused.

"'Well,' I said, 'I am going to do this: I am going to stand up in my pulpit next Sunday in the presence of 1,400 people and I am going to give them these facts and I am going to give them your name and your address.'

"'Oh,' he said, 'You won't do that.'"

"I was mad enough and I would have done it. I learned afterwards what I didn't know at the time, that his wife and two daughters attended our church. They were not members but came there and they would have been there to hear that thing said.

"He said, 'Let me think it over for a day.'

"Next day I got that note written across the fact of it, 'Paid in full,' and I took it to that woman.

"That is the kind of a man for which you men have no use and that is the kind of a man who has brought discredit upon the honorable business in which you are engaged, and I take it that you are meeting here in convention in order that those ideals and those principles that are necessary shall be carried out. They are necessary in carrying on a business for which there is a demand, (because there comes a time when people who haven't credit to borrow at the banks must have money to carry on their business) in such a way that it too shall be a profession, a social utility, a means of rendering service to the needs of human society, and to a convention like this, I feel very proud to be invited."

At Friday's morning session A. C. Broughman, of Marion, Ind., and C. R. Napier, of Chicago, discussed "Ways and Means of Educating Public Opinion to the Justification of the Uniform Rate."

"Lenders in the past have been looked upon by many well meaning people in the community as a species of highwaymen," declared Mr. Broughman. "As the public has become more informed of the nature of the business and the states have regulated the rate of interest the business has gained recognition as a necessary part of the economic life of the country. It is no longer looked upon as a 'bad man's business.' A small lender is an optimist—else he would not be one."

That the regulation of the small loan business by the state government has raised the business of money lending to the status of a legitimate and recognized branch of financing serving a real social need was the opinion expressed by Mr. Napier. "Small borrowers are not paupers as so many people think," he said. "Most of them are comfortably situated, except in times of stress, such as unemployment. The small loan banker is a family friend to whom many go for counsel and advice in the family affairs."

E. F. Moore of Philadelphia delivered an address on the necessity of uplifting and dignifying the small loan business by scrupulous observance of the highest code of business ethics by members of the association.

Emphasis was laid by several speakers on the inadvisability of making socalled confidential loans, loans made to a husband or wife without the knowledge of the other. The indiscretions back of those applications usually come to light, it was pointed out, and their disclosure leads to the break-up of the family in many instances.

A manager's meeting preceded the regular afternoon session Friday, after which the set programme was carried out. J. J. Wood, of Baltimore, discussed "Increased Office Efficiency on Less Man-Power," showing how a careful and business like study of methods could reduce overhead without any losses, but on the contrary with a positive gain in the amount and quality of service rendered by the office staff. "Thought Force as a Dynamic Power Applied to our Business" was a scholarly and interesting paper by A. S. Edwards of Waterbury, Conn., which demonstrated the place of psychology in the money lending business. Tate J. Harrison, of Waterloo, Iowa, held the interest of his hearers with his forceful and characteristic statement of the advantages to be gained by attending a national convention.

With the conclusion of the set papers of the afternoon a general discussion was held. Referring to the problem of financing wage earners made idle by the coal mine, railroad and textile strikes, William Young, manager of the Community Finance Company, of Philadelphia, said:

"When the strike began the miners and railway men had plenty of money. At first they took the strike as a joke. Many went out and bought automobiles and took their families on tour. Three months later they were selling their autos. During the last month of the strike there was a decided drop in payments on loans. Especially favorable terms were made by the small loan companies to miners and railway shopmen and instead of suffering losses on account of the strikes the small lenders have made friends."

In line with the discussion of the problem of financing the wage earners in districts affected by protracted strikes, the convention went exhaustively into the questions of the demand and supply for small loans, the question of the extent to which a company can force issue on a note or conditional bill of sale, whether force should be used to close an account, the need for adequate wage assignment laws, credit exchanges, and an improved system of transferring accounts.

The closing session of the convention Saturday morning was given over to the disposal of unfinished business and the nomination and election of officers and chairmen of standing committees. The following national officers were elected: National Chairman, R. M. Rutherford, New York; National Secretary, G. W. Kehr, Harrisburg, Pa.; National Treasurer, W. A. Zumpfe, Indianapolis, Ind.

The chairmen of standing committees elected were: Finance, W. P. Woll, Chicago; Legislation, C. H. Watts, Philadelphia; Publicity, George Hodson, New York; Auditing, J. S. Edge, Richmond, Va.; Law, F. R. Hubachek, Minneapolis; Membership, Tate J. Harrison, Waterloo, Iowa. Pennsylvania was announced as the winner of the trophy awarded to the state with the largest percentage of its members in attendance at the convention. The winning percentage was 77%, the same as Illinois had last year when it won the cup. New Jersey was a close second with 70% of its members present. The rest of the states lined up with the following percentages; Massachusetts, 66; Maryland, 58; Connecticut, 54; Illinois, 32; Rhode Island, 28; Kentucky, 25; Michigan, 25; Virginia, 21; Indiana, 20; West Virginia, 20; Ohio, 16; Georgia, 14; Iowa, 8.

To the Members of the American Industrial Lenders' Association:

Now that our eighth annual convention has passed into history, and the most of us have returned to our accustomed tasks, I shall take this opportunity to urge upon each member the importance of using every means within his reach to maintain and strengthen the position we have gained.

It has been said that few industrial movements have made such rapid strides and won such favorable recognition in so short a time as that of the Industrial Lender—the business of providing financial assistance to the worthy borrower in his time of need. Our business, as now conducted, is not only a business, it is a social service, which is receiving the approval and commendation of well informed and unprejudiced people everywhere. We have overcome almost insurmountable obstacles and are gradually breaking down the deep-seated prejudice of centuries. With each passing day the position of the Industrial Lender as an economic force in this country is increasing; and our recent convention will carry this position a long distance ahead.

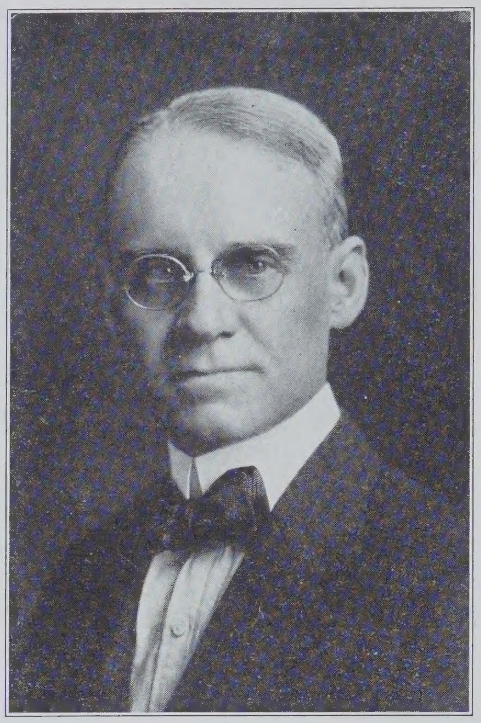
It is therefore our duty and our opportunity to think of our work in larger terms than merely as a means for personal gain.

In assuming the Chairmanship of our National body permit me to urge upon each member the importance of harmony within our own ranks. We cannot all think alike—we may differ on many subjects, but let us discuss these differences in a friendly spirit. Let all criticism be constructive and for the mutual benefit of all. Let us have keen competition, but let that competition be friendly and clean; and let us at all times give credit to whom credit is due.

Our association, in its short life, has made wonderful progress and has taken favorable rank with other business organizations of much longer standing; but the gratifying position we now hold may be maintained only by watching our own steps, observing the Golden Rule, and practicing a general policy of mutual helpfulness. Our weak members need encouragement and our strong ones should be tolerant and always ready to extend a helping hand.

We must not only maintain the position we have won, but we must progress, and to do that, each individual member must do his part in upholding the principles of the constitution to which we have all subscribed.

Cordially yours,
R. M. Rutherford,
National Chairman.



R. M. Rutherford.
Elected National Chairman.

VIRGINIA.

The regular quarterly meeting of the Virginia Association was held September 15, 1922, at the banquet hall, Virginian Hotel, Lynchburg, Virginia.

Immediately following a luncheon at 2:30 P. M., upon invitation by Chairman Pope, several short talks were given by D. B. Ryland, business manager of the Lynchburg Chamber of Commerce, Attorney R. C. Blackford and J. O. Cundiff, of Lynchburg, the business session was called to order at 3:30 P. M. by Chairman Pope.

Chairman Pope reported that the paper on publicity which was to be drafted and submitted to Bank Examiner, Richardson, for his approval before placing with the leading newspapers for publication; had not been completed but was being prepared and would be submitted to each member of the Association as soon as ready for publication.

Treasurer Edge reported a balance of $121.50 on hand with all bills paid.

The recent resignation of former secretary Keiss and the absence of complete reports, C. M. Garrett, acting secretary, had no report to make.

The Chair announced that on account of the resignation of Secretary Keiss which had been accepted; nominations for secretary were in order. Mr. Seay nominated C. M. Garrett, nomination was seconded and upon motion regularly made, seconded and carried Mr. Garrett was elected by consent.

Mr. Seay reported the practice in Richmond of a Money Lender buying time by advancing money on wage assignment at a rate of interest much in excess of the Uniform Act. Mr. Pope cited concerns operating similar in Georgia, and made a motion to appoint a committee to investigate the question and secure data to place before the Banking Commissioner for action, this motion was overruled. Motions by Mr. Herbert, of Norfolk to employ an attorney to investigate and report his findings to the banking department, motion was seconded and upon vote carried. Mr. Pope was elected as a committee of one to employ Attorney R. W. Carrington to secure evidence and report his findings, also give an opinion as to the legality of the question raised.

Mr. Stran of Lynchburg stated that his office was making a test case of the effect of the Bankrupt Act on wage assignments when the assignment had not been presented for collection before the petition is made. Mr. Pope made a motion that the Association assist in defraying the expenses of making this test. The motion was seconded and upon vote carried.

Mr. Pope spoke at length concerning the advisability of the adoption of uniform papers to be used in the offices of members of the Virginia Association, assuring the advisability of adopting this plan at an early date.

The Chair announced that nominations were in order for a delegate to the National Convention. Mr. Seay nominated J. S. Edge, the nomination was duly seconded and upon vote Mr. Edge was elected to represent the Association at the National Convention.

Treasurer Edge was instructed to pay a bill of $56.75 for the luncheon and $5.70 for stationary and printing.

Upon motion regularly made, seconded and carried, Richmond was selected as the place for our next meeting, to be held Thursday, January 18, 1923. This will be our annual meeting for election of officers for the Association for the ensuing year. Mr. L. E. Seay and Mr. J. S. Edge were appointed an entertainment committee to make all arrangements for the next meeting at Richmond.

The Chair appointed the following members to draft an article covering the banquet and association meeting and placing it in the paper in their cities: J. S. Edge, Richmond, F. J. Haflin, Portsmouth, R. W. Herbert, Norfolk, J. B. Herbert, Roanoke, F. P. Stran and C. M. Garrett, Lynchburg.

Mr. Pope on behalf of the members thanked the entertainment committee for the splendid program and the manner in which the banquet and meeting was handled.

Visitors present were, D. B. Ryland, manager of the Chamber of Commerce, Attorney R. C. Blackford and J. O. Cundiff. Members present, L. E. Pope, J. S. Edge, F. P. Stran, J. B. Herbert, R. W. Herbert, F. J. Haflin, and L. E. Seay.

There being no further business the meeting was adjourned at 5:40 P. M.

We wish to thank the following for making the meeting a success:

Mr. D. B. Ryland for his excellent talk on the special need which was being met by the Small Lender in creating a banking home for the class of people who otherwise would not be served.

Mr. J. O. Cundiff for his excellent talk on the service rendered by the small lender for those who formerly had no method to secure loans.

The secretary feels assured that a desirable class of publicity has been spread by the meeting of the Association at Lynchburg, as many of our industrial lenders and as well as influential citizens have been interested in the activities of the small lender and the Association's work here.

It is the desire of the executive committee and all members of the Association that every member put forth his best efforts to make the next meeting at Richmond the biggest and best yet.

C. M. GARRETT,
Secretary.

SMALL TOWN LENDERS NOTICE.

In connection with the survey of the small loan business as outlined before the New York Convention, I am anxious to get in touch with lenders, particularly lenders in small towns, who are willing to coöperate to the extent of filling out a questionnaire relating to the borrower. Would be pleased to have any lender so inclined write me about the matter.

LOUIS N. ROBINSON,
Swarthmore, Pa.

LENDERS HAVE BAKE.

FIFTEEN MEMBERS OF STATE ASSOCIATION AT FORT PHOENIX.

Fifteen members of the Massachusetts Industrial Lenders' Association joined in an outing, clambake, and business session at Fort Phoenix, September 6th electing delegates to the National Convention in New York, and discussing business methods among lenders.

Since its organization, the Association has met in Boston, but this year the lure of the clams brought members from Fall River and from as far as Springfield to New Bedford and the Fort. A New Bedford man, H. J. Desormaux, is secretary of the State Association.

Leaving the Cummings Building in machines of the members, the party reached Fort Phœnix at 1:30, just as the fireworks were commencing in the Whitfield Pavilion. With the last lobster vanquished, the gathering resolved itself into a business discussion group.

Methods of conducting business among certain money lenders occupied the attention of the business session, and became the center of significant discussion. It was determined that necessary steps would be taken to prevent any member of the Association's operating in defiance of lenders' laws.

H. J. Desormaux, of New Bedford, was one of the five delegates elected yesterday from Massachusetts to the four-day National Convention at the Hotel Pennsylvania, in New York, the latter part of this month. Every licensed lender in the United States will be represented there; more than 1,000 delegates are expected. The Massachusetts delegation comprises: W. E. Pool, of Boston; D. J. Who'ey, of Lowell; George R. Alcott, of Boston; H. B. Bumsted, of Worcester; and Mr. Desormaux.

MAILING LIST HOUSES BEWARE!

The list of stockholders of a corporation is the property of the corporation and cannot be sold to outsiders for the purpose of circularization, according to a ruling by Supreme Court Justice Lehman yesterday. Justice Lehman granted an injunction to the International Mercantile Marine Company restraining William Jones, Auditors, Inc., from offering the list of International Marine stockholders for sale.—New York Times, July 20, 1922.

SMITH'S "FACTS ABOUT THE SMALL LOAN BUSINESS."

Last month we sent out to each of our members without charge, a copy of the mater work by Reginald Heber Smith of the Boston Bar, "The Facts About the Small Loan Business And the Scientific Rate of Fair Charges," and without solicitation on our part, orders were received from the following:

Omaha Loan Co., Omaha, Neb., 200 copies; Union Loan Co., Greensburg, Pa., 4 copies; State Loan Co., Galesburg, Ill., 50 copies; National Loan Co., Springfield, Mass., 12 copies.

It appears that the above industrial lenders appreciate something good when they see and read it, and that they are willing to do some educational work in their community for the good of their business. If there are any others who would like additional copies of Mr. Smith's work, we will be pleased to send the number of copies ordered at the rate of 10 cents each.

DELINQUENT MEMBERS.

According to the National Secretary's records, there are still a few more members delinquent in the payment of their dues which were payable August 1st, and from whom we hope to receive checks before November 1st, as we would like to include their names in the directory of members which will be published in the 1922 Year Book. If you happen to be one of these, please send us a check at once as we will print only the names of members in good standing in the directory.

1922 YEAR BOOK.

Work has been started on the preparation of the 1922 Year Book, which will include the proceedings of the Eighth Annual National Convention held in New York, September 20th-23d. The papers read and the speeches made, all of which were very interesting, will be included, as well as other important information.

WAYS TO LOCATE A SKIP.

The demand for that little booklet, "Ways to Locate a Skip" contiues and the authors who are too modest to divulge their names, have long since become famous. As an evidence of appreciation, note the following calls for the booklet during the past month.

H. H. Viert, Columbia Discount Co., Portland, Ore., on September 22d, wrote, "I enclose ten cents in stamps for copy of booklet 'Ways to Locate a Skip,' and on September 28th, a request was received from the Peoples Loan Association, Providence, R. I. in which they said, "Enclosed find 10 cents postage for another 'Ways to Locate a Skip.'

On September 29th, Employees Loan Society, Duluth, Minn., wrote "We inclose ten cents in stamps for which we would like to have you to be kind enough to forward us another copy of your booklet, 'Ways to Locate a Skip.'

Dr. J. L. Higbie, Jenera, O., wrote us on September 22d, "I enclose check for a year's subscription to the INDUSTRIAL LENDERS NEWS and a copy of 'Ways to Locate a Skip.'

Reliance Loan Co., Duluth, Minn. said in theirs of September 15th, "Enclosed find 10 cents in stamps. Kindly send us a copy of your booklet, 'Ways to Locate a Skip.' "

American Finance Co., Danville, Ill., under date of September 16th, wrote, "Find enclosed twenty cents in stamps for your book 'Ways to Locate a Skip.' From what I can read your book is ten cents but I am sending twenty to insure postage, etc."

This from F. A. Phillips, manager, Provident Loan Society, Rochester, N. Y., under date of September 13th, "I would appreciate it very much if you would forward me three copies of the 'Ways to Locate a Skip.' "

The Globe Security and Loan Co., Louisville, Ky., The American Loan Association, Manchester, N. H.; Chas. Dohrmann, Chicago, Ill.; Beneficial Loan Society New Britain, Conn.; E. E. Stiles, Robinson, Ill.; Personal Loan Society of Baltimore; Portland Loan Co., Portland, Ore.; C. C. Wollerman, Jr., Cleveland, O.; Mrs. Amelia R. Y.; W. J. Stoddart, Chicago, Ill.; Security Loan Co., Nashua, N. H.; Provident Loan Society, Salt Lake City, Utah; V. D. Moss, Philadelphia and Beneficial Loan Society, Harrisburg, Pa. were among others who applied for one or more copies of this valuable booklet.

There are still a few copies left which we will be glad to send to others as long as they last at 10 cents per copy.

NEXT NATIONAL CONVENTION.

During the eighth annual national convention, Tate J. Harrison, Waterloo, Iowa, extended an invitation to hold the ninth annual national convention in Des Moines Iowa, in September, 1923. No action was taken at the time and the matter is now up to the national executive committee which will be pleased to receive other invitations before voting on the question. Please address all invitations to the National Secretary.

MARYLAND.

The September Meeting of the Maryland Industrial Lenders Association was held on the 12th, at 8 p. m., in the Board Room of the Merchants and Manufacturers Association.

In the absence of the secretary, Mr. E. E. Hougham of the Coöperative Loan and Investment Co., acted as secretary.

The minutes of the meeting show that there were present, M. J. M. Gomeringer, of Chester, Pa.; L. H. Pumphrey, of the Commercial Guarantee Co.; J. J. Wood, of the Community Finance Service Co.; E. E. Hougham, Coöperative Loan and Investment Co.; W. J. Oliver, Jr., of the Household Loan Co.; R. L. Ryan, Lend-U-Money Bankers; E. S. Armstrong, National Equitable Investment Co.; H. H. Larsen, Peoples Loan Society; R. L. Smith, Reliance Guarantee Co.; R. A. Long, Surety Guarantee Co.; J. D. Goldrick, Union Loan Co. and H. T. Mattingly.

Upon motion by Mr. Hougham, seconded by Mr. Mattingly that the association change their advertisement in the Baltimore Magazine, so as to present a clear vision of our business to the business men of our city. This matter being acted upon favorably, and referred to the Executive Committee who were instructed to draw up the ad, and immediately insert same in the next issue of the Baltimore Magazine.

Upon motion of Mr. Mattingly, seconded by Mr. Pumphrey, Mr. J. J. Wood was elected delegate to the convention, Mr. Hougham as alternate. It was recommended that an invitation be extended to Mr. Howard Bryant to attend the convention as our guest.

Upon motion by Mr. Mattingly, seconded by Mr. Pumphrey, Mr. Larsen was appointed a committee of one to obtain the application of the United Finance Co. of this city as a member of our association, and report the result of his efforts at our next meeting.

A lengthly discussion took place upon the goodness of the resolutions passed by the Ohio Association, and upon motion by Mr. Mattingly, seconded by Mr. Pumphrey, the Maryland Association recorded a vote favoring the said resolutions of the Ohio Association, and the secretary was instructed to write Judge Dyer to this effect.

There being no further business to transact, the meeting adjourned until Tuesday evening, 8 o'clock, October 10th.

It is hoped that each member will be present at each session throughout the fall and winter months, and come with the thought that you are one of the spokes in the wheel, and be prepared to take an active part, as we contemplate on having some very interesting papers read by live wires also lively discussions upon many phases of our business, therefore you will derive benefit of untold value by being present at each meeting. The secretary is looking forward to all members being present at our next meeting.

ILLINOIS.

The next quarterly meeting of the I. I. L. A. will be held at the Morrison Hotel, Chicago, Friday afternoon and evening, October 27th.

W. G. Wood.
Retiring National Chairman.

Regrets were expressed by everyone attending the National Convention on account of the inability of Mr. Wood to be present, due to serious illness. For a number of months, Mr. Wood has been fighting for health and according to his own words, his absence from the big convention was the greatest disappointment of his life. Only positive orders from his physician prevented him from waving aside his physical handicap and venturing forth. Though absent in body for the first time since the American Industrial Lenders Association was organized in Philadelphia, April 1916, he was present in spirit and by correspondence. He designated R. M. Rutherford to preside in his absence, and suggested a line of procedure which evidenced his knowledge of what was to be done.

The Convention directed the secretary to wire its regrets and express the hope that his recovery to normal health may not long be delayed.

The American Industrial Lenders Association can boast of no finer men nor any who have labored more devotedly and unselfishly for the success of its principles than Watkins G. Wood. May he live long and prosper, and may we soon see him back in the harness again!

CONVENTION NEWS.

The resolutions offered by Messrs. Gifford, Dyer and Anderson of the O. L. A. printed in our September issue as well as the one respecting a change in the dues of the A. I. L. A. were declared out of order because they had not been submitted in accordance with the provisions of the Constitution and By-laws.

HONORS FOR HARBISON.

The National Executive Committee has unanimously elected Mr. L. C. Harbison, 81 East Madison St., Chicago, National Councillor in the U. S. Chamber of Commerce. The A. I. L. A. by increased membership and revenue now has two votes in the National Chamber on all questions.

CONVENTION ECHOES.

Chicago, October 5, 1922.

Dear Mr. Kehr:

I feel that you as one of the very active, energetic and hard working members of the Executive Committee are entitled to much credit for the success of the recent National Convention and no one should hesitate in saying so.

Those of us who have gone through the experience of conducting a convention and trying to make it a big affair realize, of course, exactly the amount of work and energy required to accomplish the purpose.

The New York Convention was, indeed, in every sense, a success and I was so absorbed in the whole affair that I was only out of the hotel one evening during the four day period.

I have heard a great many complimentary remarks and no one seems to harbor a regret for having made the trip to New York. It would be impossible for any person interested in the business to attend a convention and not pick up many valuable ideas, which after all is the strong argument for and in favor of organization meetings.

In thinking over the many subjects talked about, I have decided that each man in the business should take a greater responsibility in respect to doing individual educational work and with that in mind, I am going to ask you to send me a sample of the various booklets and literature about which you spoke, saying that you had a liberal supply on your shelves.

I want to start out with about 300 of each of three or four booklets and rotate them each month by putting them in the mail and handing them out at the window. Please advise me as to the cost and let me have samples at your convenience and greatly oblige.

Very truly yours,
L. T. Baker, Secretary I. I. L. A.

INDIANA.

In its "Letter on General Business Conditions" for October, 1922, the First National Bank of Fort Wayne, has the following to say under the caption, "Loan Associations":

"If all the loan associations in the country were of the type represented by the well-managed loan associations of Fort Wayne, the net results would be highly gratifying. There is a real need for safe and well conducted organizations of this kind, as they fill a want which is difficult to provide for as well in any other way. The business for these companies has been increasing from year to year and the character of the accounts handled shows that these organizations are of great service to the public. This type of borrowing supplies an economic need of large proportions. The outlook for this class of lending associations is good and the indications favor their consistent advancement."

NEW VICE CHAIRMAN.

Mr. C. E. Reed, manager of the Peoples Provident Loan Association, 203 Coleman Building, Louisville, Ky. was recently elected by ballot by the members in unorganized territory to be their representative in the National Council.

HOW I LOOK UP AND JUDGE AN OLD CUSTOMER APPLICATION.

GEORGE W. CURRY.

"Fools rush in where angels fear to tread." Having accepted the assignment to prepare a short paper on the subject, "How I look up and judge an old customer," I seriously questioned the wisdom of my decision when I tried to put my thoughts on paper. That the once good, old customer gone bad is responsible for, if he is not the chief source of a large portion, not only the losses, but also and principally, of most of our worries, annoyance and expense, I feel certain most Loan Men will concede. If this is true the condition is one for which we are more to blame than the customer, for it is a condition which we can to a great extent correct, if not entirely eliminate.

We, and by we I mean the managers as well as the investigators, are inclined to take too much for granted in the cases of loans to old customers. Because of the fact that previous loan or loans were paid promptly, and in view of the customers' need for quick service, the present status of the borrower is not investigated further than to the extent of questions asked at time of making renewal. The information secured and important facts disclosed in investigations made on occasional applications of old customers, whose previous records, as shown by our books, entitled them to credit, were at times so startling, and so at variance with our judgment of the customer as formed by the original look-up and from personal observation in the office, that I have been convinced we cannot intelligently pass on the application of an old customer without checking up his or her condition from time to time.

To-day I make it a rule to pass no application for a loan to an old customer unless I have before me the report of an investigation made not more than one year before. Sometimes, of course, a report even a year old may be of little value. The investigation of an old customer in many respects, should be as thorough as that of a new applicant. I cite one instance to illustrate. Recently a couple who had dealt with us for some years, and whose dealings always had been A-1, applied for a substantial increase in their loan. After the payment of the balance of the loan they then had, which by the way I invariably insist upon, I took their application for the larger loan and gave it to one of our men for investigation. The report showed that the wife was piling up a lot of bills of which the husband had no knowledge; that collectors were continually running to the house and few gaining admittance; that she was running around quite a bit. This condition had been of rather recent beginning so that our previous report did not give this information to help us in passing judgment. I need not say that we did not make this loan. This is not an exceptional case, and I venture to say all offices have had similar experiences. The careful recheck look-up will often help us to turn down an account at the psychological moment.

In referring to "How I look up an old customer's application" I take it for granted you mean how I have my outside man look it up. Speaking from that standpoint, in the first place I insist on their getting reports from at least three merchants and two neighbors, as I have found in many instances an outside man is too apt to jump at conclusions. If the first merchant interviewed tells him that "so and so is no good, owes me a bill and I cannot collect it," he might take it for granted that the customer is bad without giving him the benefit of the doubt, and recommend that he be turned down. For this reason I insist upon his going further, getting all the information he can, and then leave it to me to decide whether to make the loan or not. We who have had experience on the outside know for a fact that ofttimes a merchant gives a party a "black eye" just because that party would not pay him a small bill, and further inquiry may show that the refusal to pay is due to some dispute over an acutal or imaginary overcharge by the merchant, and this often occurs, especially in cases where the customer is running a book account at a store. Sometimes the merchant has him charged for something that the customer does not have on his book which leads to a dispute and refusal to pay the bill; result, he is blacklisted so far as that merchant is concerned. The same thought holds good so far as the neighbors are concerned. I can cite an instance where one of my outside men was looking up a party and the neighbor right next door said they were no good, gave them a lot of trouble. Another neighbor interviewed said they were fine people. Investigation showed the applicant he was looking up had occasion to go to the Board of Health to complain of the conditions of the neighbor's house and yard, and for that reason said neighbor had a grudge against them.

Now as to how I judge an old customer's application. The honesty and ability of the applicant are the principal considerations. True you might say to me, why question their honesty when they have always paid you, but that does not alter the fact, as you well know, that an account once good is not always good. This is best illustrated by the number of slows on your books of which some must eventually be charged off. Look over these and I venture to say that at least 90 per cent of them were at one time good accounts on your books but were not turned at the right time because you were lax in looking them up when they asked for that last renewal. Think back and tell me, haven't you found that the one who eventually goes bad is the one who continually asks for an increase which was granted just because they paid the last previous loan O.K.? We think "they were good on this loan, so an additional twenty, thirty, or fifty dollars is safe" and we go ahead without any further consideration, until we find that we have made the one big mistake, investigating after they go bad instead of before. The old story of locking the stable after the horse is stolen. Any borrower who does not pay us back is either dishonest or they have become so overburdened with debts that they cannot keep their heads above water and so lack the ability to pay. This brings us to the question of judging ability to pay. The three most important factors in judging the ability of a customer are income, the number in the family and amount of indebtedness at the present time. We all know that when a customer who may be good for $50 or $100 asks us for double that amount or more we must sit up and take notice. We may be perfectly safe in making him a loan of $50 or $100 and he in borrowing this sum, but when it comes to shouldering him with the larger payment required on two or three times this amount he begins to go backward and the risk is greater. Often, the borrower wants the larger amount to help him not because he has contracted another loan, and if he gets out of that difficulty easily he will try it again, and that is the beginning of his troubles and ours, for eventually he gets in so deep that he cannot pay and we cannot collect, to say nothing of a once good customer lost. We cannot be too careful when investigating to find out just how heavily they are in debt, it not only helps us judge the renewal intelligently but if we do make them we are more careful to keep them within bounds. Then, too, we must consider carefully how many mouths must be fed out of the income available. I am careful to note how much rent they are paying and how they pay it. I am also particular to ask the representative as to the condition of the house—is it neat and tidy, or the reverse? What is the personal appearance of the wife in her home? The condition of the home, of the children and the borrower will often be a deciding factor in judging the risk as well as the probable willingness to pay. How careful are we to ascertain whether the home life is harmonious and happy, or whether they have any domestic troubles? A case came before me recently which will illustrate this. We had a man and a wife on our books who had several $100 loans and were always as regular as clock work with their payments. In fact they usually anticipated their payments and generally paid the loan in full a month or two before expiration. At the time of which I speak they paid off their loan before maturity and asked for an increase to $200. Investigation disclosed that while neighbors or merchants knew nothing derogatory to their credit they were almost unanimous in saying the husband and wife quarrelled continuously, and it was rumored they expected to part in the near future. I questioned the wife on this point and she admitted the fact to me, and after getting her version of it I did not think it advisable to make the loan, as the paying of the bills rested entirely with the wife, he not caring whether they were paid or not. While these people are property owners and from the standpoint of security would make a safe risk, it was not the ideal condition for making a mutually profitable and satisfactory deal.

In closing may I say that I judge the application of an old customer from five standpoints; namely, past performance, reports of merchants and neighbors, ability to pay, conditions under which they live and finally their domestic relations, which latter I consider the most vital of all.

SELLING LOAN SERVICE TO EACH INQUIRY OR APPLICATION.

By Walter G. Herron.

The selling of Loan Service to each applicant and inquiry is divided into several different parts.

First. Surroundings encountered by the applicant at the individual offices.

Third. Courtesies extended to applicant at time of calling to the office.

Fourth. Courtesies extended to applicant after the loan is made and this is the most important part of the selling.

I will try to cover everything in as short a time as possible, by taking them up seriatim. I believe it can be done.

Surroundings or appearance of our offices. The appearance of the office at the time of the applicant calling for the first time I believe is 50% of the selling of our loan service to the applicant. When they first open our door and enter our office the impression received is usually a lasting one, and will do more toward making an applicant feel at home and pleased to call again, than all the smooth talk and persuasive arguments advanced by the best salesman or manager could do in a month of Sundays.

This fact is conceded by the most successful enterprises and we only need to look around at the best business houses and we can see they are spending large amounts of money for their appearance to invite and attract the prospective customer.

If our office is bright, cheerful, and roomy, and furnished with good taste, not gaudy nor over done, we will create a mental picture in the applicant they will not soon forget, which will give them confidence in our organization and cause them to talk about the company which they are dealing with. I have had a number of my customers ask me if I had been in so and so's office, and tell me what a fine office they now have. We all know the women folks are strong for things arranged with taste and judgment, and I believe our offices see more of the female side of our accounts than the male. Place a mirror or two where the ladies can powder their nose, fix their hats, etc. This does not seem very much and some of you men will say we have no beauty parlor, just a common place of business where we loan money, but do not lose sight of the fact, even though we loan money, that is not all we are in this world for, make things pleasant and convenient for those whom we are serving.

Make our application rooms attractive. Give them a little more leg room so their back is not against the wall or their knees rubbing against each other. If space is to be cut down do so on the side of the person taking the application. These little niceties are the silent salesmen of our organization, but they speak louder than all the others combined.

Second, personalities. What a wonderful asset to any loan office is a salesman behind the desk whose personality draws the customer to him, receives their confidence, talks to them in a fatherly sort of a way, listens to their sorrows and cries with them if need be, and if they are in a jovial mood laughs with them, not in that half-hearted sort of a way such as "you give me a pain," but a real whole-hearted, honest-to-goodness laugh. It brings you so close they feel you are more of a brother or close relative in whom they are confiding their good luck and their bad. It will pay you dollars and cents when they are in a jam and do not know just who to give their last dollar to when they must make a payment to some one.

Cultivate that friendly spirit and when they call to make their payments continue to smile or cry or anything else that will show you are as much interested in them now as you were before making the loan and you were selling them their first loan. You men are selling them every time they call to your office, you are selling them their future loans and lining up your prospects for future business. Keep on talking your prospect until it becomes second nature to come in and get more.

Third, courtesies. This is a word that covers a multitude of sins. The courtesies extended to our customers can do a world of good if they are extended in the proper way, and if extended in the wrong way they can do just as much harm. The sins are confined to being too lenient with the applicant on the amount of loan we grant them, too small a payment, which teaches them to go and get another loan because they still have money left in their pocket which they do not know what to spend it on, and on being too easy on not sending out notices when their payment is due and granting extensions simply because they ask for them when they have the money in their pocket. But let us consider only those which assist us in selling our loan service. We can assist them greatly by advising them on their financial matters such as buying their homes, placing their fire and life insurance, how best to place their mortgage money without any undue expense, help them to get a position when they are out of work and countless numbers of courtesies which will not cost us very much, but show the extent of our loan service. I believe it is a courtesy to make our payments a little large because they can have a greater amount paid and a renewal will be a great benefit to them at some future date. Some of you men will say it is not much of a courtesy to make a payment heavy. On the face of it it does not seem so, but there are many times a doctor prescribes an awful dose of foul-smelling and tasting medicine to cure some of our ills, but after we have recovered, we say, "Gee, that was some dose but it sure has made me feel fine and I will take it again when I need it." We have had that experience with law and our exchange bureau.

Fourth. After the loan is made this is the most important part of selling. I feel and know you men are not going to agree with me when I say there is small need of trying to sell your loan service to a customer or applicant when he first calls to our offices, because he is already sold even before he calls the demand has been created, he must have money, where can he get it, can he sell himself to anyone for the amount he needs, what can he give as security. What lies can he think of to make himself look good in the eyes of the party from whom he will try to get his loan and a hundred and one things more runs through his mind as to what he is going to say and do when he calls.

Selling of our loan service is done after we have the applicant on our books and is a new account, then the actual selling is done. Make him a booster for our business, not merely our own individual office, but educate him to the type of men he is dealing with, give him the service he needs, go out of our way at all times to assist him. If he needs your knowledge give him the time at your office to consult you or any of your force about anything, personal or business affairs. The loan man's up-to-date knowledge is far-reaching. He is the best fitted for giving good, wholesome advice on almost anything, and if he does not know himself he has the means at his hand to find out. You can readily see, gentlemen, you can only sell your customer or applicant after you have made the loan. There is no selling before.

Hon. Theodore E. Burton, member of Congress from Ohio, in an address before the National Federation of Remedial Loan Associations at Washington, May 25, 1922, stated in part:

"I have often been inclined to agree with Jeremy Bentham, who advanced the theory that rates of interest on loans are properly regulated by the law of supply and demand, but I realize that conditions exist which justify the enactment of usury laws. Where the borrower and the lender are on a comparatively equal footing, the law of competition can be trusted to regulate the rate of interest; but the tendency to exploit the urgent needs of the small borrower can be checked only by legislation. A law for the regulation of interest rates should serve two purposes: First, to protect the borrower against extortion; second, to repress the tendency to embark in injudicious enterprises."

AN APPRECIATION.

Dear Mr. Kehr:

I have your very kind invitation to attend the banquet of your association this evening. It would delight me immensely to be with you, but my doctor's orders are to cut out everything that tends to over-stimulation (mental as well as the kind prohibited by Mr. Volstead).

I have watched with great interest the growth of your organization and often think of the luncheon that we had together several years ago. Many things that were said as predictions at that time have come to be very substantial facts to-day.

I can see a great future for your organization if you will hold true to the program which you have worked out. Frank recognition of the facts underlying the small loan business, fair dealing with the public, education of the lawmaking authorities, avoidance of hypocritical subterfuge, standardization of law and office procedure, will ultimately win out. I am sure the time will come when your organization will be widely recognized as representing a most important factor in the financial system of the country. There is no reason why it should not be so. It only requires the right program, the right men, and the recognition of the fundamental fact that fair dealing makes friends and that taking unfair advantage of another's necessities creates a body of enemies whose voice becomes powerful in creating public opinion.

With best wishes for your continued progress, and remembrances to those I met at our last meeting, I am

Sincerely yours,

Frank Tucker,

First Vice-President, Provident Loan Society.

PENNSYLVANIA.

The regular meeting of the Pennsylvania Association was held at the City Club, 313 South Broad Street, Philadelphia, at 1:30 p. m., on Thursday, September 14 1922.

The meeting was called to order by Chairman A. S. Ezekiel.

Thirty-seven members were present at the luncheon which preceded the business meeting.

Report of Officers.

The treasurer reported in hand, September 14, 1922, $731.31. On motion of Mr. Moore, seconded by Mr. Brown, the report was accepted.

The secretary reported a membership of 81—73 in good standing as of December 31, 1922; 50 are also members in good standing of the American Industrial Lenders Association as of February 1, 1923.

Report of Commitees.

Chairman Webster of the Entertainment Committee, reported in readiness for necessary planning for November annual meeting and asked that the same committee, that served with him last year so effectively, be appointed again.

Chairman Mueller of the Membership Committee, reported a continued interest and a steady growth in our membership.

New Business.

The Chair appointed Messers. J. G. Lobb and V. D. Moss, of Philadelphia to assist Mr. Webster as a special committee on the annual convention, to be held in Philadelphia in November.

The Chair called attention to the need of attendance at the annual convention of the American Industrial Lenders Association in New York, September 20th to 23d, and of his hope that the attendance trophy would be brought back to Pennsylvania.

The Chair appointed Messers. Young, Webster, Mueller, Lyons, Moore, Lee, Moss and Brown as delegates representing the Pennsylvania I. L. Association at the American I. L. Association's Convention, New York, September 20 to 23, 1922.

Mr. Herron, treasurer of the Philadelphia Exchange Bureau, urged participation in the bureau by all Philadelphia members, and on motion of Dr. Mueller, seconded by Mr. Herron, the Chair was ordered to appoint a committee of two, to urge membership upon all non-members. The Chair appointed Messers. Herron and Lyons.

On motion of Mr. Young, seconded by Mr. Horn, the following, having had the approval of the majority of the Executive Committee, were duly elected to membership. Industrial Loan Service, Inc., Edward P. Cropper, 308 Finance Building, Philadelphia and Charles Gaus, 6621 Wayne Avenue, Philadelphia.

On order of the Chair, the secretary read the resolutions, received from National Secretary Kehr, as adopted by the Ohio Loan Association in regular convention at Cedar Point, Ohio, in August, 1922.

On motion of Mr. Moss, seconded by Mr. Webster, the opinion of Deputy Attorney General, Fred Taylor Pusey, of July 13, 1922, relating to the practices or methods of doing business indulged in by so-called loan companies licensed under the Act of June 17, 1915, as amended, June 4, 1919, be multigraphed and distributed to the members.

There appearing no further new business to transact, the educational part of the program was then entered.

Walter S. Herron, manager of the Hamilton Loan Society, Philadelphia, spoke on the subject, "Selling Loan Service to each Inquiry or Application" and on motion of Dr. Mueller, seconded by Mr. Lee, it was ordered made a part of the minutes of this meeting.

George W. Curry, manager, 1208 Chestnut Street, Philadelphia office, American Loan Company, spoke on the subject, "How I Look Up and Judge an Old Customer Application" and on motion of Mr. Watts, seconded by Mr. Horn, was ordered spread on the minutes of this meetin.

The subject, "How I Look Up and Judge a New Application" was discussed ably by Messers. Young, Hendrichson, Horn and Clayton.

There appearing no further business to transact, on motion of Mr. Hess, seconded by Mr. George Lobb, the meeting adjourned.

C. H. Watts, Secretary.

PENNSYLVANIA.

It doesn't require a great amount of effort of the imagination to remember with satisfaction the result of the Entertainment Committee's activity towards having accomplished the successful, mighty fine annual meeting last year.

This is to register with you and your family this information. That same Entertainment Committee is going to put over even a bigger day's annual meeting and they have asked that you be informed of the time, the place and the importance of being in attendance.

There will be the usual morning session at 10 o'clock, followed by a luncheon, then the afternoon session at 2:30, and then the usual Banquet at 6:30, followed by a dance. All of this will take place on Thursday, November 16, 1922, at the Bellevue-Stratford Hotel, Philadelphia.

Let your imagination run riot and even then the Committee assure us that you will not have reached a point where you will have been conscious of the goodness in store at this one-day annual festival.

It will be good for the Small Loan Business, your individual association with it, your standing in the community and your own folks. So, mark up your calendar and let nothing interfere with your being in attendance.

The program is being made up and further notice of it will be given you in time. C. H. Watts, Sec'y.

ENGLISH LAW.

1.—(1) Where proceedings are taken in any court by a moneylender for the recovery of any money lent    and there is evidence which satisfies the court that the interest charged in respect of the sum actually lent is excessive, or that the amounts charged for expenses, inquiries, fines, bonus, premium, renewals, or any other charges, are excessive and that, in either case, the transaction is harsh and unconscionable, or is otherwise such that a court of equity would give relief, the court may re-open the transaction, and take an account between the moneylender and the person sued, and may, notwithstanding any statement or settlement of account or any agreement, purporting to close previous dealings and create a new obligation re-open any account already taken between them, and relieve the person sued from payment of any sum in excess of the sum adjudged by the court to be fairly due in respect of such principal, interest and charges, as the court, having regard to the risk and all the circumstances, may adjudge to be reasonable; and if any such excess has been paid, or allowed in account, by the debtor, may order the creditors to repay it; ** ** ** **

The tests of whether interest and charges are excessive or unconscionable are to be considered by the court, "having regard to the risk and all the circumstances." This is a clear recognition of the fact that risks and any other adverse circumstances relating to loan transactions shall be reasonably appraised in determining whether the rate of interest and charges are unconscionable, in a given case.

YEAR BOOK.

Possibly the Year Book which will be more elaborate than before, will be out next month. Members, welfare organizations and public libraries will receive complimentary copies. A charge of one dollar per copy, will be made to others who may wish it.

MARYLAND.

The October meeting of the Maryland Industrial Lenders' Association was held on Tuesday, the 10th, at 8 p. m. in the Board Room of the Merchants and Manufacturers' Association.

Among those present were: J. J. Wood, of the Community Finance Service; E. E. Hougham, of the Coöperative Loan and Investment Co.; H. H. Larsen, Peoples' Loan Society; R. L. Long, Surety Guarantee Co.; H. C. Moore, Chesapeake Loan Co.; F. B. Synder, Beneficial Loan Society; W. F. Oliver, Jr., Household Loan Co.; A. L. Wick and Lewis F. Eckhardt of Philadelphia, Pa.

Mr. Hougham of the Executive Committee reports that Dr. Mueller is preparing to draw up the proposed ad. for the Baltimore Magazine, and will surely have the ad. in the next issue of the magazine.

Chairman Larsen reports that he has been successful in obtaining the application for membership in our Association of Mr. Chester A. Gardner, Manager of the United Finance and Security Corporation of this city. Upon motion by Mr. Wood, seconded by Mr. Hougham that we accept the application of membership of Mr. Gardner, this being acted upon favorably, the secretary was instructed to so notify Mr. Gardner, and present him with an Association certificate, copy of the by-laws and any other literature that we may have that may be of interest to him.

Mr. Wood, delegated to the National Convention, gave a very interesting talk about the benefits one would gain from attending the National Convention, and especially the Managers' Meeting. He also called our attention to the publicity talks as being a wonderful help, and hoped that each Manager would bring back the feeling that he would encourage and boost publicity at all times. He also touched upon how helpful it was that the Banking Officials of different States could meet with our National Body.

The Secretary was instructed to read a letter under date of September 28th, addressed to Chairman Larsen from Mr. East in behalf of the Convention Committee expressing their appreciation for the coöperation and financial assistance of our Association in helping to make the National Convention a success.

The news that Chairman Larsen was to be transferred to Philadelphia surely was received with deep regret by the officers and members of the Association, yet each of us know he will be successful in assuming his new duties. May the light of our everlasting love, and good fellowship follow him, and may we hope to have him with us at our meetings from time to time is the unanimous wish of each member.

Chairman Larsen tendered his resignation because of his inability to be with us at all meetings in the future, but upon a suggestion by Messrs. Wick and Hougham that Mr. Larsen continue as Chairman throughout the term. In his absence, Vice-Chairman Snyder will serve.

A suggestion was made by Mr. Wick that the Association have at least one member prepare a paper to be read at the next meeting, and a general discussion follow upon the paper read.

Upon a motion by Mr. Wick, seconded by Mr. Hougham, and carried, that the Chairman was to appoint a committee of three to be known as the Program Committee. This committee to arrange for the programs as stated at the next meeting.

A motion by Mr. Wick, seconded by Mr. Hougham, the hour for calling the meeting was changed from 7:30 to 8 p. m. and the Secretary was instructed to notify each member, and record this motion in the minutes.

Upon motion by Mr. Hougham, seconded by Mr. Wood, that the Association record a vote favoring the $15,000,000 School Loan. This being unanimously carried, the Secretary was instructed to notify each newspaper by letter, also record a copy of this letter to the newspapers with the minutes. The editor of the Sun, The Evening Sun, Baltimore American, and the Baltimore News.

"To the Editor of the Evening Sun:

"The $15,000,000 School Loan was a subject for special discussion at the meeting of the Maryland Industrial Lenders' Association held in the Board Room of the M. and M. Association, October 10th. The Association recorded a unanimous vote in favor of the loan, and each member pledged his undivided support in this connection.

"Very truly yours,
"H. C. Moore, Sec'y."

Upon motion by Mr. Wood, seconded by Mr. Oliver, the Association went on record as being opposed to, and protest against licensees who split up loans or in any other manner used methods that evade or violate the spirit of the law.

A general discussion took place upon keeping the Association awake by putting more pep in our work in the way of having interesting papers and topics to discuss, also it was recommended that we invite the ladies and the outside boys, and let them discuss our every-day problems with us. Much good thereby may be learned.

There being no further business, upon motion by Mr. Long, seconded by Mr. Snyder that the Association adjourn until the next meeting, Tuesday evening, November 14th, at 8 p. m. sharp.

H. C. Moore, Sec'y.

RHODE ISLAND.

The Rhode Island Association of Small Loan Brokers arranged a meeting, at which non-members were invited, at the Biltmore Hotel, Wednesday evening, October 25th, Mr. W. G. Wood, State Chairman, presiding.

The question of introducing and supporting the Enactment of the Uniform Small Loan Law in Rhode Island this winter was taken up and after considerable discussion was looked upon favorably and approved.

Upon motion of Mr. Chase, seconded by Mr. Lovegrove, the meeting adjourned. J. H. Wickstrom, Sec'y.

WAYS TO LOCATE A SKIP.

During the month just passed we have had a demand for copies of "Ways to Locate a Skip" from the following:

G. E. Vliet, Dallas, Tex.
Columbus Loan & Mortgage Co., Columbus, O.
Wm. Holl, Portland, Ore.
American Law & Adjustment Service, Portsmouth, Va.
Utica Provident Loan Assn., Utica, N. Y.
American Loan Co., Wilkes-Barre, Pa.
Industrial Thrift and Loan Corporation, Scranton, Pa.
F. W. Michael, Philadelphia, Pa.
Shawnee Finance Co., Lima, Ohio.
Harry G. Neal, Providence, R. I.

In sending for a copy of the booklet, the American Law and Adjustment Service, Portsmouth, Va., wrote:

"We received one copy of your booklet 'Ways to Locate a Skip' and find that it is a masterpiece, in fact, it is of such value that we are inclosing remittance to cover ten more copies.

"While many of the ideas are not new to us, yet we find several that are worth many times the price of the book.

"Why does not the author disclose his name? Certainly he cannot be timid.

"Would the author be willing to permit reproduction of his booklet?

"Thanking you in advance for your attention, and trusting that we may receive our copies quickly, we are

"Yours very truly,
"The American Law and Adjustment Service."

which brought forth from A. L. Wick of Philadelphia, who together with his associates are responsible for this compilation the following:

"Thank you for sending along the letter received from the American Law and Adjustment Service, Portsmouth, Virginia.

"I am, of course, pleased that they speak so well of the booklet 'Ways to Locate a Skip,' and since there have been remarks by others that have been favorable, as well as a desire to know who the author of this booklet is, it seems only fair that I should make it clear that I compiled this booklet but the ideas are not original, and were gathered from all of our employees, each one offering the different methods of locating a skip that they could think of.

"My reason for having them furnish these ideas was prompted by our having a list made up about ten years ago on which there appeared fifty-nine ways to locate a skip. I felt that there had been such a wonderful education in the loan business in the past ten years that many new ideas must have come to all of us. These ideas were all classified and I added a few of my own, in that way only was I interested in getting up this booklet.

"We have no objection to anyone reprinting this booklet but it would, of course, be unfair for the American Law and Adjustment Service or anyone else to take credit of compiling the booklet.

"We are hopeful that the issuing of this booklet will be helpful to all who use it. We are sure it will save many an account finding itself subject for Profit and Loss account, if this booklet is studied and the various ideas honestly tried out.

"I am, of course, happy that the booklet has thus far proven interesting to others."

Any who may still be without this booklet, still have a chance to get it by sending 10 cents in postage to the National Secretary.

SMITH'S "FACTS ABOUT THE SMALL LOAN BUSINESS."

Smith's "Facts About the Small Loan Business and the Scientific Rate of Fair Charges," has met with great appreciation from many of our members who have made calls for it during the past month. Here are some of those that ordered the booklet and the quantities ordered.

If any others may wish to cooperate in this educational work, please file your orders with the National Secretary at once.

MASSACHUSETTS.

The Massachusetts Association held their annual meeting together with the election of officers, on Thursday, Oct. 19th, at Hotel Bellevue, Boston. The meeting was preceded by a banquet, presided over by Chairman Pool, and we were honored by the presence of our National Chairman, R. M. Rutherford, of New York, who addressed the gathering and gave us an interesting talk on the meetings and banquets of some of the other state associations.

The officers for the coming year are the same as the year past; namely, W. E. Pool, Chairman, Boston; D. J. Wholey, Vice-Chairman, Lowell; G. A. Ingalls, Treasurer, Boston; H. J. Desormaux, Secretary, New Bedford. The members of the Executive Committee are W. E. Pool, W. J. Baldwin, G. R. Alcott, F. McConville, G. A. Ingalls, all of Boston, and D. J. Wholey, Lowell, and H. J. Desormaux, of New Bedford.

I have been instructed to communicate with you regarding the matter of obtaining about fifteen extra copies of the LENDERS NEWS with the account of the National Convention, should this be possible, kindly forward same to Mr. W. E. Pool, Chairman, 63 Court St., Boston, Mass., together with the bill. The reason for this request is that we have appointed a committee to call on all delinquent members in the state and a copy of the NEWS will be given to every member called on by the committee.

H. J. DESORMAUX, Sec'y.

MEMBERS BEWARE.

One of our members wrote us recently in regard to a skip account, Roy E. and Minnie Cooper, and says: "He is an insurance agent and worked for the Western and Southern Insurance Co. in Brazil, Indiana. He skipped from there and in tracing him up, find that he moved to Springfield, Illinois. He borrowed some money from one of our members there and skipped out, owing them a balance." In order that other members may not be stung by these same people, we suggest that each member note this item for his own protection. The man is about thirty-five. We have no other description of him but possibly could get it from the members who have lost money through him.

SAYS WOMEN SHOULD KNOW HUSBANDS' MONEY SECRETS.

Do you know all about your husband's affairs, and does he know all about yours? How much should you know about each other's affairs? These questions arise as the result of a suggestion made recently at the eighth annual convention of the American Industrial Lender's Association when John E. Ryan, manager of Detroit's Provident Loan Society, declared himself in favor of refusing loans to either husband or wife if the loans were to be kept secret.

"If there is to be harmony in the home there should be no secrets from each other on the part of the husband or the wife, and certainly there should be no secrets in matters financial," said Mr. Ryan.

There is a difference of opinion among Detroit women about this rather large and embracing platform advocated by Mr. Ryan.

Mrs. Frank Rosenblatt, director of the educational department of the First National Bank, says: "There should be a complete understanding between the husband and wife of the husband's net income. By net income, I mean what is left after all the business expenses are met. There is no need of the wife's knowing just how her husband met this or that contract, but she should know whether her household allowance is too large or too small. European women always have had this knowledge of their husbands' affairs, and it is time that American women had it.

"When a man goes into business, his partner has a complete understanding of all the financial operations. Why shouldn't his wife have this same knowledge?

"A budget promotes partnership and each knows where the money is going. Back of domestic discord is often financial trouble."

"I certainly think that a wife should have a little nest egg of her own about which her husband knows nothing," declared Miss Vera Lerch, publicity manager of the American Loan and Trust Company.

"This money, which the wife keeps for her very own, should not be for some frivolous extravagance, but often there are times when women want money for legitimate purposes, yet they do not want their husbands to know about it. One must judge by individual cases, and no broad rule can cover this; but I should have money of my own to do just as I pleased with," emphatically stated Miss Lerch. "It gives you an independent feeling and I see no objection to it. It is tommyrot to say that it is wrong for the husband or wife to hold out on the other."

Miss Birdsay Cole, assistant secretary and treasurer of the Banker's Trust Co. of Detroit, declared that in the main this principle of perfect fairness between husband and wife was the best thing for marital happiness. "I do not think that a woman should be made to account for every penny," said Miss Cole, "but in the large things she should."

"When a husband or wife borrows money, the other should know about the obligation, for ignorance was never bliss there. If a woman doesn't know about her husband's finances, she is apt to be extravagant, thinking he has more than he has. Almost any woman who really understands about her husband's business will govern herself accordingly."

Mrs. Harriet D. Kelly, manager of the business leasing department of the Homer Warren Company, and a member of the Zonta Club, said: "Don't tell all you know." This applies everywhere. It's an old adage that familiarity breeds contempt and it could work out equally well in this case.

"Of course, a wife should know what her husband's income is, but every bill that husband or wife incurs need not necessarily be known to the other to make married life an idyllic song. One must have individuality in married life, or it becomes a bondage.

"A husband should give his wife an allowance, and then trust her to use it to the best of her ability. If a wife is perfectly frank with her husband there would still be danger of the husband 'holding out' on her. For the husband always knows how much money he gives his wife, but she may not always know how much his income is." — Detroit News, October 11, 1922.

Few Complaints of Overcharges in Past Year.

As a supplement to his annual report, reproduced in last week's issue, Mr. Arthur L. Stewart, Chief of the Division of Securities of the Ohio Department of Commerce, gave the following review of operations under the Lloyd Act during the fiscal year ended June 30th, last.

This review treats of a subject concerning which little has been published—the administration of the statute regulating the lending of money on chattel mortgages, plain and endorsed notes, and salaries and wage earnings, under the jurisdiction of the Securities Division. Mr. Stewart writes:

"The seventh year of the operation of the Lloyd Act ended June 30, 1922, the date of this report. During the year all operations have been far-reaching and important.

"The supervising of licensees under the Lloyd Act is of the utmost importance to the public. At the present time nearly 80,000 persons are borrowers from said licensees in the sum of nearly $5,000,000 and probably 200,000 borrowers are accommodated. As each borrower represents a family of some size, the importance of this work is obvious.

"The class of people affected by this law must also be taken into consideration. Inasmuch as the majority are industrial producers who for one reason or another are in urgent need of small sums of money which ordinarily cannot be obtained through other channels, our energies have been directed, first, to see that the borrower is not overcharged and, second, to stop and punish illegal lending in the State.

"The examinations made of licensees by our examiners show that the licensees are heartily in favor of the law and are doing their utmost to comply with it. Very few borrowers have been overcharged. These overcharges are to be expected when the vast number of computations made in the year and the hurry of making them are considered, but in no case were the amounts of importance nor were they made with any intent to overreach or violate the provisions of the law. When the licensees' attention has been called to overcharges, the amounts have been invariably refunded to the borrower.

"The examinations of licensees are of the utmost importance both to the licensee and the borrower. They tend to make the licensee careful in charging the proper amount, and prevent persons from engaging in the business who without the curb of examination would operate at the expense of persons who are in dire need of small sums of money; and furthermore the borrower knows that his interests are being safeguarded under the law.

Examinations Very Important.

"The fact that during the year we have had practically no complaints of licensees from borrowers, indicates that the law has been complied with on the part of the licensee.

"The loaning of moneys on personal property under the Lloyd Act is on a legal and proper basis and deserves to and does rank with any other business in the State.

"Certain minor changes should be made in the Act. For instance, examiners should be given authority to subpœna witnesses, and to examine accounts of persons and companies not licensed. A uniform system of accounting should be established. There should be a limitation as to the amount which might be loaned to one borrower at the permitted rate. The amount of wages or salaries earned which may be assigned should be reduced to 10 per cent instead of 50 per cent.

"On May 14, 1921, the General Assembly passed an Act to amend sections 6337-44 and 6346, which became effective Sept. 6, 1921. This Act places all pawnbrokers in this State under the direct supervision of the Division of Securities. The license fee for pawnbrokers is $150 a year, which fee includes the entire cost of examinations and inspections for the duration of the license. Such fees shall be apportioned at the rate of $12.50 a month or fraction thereof until the first day of January following the date of the issuance of such license, 50 per cent of such license fee shall be for the use of the State, and 50 per cent shall be paid to the municipality, or if outside the limits of any municipality, to the county in which the office of the licensee may be located. Each licensee must execute and file a bond to the State of Ohio in the penal sum of $2,000 with the Chief of the Division of Securities, to be approved by him, for the faithful observance of all provisions of this Act so that any person who is injured by the violation of this Act by a licensee may maintain an action on said bond. Licensees are permitted to charge 5 per cent a month interest on loans or discount on any continual pledge up to and including the sum of $25 and 3 per cent a month on loans or discounts above the sum of $25. In addition to said interest he may make a total charge for the storage of pledged articles not exceeding 25 cents a month or fraction thereof, and for the storage of cumbersome articles such as furs, clothing, trunks, motorcycles, etc., a sum of not to exceed 50 cents a month or fraction thereof. This must be agreed upon in writing between the licensee and the pledgor at the time the loan is made; also, in instances where the licensee is to forward the pledged article by express or parcel post, he shall be allowed an additional charge of 25 cents to cover packing, etc. Said charges and interest shall not be deducted in advance. Interest for an actual number of days shall be computed on unpaid balances and shall not be compounded. The licensee shall have the right to charge and collect interest or discount at the specified rate for one full month on any loan which is made and repaid within 30 days. The licensee under this Act must make daily reports to the Chief of Police or head of the Police Department on forms furnished by the Department, giving descriptions of the pledgor and the article pledged by him.

"Many of the pawnbrokers formerly doing business under municipal authority suspended operations when the State acquired supervision, and the number of pawnbrokers in the State at the present time is materially reduced.

"It is our belief that a large number of pawnbrokers have continued to transact the pawnbroking business without complying with the law with regard to securing a license, but with the limited force at the disposal of this Division it has been impossible within the last year to make a complete check.

"We are of the opinion that the language of Section 6339-3 of the General Code, regulating the interest on loans, should be made more specific; i. e., the section should state that the amount charged on sums up to and including $25 shall be 5 per cent a month and that 3 per cent a month shall be charged on any sum over and above $25. Thus, if the loan is for $30, the licensee shall charge 5 per cent on $25 and 3 per cent on $5. A uniform system of accounting should also be provided for.

"Within the past year we have been so hampered by a lack of sufficient force that the examinations of chattel loan licensees and pawnbrokers have necessarily been limited. A careful analysis of the situation indicates there should be a chief examiner and at least two examiners in this Division, whose entire time should be given to the examination of licensees under the Chattel Loan and Pawnbroking Division." — Finance and Industry, Sept. 2, 1922.

Tokio, Aug. 8th—The ancestor of Marquis Yamauchi doing business in Japan 240 years ago played a pretty mean trick on the present Marquis, who has just been confronted with a debit note for 20 kans, the amount of a loan obtained from the contemporary ancestor of Mantaro Tamura wherewith to purchase twenty-four ships. The ancient document has been hidden all these years in the altar of the Tamura family because the old money-lender stipulated in his will it should not be produced for payment until the amount involved would be large enough to ruin the family of Marquis Yamauchi. The old man had a pleasant outlook on life, and always liked to see his customers do well.

The document is perfectly legible, though badly discolored, and Marquis Yamauchi is reported to have expressed his wish to arrange a satisfactory settlement. The conversion of 20 kans to the Japanese money of to-day, however, is such an enormous amount that full payment is impossible. It hasn't even been figured out clearly so far.

POLITICS.

I've got a letter, parson, from my son away out West,
An' my ol' heart is heavy as an anvil in my breast,
To think the boy whose futur' I had once so proudly planned
Should wander from the path o' right an come to such an end.
I told him when he left us, only three short years ago,
He'd find himself a-plowin' in a mighty crooked row—
He'd miss his father's counsels an' his mother's prayers, too,
But he said the farm was hateful, an' he guessed he'd have to go.

His letters came so seldom that I somehow sort o' knowed
That Billy was a-trampin' on a mighty rocky road,
But never once imagined he would bow
my head in shame,
An' in the dust 'd wallow his ol' daddy's
honored name.
He writes from out in Denver, an' the story's mighty short;
I just can't tell his mother; it'd crush
her poor ol' heart;
An' so I reckoned, parson, you might break the news to her—Bill's in the Legislatur', but he doesn't say what fur.

OBITUARY.

Due to a broken auto axle, Lebrecht G. Glessner, Manager of the York, Pa., office of the National Equitable Investment Company, met death October 29th, in a trip from York to Lancaster, where together with his wife and friends he was bound to consult a physician. The accident occurred about a mile west of Lancaster, in which Mr. Glessner's skull was fractured and at the same time sustaining a compound fracture of the leg. He died in St. Joseph's Hospital, Lancaster, about two hours after the accident occurred. Mr. Glessner is survived by his wife, and had been in the employ of the National Equitable Investment Company for some eighteen years. He was esteemed highly by his employers and by all who had the pleasure of meeting him on several Association occasions. We extend to his widow our heartfelt sympathy and express the hope that she will recover from the injuries sustained in the same accident.

Object of Delegate's Report.

In addition to giving the delegate some pretense for earning his allotted expense money, it is to give those members who did not attend, at least one man's impression of the big annual meeting.

In drawing conclusions from such a report, one should bear in mind that only a few of the outstanding and important features of the Convention can be touched upon because of the necessity for brevity. To make this report concise, I have divided it into five sub-heads as follows: First, Statistical; second, Business; third, Social; fourth, Summary; fifth, Suggestions.

Statistical.

The registered attendance, not including ladies, and visitors, was 160, while there were approximately 400 at the banquet. Attendance from the various States, figured upon the percentage of the State membership, is as follows: Pennsylvania, First, 77%; New Jersey, Second, 70%; Massachusetts, Third, 66%; Maryland, Fourth, 58%; Connecticut, Fifth, 54%; Illinois, Sixth, 32% (18 members); Rhode Island, Seventh, 28%; Michigan, Eighth, 25%; Virginia, Ninth, 21%; Indiana and West Virginia, Tenth, 20%; Ohio, Eleventh, 16%; Georgia, Twelfth, 14%; Iowa, Thirteenth, 8%.

Business.

The Convention was called to order Wednesday morning, September 20th, by acting Chairman R. M. Rutherford. He read a letter from Chairman W. G. Wood, who was unable to be present because of the reoccurrence of the same illness which he suffered while in Chicago last winter. Mr. Wood was greatly missed by all, and the Convention expressed its sympathy and best wishes for him.

We were very heartily welcomed to New York by Mr. John R. Young, representing the Merchants' Association of that city. Col. Clarence Hodson responded and these two addresses brought about a better understanding between the two organizations represented. Briefly the report of the standing committees were as follows:

For Membership Committee: Judge Dyer reported a membership of 431 and referred to the Secretary's annual report for the membership activities.

For the Committee on Legislation: Mr. C. H. Watts showed a very active year for his Committee, and advised that in 1923 there will be forty-three State Legislators in session, in addition to the National Congress.

For the Law Committee: Mr. F. R. Hubachek went rather into detail, and gave us considerable interesting information, as well as a great deal of good advice. He spoke at length upon the $300 limitation, and said that Benjamin Franklin was the originator of the idea, when he placed that as the maximum loan to be made to worthy persons, from a sum which he had appropriated for that purpose. Mr. Hubachek called attention to the fact that our law specifies loans to necessitous persons, which does not mean corporations or business men. He said that our best assurance of keeping the present law is to attempt few, if any, changes in same.

For the Publicity Committee: Mr. E. P. East called attention to the fact that more prominent men had addressed our various State Association meetings this past year, than ever before, and advised that the practice of having such persons as our guests be continued. Mr. East recommends the formulation of a plan for general publicity, during the coming year. It is his opinion that the address of Mr. Ham, at the Chicago Convention, has been the means of accomplishing great good for the Industrial Loan business.

For the Finance Committee: Mr. W. P. Woll reported the activities of his Committee and recommended a change in the method of assessing and collecting dues.

All these reports will be completely covered, together with the reports of the Secretary and Treasurer, in the Year Book.

The Convention was then adjourned to a luncheon given by the Eastern hosts, which was followed by a talk by Col. Hodson.

The afternoon session was opened with a paper prepared and read by Mr. Walter S. Hilborn, Acting Director Division of Remedial Loans, Russell Sage Foundation, New York City. Mr. Hilborn said that the Uniform Small Loan Law, either in its exact form or in statutes containing similar provisions, is in force in nineteen states in the United States, having a population of 59,123,981, out of a total population of 105,710,620. "Great oaks from little acorns grow"; and the small conference held in the city of New York in 1916 has changed the small-loan history of the United States. His experience has shown that the two great sources of opposition to our law is from, first, those who are ignorant of the law, and second, the high-rate lenders. Mr. Hilborn's report will be published in pamphlet form, as well as in the Year Book.

The four resolutions offered by the Ohio delegates, together with the proposed change in the method of levying and collecting the National dues, were not voted upon because of there not having been presented to the Convention in the form and manner required by the Constitution. The remainder of the afternoon was given to the discussion of practical business subjects.

The Thursday morning session was opened by a three-cornered discussion on the Clearing House question, conducted by Mr. A. L. Wick of Philadelphia, Mr. R. F. Hartz of Indianapolis and Mr. Henry H. Smith, Secretary, Retail Merchants Bureau, Philadelphia Chamber of Commerce. Mr. F. Eugene Ackerman, of a New York Advertising Agency bearing his name, explained how he handled the publicity for our Convention, and suggested forms of good publicity for our adoption.

Next on the program was Dr. Louis N. Robinson, Swarthmore, Pa., who is making a nation-wide survey of the small loan business. Dr. Robinson's talk was absorbingly interesting, and all will want to read about it in the Year Book.

He gave us an idea of what his survey will cover, including the following features: First, A history of the small loan business; second, a study of the class of people who borrow in small amounts; third, the legal basis of our business; fourth, competition by firms with different schemes of financing and lending; fifth, what are the old countries doing in the small loan business; sixth, justification of our 3½% rate; seventh, comparison of the business in the old days and of to-day.

Following Dr. Robinson, Miss Caro D. Coombs of the Russell Sage Foundation, New York City, read a very interesting paper on the Credit Unions and their relation to the business of the licensed lenders.

The afternoon session on Thursday was given over almost entirely to the reading of papers and practical subjects, which will no doubt be covered completely in the Year Book.

The Friday morning session was opened by a paper on the subject of "What are you doing to uplift and dignify the Small Loan Business every day," read and prepared by E. F. Moore, Philadelphia. This paper brought out considerable discussion and no doubt many delegates acquired new and better ideas to incorporate in his daily business procedure.

"Ways and means of educating public opinion to the justification of the uniform rate," was handled jointly by Mr. A. C. Broughman of Marion, Ind., and Mr. C. R. Napier of Chicago.

These talks created considerable comment, and Mr. Napier's address was so masterful and important that the Illinois Association has prepared and published it in book form, copies of which may be had by applying to the Illinois Secretary.

During the afternoon session, Mr. Tate Harrison of Waterloo, Iowa, began his remarks by telling a story, and when he opened his paper preparatory to reading, Mr. Broughman of Marion, Indiana, moved that Mr. Harrison omit the reading of the paper and continue his story telling. Harrison seconded the motion, and in his able and characteristic manner amused the Convention with wit and humor. He closed by inviting us to Iowa for the 1923 Convention. Several other splendid papers and the discussion on practical subjects concluded the afternoon session.

Saturday morning, September 23d, which was the last session of the Convention, was opened by a Managers meeting, which continued until 11:00, and from that time until 1:30 the very difficult task of electing officers satisfactory to all was accomplished and resulted in the following slate: Chairman, R. M. Rutherford; Treasurer, W. A. Zumpfe; Secretary, G. W. Kehr; Auditing, J. S. Edge; Finance, W. P. Woll; Law, F. R. Hubachek; Legislation, C. H. Watts; Membership, T. J. Harrison; Publicity, G. Hodson.

SOCIAL.

The manner in which, and the extent to which, the ladies, who attended the Convention, were entertained, is worthy of special comment. Much credit and appreciation is due the Sight-seeing Committee, which was headed by Mr. George Hodson. He kept the various groups of ladies busy every day going about the city, and the ladies can truly say that they saw New York.

Nor were the delegates themselves slighted in respect to entertainment. A luncheon was served to all the first day of the Convention, and on the second evening we enjoyed the banquet, which was truly an accomplishment and stands out most favorably in comparison with our previous banquets. During the dinner and after the speaking, we were entertained by a large orchestra, singing and dancing. At the close of the evening, just before the dance, a very clever magician entertained by mind reading and amazing tricks.

The first after-dinner address was given by Mr. Rutherford, entitled "Our Ladies." Mr. Rutherford said, that among other things, the ladies pull the wool over eyes before marriage and out of our heads afterwards. Then he eulogized them beautifully, in order that he might stand, as he always has, well with the ladies.

The next speaker was Dr. John N. Glenn, General Director, Russell Sage Foundation. This was the first time Dr. Glenn ever appeared before us, and we indeed felt honored by his presence. He stated that he was indeed pleased with the progress and efforts of our National Association, and extended his best wishes for its continued success. Dr. Glenn frankly stated that he is not yet sure that our 3½% rate is correct, and developments will prove whether or not it should be lowered.

The next address was given by Hon. Frank H. Pope, "Stray Thoughts." He said that he would not talk business, but would give us a history of his life. There were a few serious remarks in his talk, but his main desire was to amuse us, which he accomplished nicely.

Rev. Charles R. Brown, D.D., Dean of the Yale Divinity School, spoke upon "Human Relations in Industry." All of these talks will be reproduced in the Year Book. One of Dr. Brown's strong points was that the Golden Rule should be applied to our everyday business policies.

The next orator of the evening was a surprise speaker in the person of Ex-Postmaster General Will Hays of Sullivan, Indiana, who was the guest of our Ex-National Chairman, Mr. C. H. Stratton. Mr. Hays proved himself to be a very impressive and eloquent orator. He told us many interesting things about the moving picture industry. Mr. Hays said that friend Stratton asked him if he did not think that our Industrial Loan men and our crowd was a pretty good bunch, and that he replied with the following story: A school boy was asked by the teacher how much 3x3 was, and the boy said 9, to which the teacher replied, "Pretty good, Johnny." Johnny said, "Pretty good, hell, that's perfect." As stated previously, there were over 400 persons at the banquet, and this wonderful social event was terminated by a dance, which lasted until early morning.

SUMMARY.

It was apparent to all, that our eastern hosts made complete preparations for our comfort, convenience and well-fare, and handled the entire Convention in a truly admirable fashion. Neither time, thought nor money were spared, as shown by the many unusual things done, and novel ideas carried out. A map, approximately 16x6 ft. in dimensions, of the United States, showing by colors the territory affected by some form of Small Loan Legislation, attracted a great deal of attention. Probably never again will our Association members have the privilege of attending and enjoying so elaborate a Convention, coupled as it was, with such splendid entertainment and interesting sight-seeing facilities.

Much praise and gratitude is due the Eastern men, for it was they who made it possible for our National Association to place firmly upon the highway of Industrial Loan progress another and a distinctive milestone.

SUGGESTIONS.

1. That all future Conventions be of four day periods.
2. That social features of future Conventions be less conspicuous.
3. That a full half-day or an entire evening be set aside for a well-regulated managers meeting.
4. That fewer papers be read and that more time be given to the general discussion of practical subjects.
5. That nominations for National Officers be announced at the first session of the second day, and that election of Officers be held at the opening of the third-day session.
6. That greater national publicity be given both before and during the Convention.
7. That the 1923 Convention be held in unorganized territory, for example, Louisville, Ky., St. Paul or Minneapolis, Minnesota.
8. That in such organized territory, during the Convention, we have a noonday public debate meeting, inviting the general public to attend, and permitting anyone to talk on the subject of Small Loans, and such talks to be responded to by one of our delegates, and also attempt to answer any question which might be asked.
9. That if our next Convention is so held in unorganized territory, the National Association pay one-half of the expenses and the member States be assessed for the remainder of the expenses, according to their individual membership.
10. That our National body arrange, if possible, to have the Remedial Loan Association to hold their Convention with that of the American Association.
11. That our National Association arrange to have all legalized State Departments heads and inspectors attend our National Convention and arrange, during the Convention, for these Department Officials to hold a special conference.
12. That the entertainment for our next Convention be given, in part at least, by membership talent.

HOW I RENEW REFERENCES AND MAKE A LOAN TO A FORMER CUSTOMER.

James A. Lyons.

The subject is one very important step which tends to make or break an account, whether it be a new loan or a recheck. Its future life depends upon the manner in which this recheck is closed. The subject being one that covers so much, it is hardly possible, or would it be fair for me to attempt to take in every angle of this part of our work. However, with your kind indulgence, I will endeavor to render what I am prone to believe to be one of the many practical methods of renewing references and making a loan to a former customer.

We feel that a customer, whether he be a prospective or one who has done business with us before, should be subjected to a close observation when receiving a loan, especially when renewing references. Not because Mr. and Mrs. Jones, the name I propose to use in this case, is not to be considered, nor is it because I know less of their ability to pay and their intentions to honor the obligation they are about to assume; but because it is just possible that Mr. and Mrs. Jones of yesterday may not be the same careful honest people they were on receiving their previous loan, pulling together, as it were, as in the past. It might be possible, the husband is neglecting his home, wife, and family. His habits may be considerably different today than they were upon the receipt of his first loan. It may also be possible he has taken to gambling, inattention to his work, or seeking and harboring company other than his wife and family, taken to drink with many other habits better left unsaid in this article. His wife also is not immune from like faults, but is less liable to fall the victim of such misdoings as would make the loan undesirable, and remember, gentlemen, such decided changes can come over a couple who, in the past, were considered most respectable, industrious neighbors in the community wherein they live in such a short period of time that even their closest friends or their direct families would be quite unaware of just such a condition.

We fully understand and appreciate the fact that such things will eventually become known but it may be in the period between its active existence and its exposure to others, friends and families of either or both that this loan is made. These are some of the reasons I am forced to believe makes it quite imperative that a close inspection of the former customer who is about to negotiate a new loan should be given a most careful survey, and because we, as a supposed benefactor, for that is about all we can be considered in a case where such a condition exists, are committing two great evils. First, we are putting a heavy burden upon the shoulders of one who is trying to row against the current, actuated by the offender of the opposite side, making that life quite miserable by being forced to deprive themselves of the very essentials of life, making the little pleasure of the past enjoyed now only by the mere fact of the word. Their children, if any, are neglected and deprived of the nourishment which tends to make good moral men and women for the future. On the other hand, we, as the investor, run a 100 to 1 shot of ever getting the investment put into this account.

Understand, we are not only losing the money but are responsible for helping along that terrible condition to an end more degrading and more deplorable than when the loan was first made. You fostered and actually paved the way for a future period of this damnable condition. Whereas, by reason of the fact, you thought you knew them and did not see where a little questioning was necessary enabling you to get closer to your customer and their most up-to-date domestic relations.

However, Mr. and Mrs. Jones are politely ushered into one of our closing rooms which are well lighted, neat, and clean. I see they are seated, and instead of rushing through the closing of the loan the moment they are seated in their respective places, I allow them to remain there as long as 5 to 10 minutes when able to do so. My reason for this is to permit them to get acquainted with their surroundings, and take in the general method of our business. Occasionally, their glances are met with one of our employees, whom, I try to have, wear a pleasant expression showing a willingness to render the customer any assistance they may seek. On passing through this closing room, the employee will extend to the party or parties in waiting a pleasant smile with a cheerful "Good morning," and at the same time assure them they will be attended to immediately.

In due time, I take up this Mr. and Mrs. Jones' application by going to our large application file, locate previous account, withdraw same, and place all other papers such as inventory sheet, statement and bill of sale on my desk and only use the latest window application and the former reference paper.

Going into the room quietly, I make it a practice to pass a remark on the weather or say:—"Why you are quite a stranger." Perhaps I will say:—"Did I not see you at such and such a place?" or pass a word of comment on the apparent good health of the customer, etc., all the while taking good care to watch my hearers closely, but not to the point of embarrassment. I just wish to show them they are doing business with people who look the cutomer straight in the eyes, and stand for only what is just as we are believers in the old adage of "right is right, and wrongs no one." At this point I may say that a common practice in my office when I do not handle the applicant myself, is to introduce one of my employees to the customer and assure them that prompt courteous treatment will be given them by Mr. or Miss so-and-so as the case may be, at the same time remarking that they will go over their papers carefully with them, and where discrepancies appear they will adjust them with their assistance, with the assurance that all questions be treated in strict confidence as in the past.

I unfold the application or reference sheet. At this point may I say, we do not term the latter a reference sheet but big application, because as soon as you speak of reference right then and there you leave yourself open for unnecessary questioning, and we have found it preferable to mention large application when referring to same.

I go about checking up the names, keeping the application at a distance so that the customer may not read it with me while doing so. These names, you understand, were given on a previous loan by the customer. I usually begin by saying:—

Q. "Mrs. Jones, your parents are still living with you, are they not?"

A. "Why no, they live at so-and-so address. They have their own home, and have had for some time. When giving you this information, I made a mistake if I told you my father and mother were stopping with us."

While this is said, I have their present address, but never say where they really said they lived at our previous meeting.

Q. "And Thomas, your married brother, and wife, I presume are still at their old address. Giving any address other than the one I have on the papers. This will bring out the correct address of these two without much loss of time. I then take up the other brother, John.

Q. "Your brother, John, where did you say he is living, Mrs. Jones?"

A. Let me see, where does John live? Now, I think he is in the same place."

Q. "And where is that?"

A. "Why, so-and-so address."

We also have his address as he has made no change to date.

Q. "And did you say that Mary, your sister, was married?"

A. "No, not yet. She is still at home."

Q. "And working every day?"

A. "Yes."

Q. "Quite a steady worker?"

A. "Yes."

Q. "What is she doing now?"

A. "Why, I understand she has been advanced to forelady at such and such a place," giving the address.

Q. "Oh, she is working there is she. Where is the factory located. They moved, did they not?"

A. "Not that I know of. I think they are still at such-and-such a place."

At the conclusion of this talk I have the sister's place of employment for future reference if needed. She living home with her parents, whose address I have, makes two addresses on the party. I still find one more sister who is married and living apart from her husband, she staying with her parents but employed, and he with his people and also employed. Here is information we need badly, but, if you notice, we are seeking or making inquiries about one who is at this time an apparent dead issue by reason of the condition; but we, with our experience, feel quite confident the couple that seems to be at odds will eventually come together and mingle as one of the customer's family, and can be called upon for information if the occasion arises. We call her Mrs. Brown, whose name we have on the original application but as living together at her parent's home peacefully, and when I strike the cord of Mrs. Brown and her husband, right away I notice a change in the expression of the party before me, allowing me to surmise at once that something is radically wrong with this pair. I notice the customer under question recovers herself immediately, and I feel free to say:—

Q. "Mr. and Mrs. Brown, I understand, are related to you, are they not?"

A. "Yes, Mrs. Brown is my married sister, but to be frank with you, I do not see where their name should be used in connection with our loan."

My reply:—"Well, Mrs. Jones, I will leave this to yourselves after I inform you that this is but an application form, the completeness, of which, must be obtained, and since I can doubly assure you of its being in strict confidence and the parties whose names I am seeking are absolutely free of all or any responsibility whatever, and that it is necessary that we make your application one complete document, and having assured you of its use, you will not hesitate to give me the information I desire. Understand, Mr. and Mrs. Jones, I am simply following a general ruling of our company, and as soon as I am through with this application, it is numbered and filed away, only to be withdrawn on just such an occasion as today, and in your presence.

This explanation seems to hit the husband favorably, but not so with the wife who insists upon not using or referring to Mr. and Mrs. Brown. But I can see in my mind's eye that she does not object to my taking the sister's name and address; but I want all information on this sister, and the same information on the husband, and, gentlemen, I propose to get it. You fully understand all this happens in less time than it takes to write it. I must think quickly, and I do just that thing by shifting over with this remark.

Q. "She is your twin, Mrs. Jones, is she not?"

A. "Not at all."

Q. "Well, I understand she was and worked in the same place with your sister Mary."

A. "No. You seem to have my people mixed up some."

My reply to this remark is an acknowlelgement at once. In doing so, I will get the following data to the effect that Mr. Brown is employed at a given address, at a salary of so much, and a friend, Mr. Thomas, an attorney, at a given address is getting the sister an order from the court for support or partial support. In addition to this line of information I get what led up to this separation. All the information I started out to get on Mrs. Brown is poured out to me without an effort on my part, because I tackled what seemed to be the largest mountain first and made the second drive on the mole hill, Mrs. Brown, and in addition to this, I placed myself in an embarrassing position by acknowledging my error on her relations. But, what of that? I got what I started out to get and what was expected of me by those who have faith in me, and depend upon my executing their orders generally.

Now, that I have accomplished all needed on Mrs. Jones, I look to Mr. Jones and say:—

Q. "Your parents, Mr. Jones, do not appear here; that is, their name and address. How is that?"

I look at both the customers, and presently Mrs. Jones will say to her husband: "Didn't you give your parent's name and address? I gave mine. This comes with a look from Mrs. Jones which brings out the desired information to the effect that his parents lived at a given address and his father is employed by a certain firm up town, giving the name and address where he has worked for years.

Understand, I did not have the above data by some reason that must go unexplained, but took a chance on thinking they were still in the land of the living and hit it right. On the other hand, had the parents been dead, the question and answer would have come through immediately. Mr. Jones has two brothers, one is married and has a home of his own. I simply ask Mr. Jones, point blank, his brother's name and present address. This question is answered before I finish asking same, but to be sure I get them posted correctly and avoid mixing as I had on Mrs. Jones' side, I go a little further on the subject by inquiring of Mr. Jones if his brother, Charles, as I will name him, does not belong to the so-and-so lodge of which he is a member. While this is information I make note of, it has a double meaning as, you understand, brother, Thomas's whereabouts I have yet to get, and that last remark about the lodge opens a way for further discussion during which time I will edge in on the second brother's present address and place of employment. At this point, I wish to make it known that Thomas's address at the time of the previous loan's consummation was marked upon the application as being unknown.

I imagine it good policy to add one more to this family, a sister. This time the young lady is a widow whose health has been impaired through worry over the loss of her husband and other personal matters, an inkling, of which, I had gotten in the early part of our present interview, but did not know where she was located having no thought of her being in poor health, and did not care to press my people with further questioning when this was first mentioned, leaving it for a further discussion. At length I said, addressing him:—

Q. "You spoke of your sister, Mr. Jones, a moment ago, is she well?"

A. "Coming from the wife as they generally are the first to take up a question pertaining to the husband's side of the house. She goes on to say that the sister had only been married a short time, and was very much devoted to her husband who was taken with a sudden illness resulting in his death. Since this happened, she has gone to pieces, until we found it imperative to end her away.

Hesitation:—

Q. "I am surely sorry for this unfortunate girl, and fully appreciate just how she must feel, and the condition she is in. I further know where a family lives for one another as they did, a circumstance of this nature plays havoc with all your kin. Did she have a good physician?"

A. "Yes, we think so."

Q. "Was he a specialist?"

A. "No. Doctor X (giving his name and address in full) was his attending physician; in fact, he is the family doctor, and insisted upon sending Mr. Jones's sister to Mount so-and-so. I suppose you have heard of this place?"

My reply. I assure her I have and know of the great reputation its name carries, etc. I then make it my business to encourage them along by dwelling on the nature of the illness, assuring them in my experience I have found just such cases would adjust themselves in time, and are not as serious as one would imagine, and my personal wish and opinion was that they would see her enjoy good health again, soon, as I was confident she was receiving the very best medical attention, which would cost considerable, I thought. This remark would bring about the information as to what purpose this money was being used, as the window application simply stated "Personal Use." But now we hear the loan is being used as their personal share donated to help defray the expense of sister's medical attention, etc.

Having accomplished this, I direct my attention to the children of Mr. and Mrs. Jones, their age, sex, and to what school they attend whether it be public or parochial for the purpose of locating the school with as little trouble as possible if the occasion warrants same. I usually make inquiries of the health of the youngsters and what progress they are making in their respective classes, etc. The above information is very easily obtained, as my experience has proven to me that to praise a child or children pleases the mother to say the least, and will help one wonderfully to cement your customer to your line of business or firm which you represent.

I at once get my papers together and arrange same, which consists of Judgment Note and Statement Sheet whether it be as a rentor or an owner as the case may be. This Statement, I mention, bears the signature of both wife and husband, the latter is of course in the capacity of the guarantor and bears this title.

I hand the Statement to the wife requesting her to kindly read same and fill out. If not able to accomplish this at once because of nervousness, I allay her feelings by showing her how it should be done, but insist upon her filling it out herself. If I find she is unable to write, I turn it over to the husband, but try to induce the wife to do the best she can first. In the case where the husband is in the same predicament, I am obliged to fill it out for them at their dictation, and have them both sign, being sure they understand the contents of same by reading it aloud carefully to them, the operation, of which, takes but a very few minutes.

After this is done, I have them sign the Judgment Note after I am convinced they understand the nature of the document. In some cases they show signs of wanting to read it over again to see if it is the same as the previous note they signed. In this case, I insist upon them doing so, rendering any assistance they may need that they may fully understand just what they are doing. This practice is not a new one nor is it one used since the present new small loan law has been in force. I have never, to my knowledge, allowed a customer to sign a paper in my office that I thought did not know what it meant.

These two papers signed, after being properly filled in, I at once ask for a convenient date upon which they wish to repay the loan. In getting this, I am some times forced to help along a decision or solution and will say: "You both are able to decide the date upon which these payments are to fall due, as you are perfectly acquainted with your present financial condition and know when your income to meet your running obligations is available, I would suggest that you select a date that does not conflict with your other bills—rent, etc., because your future credit depends upon the manner in which you repay this loan." They at length fix the date.

During the time they are signing, or about to sign, I ring for a witness to this part of the transaction. This witness, after seeing the customer sign papers, signs also on the line designated and allotted for this purpose. I do the same in the presence of all in the closing room. If, on the other hand, one signs at home, our representative witnesses the signature, and directly under his signature he writes in pencil the following notation:—"At Home." This is to show that while done at home, one of our representatives was in his presence at the time. I wish to make it known, at this point, that on all transactions where the wife and husband get the loan, four signatures appear on their papers.

I then request the customer to kindly give me the revenue stamp money, the amount being governed by the size of the loan, in no case beyond $.06. I then have the customer's payment book filled out corresponding with the contents appearing in the body of the Note they have signed. I fold this pass-book, or receipt book as it is termed, and in it I place a copy of each one of the pamphlets of literature which we always have about the office. These pamphlets, I may say at this point, serve a wonderful purpose towards the education of the public. Along with one of the circular cards we are using at the time the loan is accepted and in addition to this, I fold one of our little coupons and place this little business getter in the envelope we use for the purpose of helping the customer keep his payment book clean and in tact, with a short talk on the merit of this little folder. In doing so, I make a special remark to the effect that I am inclosing one of our coupons and do so for the purpose of allowing them to pass the good word along to their fellow-neighbors and friends, and in making use of same by virtue of sending a customer to us, to whom we make a loan, we will gladly send to them by mail or in person, $1.00. This is not in the nature of recompense for their solicitation but as a token of appreciation for the interest shown in the company and willingness on their part to help their neighbor or friend to help themselves. It is a common practice as well as quite essential for a firm to do a little advertising all of which must be paid for, many times falling into the hands of those who do not have the interest of its clientele at heart, but we, The Guarantee Loan Company, feel it our duty to set aside a portion of this expense so that the public can be benefited, and doing so, we are adding additional help to them that they may help themselves. And, we assure them they are absolutely free of any responsibility for the party they send to us to whom we make a loan. I further state I want to impress upon your mind that it is the sincere wish of the Guarantee Loan Company that you place this money to good use. For if you do, and lay your plans accordingly, you will find it a pleasure to do business with us. Furthermore, if you do as I have in mind you will, I will have the pleasure of noting a saving on your interest each month you make your payment. This will show me you are a customer who intends to discount every month, and will tend to cement our business relations and in part make it a pleasure for me to mingle in your society. In conclusion I want to offer you any assistance you may require, whether it be in the nature of legal advice, domestic problems, more knowledge of our business, or, as a matter of fact, any time you need help of any kind do not hesitate to call upon me first, and I can assure you that the cost of same to you will be the mere request you make.

HOW I LOOK UP AND JUDGE A NEW APPLICATION.

ARTHUR R. HIGHT.

One of the most important questions confronting those engaged in the Industrial Loan business is "Whom am I to trust?" In our endeavors to decide this question, we seek to learn certain things about the applicant which will allow us to faithfully gauge his desirability as a risk.

Unfortunately, there are very few credit risks that can be termed unquestionably good or irredeemably poor on the spot. It is with the great majority of intermediary hazards that the credit house has to deal. The line of division between the acceptable and non-acceptable risks in this large class depends largely upon the policy of the house. We can all recall an instance of having made a loan, after one of our competitors has turned it down. We find some offices more liberal in extending credit than others. Men also think differently, and are apt to be less exacting as to a certain qualifications than his friend in another office.

Keeping these things in mind, I cannot hope to submit a plan for judging credit risks that will meet with universal approval. Opinions in the matter of judging these risks, large and small, are greatly diversified. It is, therefore, my intention to offer a few suggestions, with the hope that you will discuss them, and out of the ensuing exchange of views will come some helpful suggestions for the benefit of all concerned.

I will consider first the matter of looking up the applicant. It seems to me we are seeking to learn three things about them, namely: Who they are; what they have; and how they pay their bills. It is our first duty to establish unquestionably the identity of the applicants. It is our object to find out "Who they are" in its fullest sense.

In doing this, we should direct our investigation along lines best calculated to secure full information in the shortest possible time, and with the least possible publicity. The rest important points to be investigated are: first, personal character, which includes, (a) Habits of living and spending, with particular regard to the thrift and social ambitions of the applicant's wife. (b) Tendencies to drink or gamble to excess. (c) Truthfulness and frankness in answering questions. 2d, Stability of income, and ability to properly provide for the needs of the family. 3d, General economical conditions of the household, carefully noting any tendency toward extravagance. 4th, Health of the applicants and relations between them, whether congenial, or antagonistic or quarrelsome. 5th, Credit experience, past and present.

How we are to secure this information? We cannot secure a rating from a Commercial agency, inasmuch as these organizations only carry the names of more or less substantial business houses. We must depend entirely upon an oral investigation, the value of which depends largely on the equipment and personality of the investigator. Results will usually be commensurate with his efficiency. The efficient appraiser is brief and tactful, and is quick to grasp the significance of facts. He will gain many a tip from his personal observation.

Personally, I do not think well of inquiries among the applicants' neighbors, if it is possible to get results elsewhere. The corner merchant, is in business much the same as we are, and is more apt to be in sympathy with our desires. This is especially true if he is doing a credit business. The average grocer who has had unsatisfactory experience with your applicant is sure to open up, and tell you the story, if he is approached politely and tactfully. In his attempts to collect what is due him, he often gathers other information about his customer which will be valuable to you. If it happens that you contact a grocer with whom the applicant does not deal, he can usually direct you to the store where they do deal. With him, our desire that the matter be treated confidentially is also more apt to be respected.

Does the landlord live in the neighborhood? He is a good man to talk to, and often can tell you just what you want to know. I have often stopped a passing milkman or bread-man who has told me his opinion of the applicant in question.

Neighbors are brought into our confidence only as a last resort, when all other attempts at enlightment have failed. Information of this kind can be depended upon only according to the measure of friendliness between the informant and the applicant. If there happens to be enmity between them, we can only look for an enlarged or distorted opinion of their character. On the other hand, a neighbor who is exceedingly friendly with the applicant may exaggerate the real condition of things, and advance misleading information.

Appraisers should therefore, be careful to consider the reliability of all information, and the character and dependability of the informant. In contacting the neighbor, it is always a good idea to verify statements made by the applicant concerning the husbands position, income, steadiness.

And, finally, it is the duty of the appraiser to turn in a report that has covered all details, and leaves nothing for the manager to guess about. The appraiser who is thorough will greatly facilitate the work of the manager in judging risks, at the same time contributing his share to the building of a clean business.

The final judging of the risk is based on the information contained in the appraisers report, and can be reached best by careful attention to the following essentials: Character, ability, and capacity. Character is the essential of primary importance. It is the essence of the credit problem, for you will find that men or women deficient in character cannot be trusted.

It goes without saying that the loaning of money on security such as ours should be restricted to the trustworthy. I, personally feel that more stress should be laid on the character of the applicant than on the amount of the appraisement. I would much rather make a $200 loan on a $60 appraisement where evidence of good character is obvious, than a $60 loan on a $200 appraisement where the applicant is of questionable character.

In taking this attitude, I have considered the effect that a large loan on a small appraisement may have on the borrower. It is true that the tendency to respect an agreement is stronger with those who have offered the strongest security, and yet, in the end you will find that your only occasion to foreclose on security has been due to wilful negligence, or lack of character on the part of the borrower. In short, it is my opinion that, when you have proven conclusively the good character of the risk, and his ability to pay, you have excellent security for your money, even though the appraisement is low.

The purpose for which the money is used is also a very important consideration. People who put their money to good use, and profit by the use of it are usually good accounts.

The Loan man, however, must not only feel sure of the character of a prospective borrower, but must also possess a reasonable knowledge as to his ability to make good the terms of his agreement. In other words, after we have become satisfied of the good moral qualities of the applicant for credit, we must then decide how much credit can be given. What is their capaciy? If he is given too much, we might do more harm than good.

To gauge the credit capacity of an applicant, we must attempt to establish a ratio between the amount of his income, and the sum total of his obligations. The data necessary to secure this information is sometimes found in past experience. At any rate, we are satisfied that we cannot gauge their repaying ability by knowing their income alone. We must have some knowledge of the demands made on his income.

I might say that the recent developement of the "Exchange Bureau" has been an exceedingly important step in this direction. Information secured from this source is often a deciding factor in judging risks, inasmuch as we receive valuable information regarding the obligations of our applicant. It also affords an excellent protection against the disaster which sooner or later accompanies the over loading of the irresponsible borrower. Those of us who are members of the exchange are certainly better equipped to judge an application than those who are not, simply because we have access to more complete information about that class of borrower who has had other loans.

We can never hope to eliminate the element of risk, although it can be lessened substantially by our willingness to support this movement or any other movement for improved equipment, in the shape of reliable records.

In the final analysis, the controlling factor in extending credits is confidence, which is our final assurance as to the debtors ability and willingness to meet his payments promptly.

If after carefully considering the contents of the appraisers report, we are inclined toward confidence in the applicant, we are usually safe in making the loan.

In conclusion, it is well for us to judge our risks in an open-minded, unprejudiced fashion. Let us forget our personal likes and dislikes, and give every application careful consideration. Even as we are careful that dishonest persons are apprehended and refused, so should we be doubly careful that no worthy persons are denied the advantage of our service. It would be a serious matter indeed if we were to refuse an accommodation through the faulty judgment of our managers or the carelessly secured and erroneous information of the appraiser.

It is the appraisers job to look up the risk and the managers job to judge it. If the appraiser has done his work conscientiously and thoroughly, the matter of judging it will be made comparatively easy.

Sioux City, Iowa, November 23, 1922.

Dear Mr. Kehr:

I have read with much interest the article written by Geo. W. Curry in the November Industrial News on "How I Look up and Judge An Old Customer's Application."

Mr. Curry has written an article to which he undoubtedly has given considerable thought. The topic upon which he has prepared his paper is one that would make a splendid discussion or debate. His method is more logical than practical, and I question if he practices what he preaches, as I am unable to agree with him with reference to looking up an old customer's application or a new application by referring to two of the neighbors and three merchants.

We are in business to render a service to humanity; a service of loaning money. We like to believe in people, sometimes they take advantage of us and we have lost money because of it. We find that when we lose money by being misled by our faith in people, we afterwards make more than we lost because of that faith. It is understood by the nature of our business that it is confidential, whether or not we advertise confidential loans, and when two neighbors and three grocery stores have been canvassed, everyone in the community will know all about the applicant applying for a loan, and the injury to the applicant and the future growth of the business will be severe.

Statistics gathered by those who have made a special study of Psychology find that 95 per cent of the people are honest and meet their obligations; three of the 5 per cent had good intentions to pay at the time the transaction was entered into, leaving only 2 per cent that could be classed as dead-beats and criminals. A large percentage of our business comes from renewals of old loans, or loans partially paid off, and anyone that has self respect resents having their affairs become public, especially in money matters, and the information which is received from the small merchant on the corner, is not to be taken very seriously, as has been explained in his paper.

We judge an old customer, not entirely by his former dealings with us, but by obtaining a new rating from the Rating Bureau, which is managed through Retail Credit Men's Association, and in that rating it will bring out the facts pertaining to the true condition of the borrower. I do not think that it is fair to the applicant, whether it is a new loan or renewal, to make inquiry from the neighbors and dealers where he does his trading, as it has a tendency for them to immediately mistrust their customer and making inquiry from his neighbors will affect his standing among them and create a gossip that will do him injury, as well as the company making such inquiry, and I would regard it intolerable if I were put in the position of the borrower and the loan office would make inquiry referred to in Mr. Curry's paper, and how can the business ever hope to be dignified, elevated or uplifted by such tactics, and for the benefit of those who have had limited experience in the business, I feel justified in expressing my views pertaining to the subject, as we have been in business over ten years, and at the present time making 250 loans a month, with an average loss of less than 1% on amount loaned.

I can state pertaining to our own business, and my instructions have always been, it is better to make a doubtful loan than to turn down a good one, and whenever there is a question of doubt as to whether to make the applicant a loan or not, it has always been made. These however do not come often, as it is seldom that we cannot decide without any question. Service in our business is just as essential as money itself, and it is necessary to have an office not only well equipped with suitable furniture, being in a convenient place, but equipment such as interest calculators so that payments can be made in the shortest time and mistakes eliminated to the minimum.

I trust that my criticism will be accepted, as I intend it to be constructive, with no feeling except a friendly one for the author, and I trust that some time I will have the opportunity of meeting Mr. Curry, and I feel that I can learn much much from him, and want to praise him for his laudable attempt to prepare a paper on a subject that he felt would bring out a difference of opinion by his opening remark: "Fools rush in where angels fear to tread."

Yours very truly,

A. LESLIE WHITMER, Sec'y-Treas., Iowa I. L. Ass'n.

SIOUX CITY, Iowa, November, 20, 1922.

BAKER & COMPANY,
Chicago, Ill.

Dear Mr. Baker:

I am sorry that we have put you to so much bother endeavoring to collect our Nick White loan which should have never been made, and as the loan is small I think it best to just forget about it, as the gentleman has showed his intentions of beating us out of the claim and although we show a chance of collecting it with your splendid co-operation it would undoubtedly cost many times the claim.

I want to thank you for the effort which you have made and the trouble your office has been put to. Your willingness to assist us means more than collecting the claim.

Yours truly,

PROVIDENT LOAN ASSOCIATION.

PHILADELPHIA, Pa. November 21, 1922.

Dear Mr. Kehr:

As Exchange Bureaus are now established in Newark, Jersey City, Scranton, Wilkes Barre, Pittsburgh, Philadelphia Baltimore and Indianapolis and are to be established in Reading, Providence and Pawtucket, would it not be well to insert a notice in the Lenders News that anyone having skips in any of these cities to immediately forward the name and such information as they have respecting the account, to you as National Secretary. Then you forward it promptly to the secretary or one of the officers of the Exchange Bureau in the town in which the skip is supposed to have moved

We are prompted to recommend this as the result of a skipper from Wilkes-Barre to Philadelphia, owing five companies $1294, and they applied for a loan of $80, immediately on arrival here. The Exchange Bureau put a crimp in this fellow's desires, at least so far as the members of the Exchange Bureau are concerned. There are some companies still outside and there is a possibility that this fellow was able to get his loan from one of these non-members.

We thank you for this co-operation.

Yours very truly,

C. H. WATTS.

CREDIT UNIONS.

Under the caption "Credit Unions For Small Loans," Samuel Crowther, contributed to the December System Magazine, an interesting article on this branch of finance. All wide awake members should read this article for their own education.

A. V. HART PICKED TO LEAD LENDERS ASSOCIATION.

Prominent Stonehurst Citizen Elected to Chairmanship of Big Organization.

A. V. Hart, of Marlborough road, Stonehurst, was elected chairman of Pennsylvania Industrial Lenders Association for 1922, at the annual banquet of the organization at the Bellevue-Stratford on Thursday evening, November 16.

Mr. Hart, who is only 39 years, is the youngest man to have ever held this important office. Alfred S. Ezekiel, of Philadelphia, was chairman of the organization last year.

The association was formed seven years ago in Philadelphia for the purpose of uplifting and dignifying the loan business in the State. Another important duty of the organization is to work for the elimination of the loan shark evil. All members are under the supervision of the Banking Department of Pennsylvania and affiliated with the American Industrials Lenders Association with headquarters in New York.

Mr. Hart is active in many local business organizations. Besides being president of the Hart Loan Society, he is also township auditor of Upper Darby, treasurer of Highland Park Building and Loan Association, director of Llanerch Building and Loan Association, secretary of Highland Park Fire Company, and secretary of Upper Darby Township Boosters' Club.—*Township News, Upper Darby, Pa. NATIONAL CONVENTION.

NEW BEDFORD, Mass. November 22, 1922.

Dear Mr. Kehr:

At our last meeting the Association voted to go on record as favoring the third week in September as the time for the National Convention, a Middle West City for the place and to be financed by the American Association.

Very truly yours,

H. G. DESORMAUX,
Secretary, Mass. I. L. Ass'n.

ATLANTA, Ga., November 10, 1922.

Dear Mr. Kehr:

At the regular meeting of the GEORGIA INDUSTRIAL LENDERS ASSOCIATION held in Atlanta Thursday evening November 9, 1922 the letter of our National Secretary in re expenditures and the place of the next National Convention was read and discussed at length.

The following resolution was accordingly adopted:—

Resolved that the next National convention be held in Pennsylvania possibly Pittsburgh; that the costs of said Convention be not more than three thousand dollars ($3,000.00) and that the National Association bear all expense and act as hosts to the State Associations.

Very truly yours,

B. L. LASSITER,
Sec'y Georgia I. L. Ass'n.

LYNCHBURG, VA., November 23, 1922.

Dear Mr. Kehr:

Replying to your letter of November 2, relative to the methods of financing the AMERICAN INDUSTRIAL LENDERS ASSOCIATION CONVENTION next year, it is probable that we may deem it advisable to call a meeting of the Virginia Industrial Lenders before the present year expires, in order that we may take up the matter of financing the convention of the National body. When the Virginia Lenders have expressed conclusively their views, I will inform you.

Let me say that personally, I believe the plan of the different state associations assuming one-half of the expenses on a pro rata bases, to be an advisable one. I agree with Mr. Whitmer and Dr. Mueller, that the entertainment feature of the convention of 1922 was to some extent top-heavy, and that less money should be used for this particular feature, as it is obvious that the purpose of the convention is, the association of business ideas as a body of loan men, and less entertainment would in no manner detract from the value of the association.

I am taking up this matter of the opinion of the Virginia Association with the executive body in order that we may be able to answer you no later than the first of the year, and perhaps earlier.

Very truly yours,
C. M. Garrett,
Secretary Virginia I. L. Ass'n.

Baltimore, Md., November 23, 1922.
Dear Mr. Kehr:

At a meeting of the Executive Body of our State Association to-day, the writer was instructed to advise you that we recommend not spending over $3,000 in financing the National Convention in the future. Half of this amount to be raised by the State Associations, and the balance paid out of the National Treasury.

September is an ideal month to hold a Convention. It was the consensus of opinion that Atlantic City would be the most desirable place to hold our next National Convention, providing it was held in the East.

Very truly yours,
H. C. Moore,
Sec'y Maryland I. L. Ass'n.

MARYLAND.

The November Meeting of the Maryland Industrial Lenders Association was held on Tuesday November 14th at 8 p. m. in the Board Room of the Merchants and Manufacturers Association.

The minutes of the meeting show that there were present, J. J. Wood, Community Finance Service, E. E. Hougham, Cooperative Loan & Investment Co., W. F. Oliver, Jr., F. M. Ebert and C. R. Hathaway, Household Loan Co., Lewis F. Eckhardt and Roy T. Baseman, Peoples Loan Society, H. C. Moore, A. L. Wick and E. F. Moore, Chesapeake Loan Co., F. B. Snyder and L. E. Pope, Beneficial Loan Society and H. T. Mattingly representing the Surety Guarantee Co., Commercial Guarantee Co., and the Reliance Guarantee Co.

A lengthy discussion took place by most all present upon the goodness of the Association going on record as favoring and observing the following holidays in their offices:—

New Years Day, George Washington's Birthday, Decoration Day, Independence Day, Labor Day, Armistice Day, Thanksgiving Day and Christmas Day.

Upon motion by Mr. Wick that each member observe the holidays as given, seconded by Mr. Hougham, and unanimously carried. The Secretary ordered to do so record the holidays as given with the minutes of this meeting.

The Secretary read a letter from Chairman Larsen expressing his regret on being unable to be with us, and expressed a wish that business conditions would permit him meeting with us occasionally.

The subject was discussed as to the time, place and method of financing the next National Convention. It was recommended that not over $3,000 be spent in financing the National Convention in the future. Half of this amount to be raised by the State Associations, and the balance paid out of the National Treasury. All members agreed that the latter part of September was an ideal time to hold a Convention. It was the consensus of opinion that Atlantic City would be a most desirable place to hold our next National Convention. The matter did not come to a vote, so the Chairman instructed the Executive Committee to discuss the matter and notify the Secretary, who would advise Mr. Kehr, our National Secretary as to what our views were in the matter.

The Secretary advised that the Entertainment Committee had secured Mr. W. F. Oliver, Jr. to prepare a paper. Mr. Oliver being called upon, read a most enjoyable paper as follows:—

SOME HINTS TO HELP AND IMPROVE THE OUTSIDE MAN.

An outside man fills an important, as well as essential post in the modern loan office. His duties are many, and the manner in which he bears himself, first as a gentleman and then as a painstaking and thorough investigator, often has a very considerable bearing on the quality of business that is carried on the books as loans, in the office in which he works.

His work lies most upon the outside, where it is his duty to look up loans, call upon delinquent borrowers, locate skips and in fact be the link which provides the office with a mass of information it constantly requires in the detail of his work. How well he does these things is often reflected in the standing of his office, both as to kind of loans that are made, their promptness in meeting payments and the absence of skip cards in the outside routes.

Often bad payers when handled with good common sense by the outsideman can be shown or induced to pay upon their overdue accounts and thereby save money for their firm. The hostile or discontented borrower who has a grievance, can be pacified and be gotten in touch with the office for this must always happen if the money is to be collected as it should be. Talking with these people in their homes or at their work or wherever it is necessary to see them, means that an outside man with good solid common sense can do wonders to help in the collection of an overdue account, if he is a fellow who does not fly off the handle too quickly, but uses sense and judgment instead to help him get what he is after.

"Bawling" out a slow may give some outsideman satisfaction, but it is expensive to the firm that employs him. Nobody ever induced a bad payer to get busy and pay in that way, and what is worse, such conduct closes the door against him the next time he calls. The right way is to listen patiently and let the person called upon tell their story, after which the outsideman can show them the reasons why they are wrong, and the importance of their obligation and the need of attending to it in a businesslike way.

Locating "skips" is often done best by not raising a big fuss about it, but go quietly to work and have a supreme confidence in your own ability to locate your party. Believe in yourself and your confidence will find its reflex in results you get. Never give up and say "this one is gone." They are only "gone" as long as you admit they are. Be diplomatic, neat in appearance, polite, firm and have lots of patience. Take plenty of time on an old account, and just as much as on a new card in your pack. Don't forget the old money is needed just as much by your office as the new delinquent past due payment.

Be a "sticker" and put all your time on your work. Don't use your employer's time by attending to your private affairs while on the street, unless you ask your manager's permission in the morning.

Be proud of your office. Uphold the loan business you are engaged in to the public, and to the firm's customers you call upon in the day's work. You have a future in the business, and you outsidemen will be the managers of to-morrow if you work hard and faithfully. A great deal depends upon your look-up on the outside, for the inside force is partly depending on your thoroughness in your look-up.

W. J. Oliver, Jr.

Mr. Oliver was complimented by several members on the thoroughness with which he handled the subject.

The remainder of the evening was turned over to the outsidemen, and we had many interesting experiences told in their original way of their success in taking care of the outside work. Special stress was laid upon locating skips, receiving applications over the telephone or by mail, also the advisability of taking a reference sheet at the time the application was received or when the deal was closed. It was received with surprise that one member was running a large office successfully without the aid of a reference sheet. Mention was made of he fact that he had few skips in his office.

The outsidemen furnished much food for thought, and offered many suggestions in the way of improving collections.

It was a most enjoyable meeting, ranking 100% from an educational standpoint. Those who failed to attend, are the losers.

Upon motion by Mr. Woods, seconded by Mr. Mattingly, the meeting adjourned until Tuesday evening 8 o'clock December 12th. H. C. Moore, Secretary.

CONNECTICUT.

The regular meeting of the Connecticut Association was held at the Hotel Bond, Hartford, Wednesday, October 18th at 1:30 p. m. where an appetizing luncheon was served.

The meeting was called to order by Chairman O'Brien, at 2:30, and those present were National Chairman, R. M. Rutherford, Aaron Berman, Alan Dolliver, and Messrs. Hawinkson, Kendall, Bitting, Scarpa, Sanderson and Devine of the Beneficial Loan Society, and O'Brien, Edwards, Prarie, McMullin and Roberts of the Equitable Industrial Loan Society.

The Membership Committee reported the following applications:

The applications of both parties were accepted.

The resignation of George C. Young of the Publicity Committee, was accepted, and the Chairman appointed Mr. Bumsted of Bridgeport in his place, and instructed the Secretary to notify Mr. Bumsted, who was not present at the meeting.

The resignation of Mr. H. P. Stephenson of the Executive Committee was accepted, and the Chairman appointed Allan K. Dolliver to succeed him. The Chairman also appointed Mr. Scarpa, of Waterbury to the Executive Committee.

Mr. A. S. Edwards, of Waterbury, gave an interesting talk on "Psychology of Intuition in the Loan Business."

Mr. Dolliver, of the Beneficial Loan Society also spoke.

On the subject of "Taking a New Application," one minute talks were given by the following: Edwards, Hawkinson, Kendall, Scarpa, Devine, Roberts, Bitting, Sanderson, McMullin, Dolliver, and O'Brien.

It was voted that the members of the Association, in their different cities get together and arrange for the exchange of information regarding new applications received to prevent customers doubling their accounts.

The Secretary was instructed to write Mr. Hougham, at the Co-Operative Loan and Investment Co., Singer Building, Baltimore, and secure information as to how the exchange works in the Baltimore territory. The Secretary was also instructed to advise the members what Mr. Hougham replies.

The Secretary was also instructed to send the National Secretary, Mr. Kehr, a full report of this meeting, and also see that notice of meeting was put in the papers of each City where members have offices.

The Chairman assigned the following subjects and speakers for the next meeting.

"How to Handle Collections"—Mr. Bitting.

"How to Educate Clients to Pay Promptly"—Mr. Sanderson.

"How Can we Improve Ourselves to Give More Efficient Service."—Mr. Kendall.

"Handling the Skip."—Mr. Scarpa.

The Secretary was instructed to secure a price from the National Chairman on 1,300 copies of, Reginald Heber Smith's booklet, "The Facts About the Small Loan Business, and the Scientific Rate of Fair Charges." The Secretary to use his own judgment regarding ordering, after receiving the price.

H. G. McMullen, Secretary.

PENNSYLVANIA.

The annual meeting of the Pennsylvania Association was held in the Red Room of the Bellevue-Stratford Hotel, Philadelphia, at 10 a. m. Thursday, November 16th.

The meeting was called to order by Chairman A. S. Ezekiel.

Fifty members were present at the morning session.

At this time the Chair announced the attendance of R. M. Rutherford, National Chairman, and on order of the Chair, Mr. Young escorted Mr. Rutherford to the platform amid applause.

The Secretary reported a membership of 84—83 in good standing as of December 31, 1922; 50 are also members in good standing of the American I. L. Association as of February 1, 1923.

Unfinished Business.

Mr. Young, Chairman of Delegates Committee to the New York Convention of the American I. L. Association, made a thorough and comprehensive report of the activities of the Convention, which, on motion of Mr. Horn, seconded by Mr. Roberts, was accepted and the Committee ordered discharged with thanks.

Mr. Herron of Philadelphia, a member of the Local Committee urging the establishment of Exchange Bureaus, reported on the activity of the Exchange Bureau in Philadelphia and elsewhere, and continued to recommend to our members the establishment of such Bureaus in their cities. Information respecting the establishment of Exchange Bureaus may be obtained by addressing the Secretary. Following Mr. Herron's report, Messrs. Gatter, Goldman, Cronk, Mueller and Bachofer spoke favorably on this important subject.

New Business.

On motion of Mr. Moore, seconded by Mr. Burt, the following were elected to membership as of this date—Community Finance Service, Inc., 216 S. 52d Street, Philadelphia, American Saving and Loan Company, 1325 South Broad Street, Philadelphia, Beneficial Loan Society, Broad and New Streets, Bethlehem, Note Loan Company, 1237 Market Street, Room 205, Philadelphia.

The Secretary read a communication from National Secretary Kehr, in which he advised of the discontinuance of free subscription to members of our organization who are not members of the American I. L. Association, and making inquiry whether the Pennsylvania Association wish to subscribe for the Lenders News for such members. On motion of Dr. Mueller, seconded by Mr. Rutherford, it was agreed that the Pennsylvania Association would not subscribe for the Lenders News for members of the Pennsylvania Association who are not members of the A. I. L. Association.

The Secretary read a communication from National Secretary Kehr, on the matter of the next annual meeting place, the time of the National Convention, and how in the judgment of our members it should be financed. Following a lengthy discussion, on motion of Mr. Hart, seconded by Mr. Wick, the matter was referred to the incoming Executive Committee with power to act.

On motion of Dr. Mueller, seconded by Mr. Devine, the Secretary was authorized to invite members having skip accounts in cities where Exchange Bureaus are operated to send him the names and other information that he might have it recorded in the Exchange Bureaus' files and in this way avoid further doubling up.

This being the Annual Meeting a report of Chairman Ezekiel was read, by the Secretary, and on motion of Dr. Mueller, seconded by Mr. Harris, was accepted, with a vote of thanks, and ordered placed on file.

The annual report of the Secretary was read and on motion of Dr. Mueller, seconded by Mr. Bachofer, was ordered approved and spread on the minutes of this meeting.

The annual report of the Treasurer was then read, and on motion of Dr. Mueller, seconded by Mr. Hutchins, was ordered accepted, and made a part of the minutes of this meeting.

The above report was approved by Auditing Committee.

C. R. Fahringer.
M. Hartman.

The annual report of the Membership Committee Chairman Mueller was read and motion of Mr. Lyons, seconded by Mr. Burt, was ordered accepted, placed on file and a vote of thanks tendered the retiring Chairman.

The Morning Session was then recessed for Luncheon, at which there were sixty present. A stirring address by Mr. Joseph H. Hagedorn, Chairman of Civic Affairs Committee, of the City Club, Philadelphia, was much enjoyed.

Promptly at 2:30 p. m. the Afternoon Session was opened by Chairman pro tem Moore. The Chairman appointed Messrs. Kehr, Harris and Bachofer as a Nominating Committee.

The annual report of the Legislative Committee Chairman Kehr was then given, and on motion of Mr. Young, seconded by Mr. Roberts, was accepted with a vote of thanks.

Entertainment Committee Chairman Webster's report was read by Mr. Gatter, and on motion of Mr. Moss, seconded by Mr. Young, was accepted with a vote of thanks.

Executive Committee Chairman Moss' report was then given and on motion of Mr. Young, seconded by Mr. Gatter, was accepted with a vote of thanks.

On motion of Mr. Young, seconded by Mr. Millard, the Executive Committee was authorized to inquire into, and to make such recommendations as would be helpful in determining a maximum amount of newspaper advertising space to be used by our members.

The Nominating Committee made the following report: Executive Committee, for the coming year, Messrs. Webster, Hart, Herron, Mueller, Reeves, Moss, Ezekiel, Alcott and Watts. On motion of J. G. Lobb, seconded by Mr. Alcott, the Committee was tendered a vote of thanks and dismissed.

On motion of Mr. Moss, seconded by Mr. Bachofer, the Legislative Committee is authorized to use its own judgment in the handling of all legislative problems.

On motion of Mr. Kehr, seconded by Mr. Young, the suspension of the By-Laws was authorized and that the Convention proceed immediately to the election of officers.

On motion of Mr. Ezekiel, seconded by Mr. Wick, the Secretary was authorized to cast one ballot in favor of the following officers for the ensuing year: A. V. Hart, chairman, Walter Herron and C. G. Mueller, vice-chairman, C. H. Watts, secretary, P. B. Reeves, treasurer.

Chairman Ezekiel then presented the Loving Cup Trophy for the largest membership attendance at the Annual Convention of the American Industrial Lenders Association in September. Pennsylvania having had 77% of their members in attendance. The Cup was presented to the incoming Chairman, who shall be its custodian during his term of office.

The business part of the program having been completed the meeting then listened to a splendid paper by Mr. Arthur R. Hight, Community Finance Service, Inc., Philadelphia, on "How I Look Up and Judge a New Application." On motion of Mr. Gatter, seconded by Mr. Young, a vote of thanks was tendered Mr. Hight and the Secretary instructed to turn it over to the Lenders News for publication.

Mr. James A. Lyons, Guarantee Loan Company, Philadelphia, then delivered a splendid paper, followed by much discussion, on "How I Renew References and Make a Loan to a Former Customer." On motion of Mr. Young, seconded by Mr. Bachofer, a vote of thanks was tendered Mr. Lyons and the Secretary ordered to deliver the paper to the Lenders News for publication.

The Annual Dinner and Entertainment was held in the Clover Room at the Bellevue-Stratford Hotel, at 6:30 P. M. and enjoyed by members, friends and guests.

Among those at the Speaker's Table were Judge J. Willis Martin, Philadelphia; Dr. Louis N. Robinson, Swarthmore; Dr. E. J. Cattell, Philadelphia; W. G. Wood, former chairman; R. M. Rutherford, chairman, American Industrial Lenders Association.

C. H. Watts, Secretary.

INDIANA.

The Semi-Annual Convention of the Indiana Association was held at the Claypool Hotel, Indianapolis, Wednesday, November 15th with a banquet at 6:30. We had as our guests, E. W. Rodgers, secretary of the Bankers Trust Co.; C. M. Lemon, secretary of the Farmers Trust Company; H. A. Schlotzhauer, president of the Commercial National Bank; Dr. Jos. Guenther of the Legal Reform Bureau; A. G. Lester, an official of the Kahn Tailoring Co.; C. W. Camp, Elmer Johnson, Frank Mellis and a few others. The banquet attendance was 50.

Our meeting opened with a luncheon at 12:15 at which 28 were present. Immediately after the luncheon we adjourned to the Palm Room where the minutes of the last meeting were read and approved. The matter of the Conventions of the American Association for the future was discussed at some length and a motion was offered recommending to the American Association that the expense be limited to two thousand dollars in the future; one thousand to be paid by the American and the balance of the expense to be paid by the State Association entertaining. The treasurer reported all bills paid to date and a balance of $3,125.95. The secretary reported 102 members, 74 paid to date, 28 delinquent No further reports, the question box was opened and the following questions were asked and opinions given.

Q. How many owners will have their managers at the May convention?

A. All agreed to have them attend.

Q. Are the Farm Loans 50% of the Business in Indiana? What success would Credit Unions have among farmers?

A. About 50% of the business are farm loans in smaller cities having a population around ten thousand, but in the larger cities a very small per cent are farm loans. No answer to the second part of the question.

Q. Do you not think it advisable to figure interest 30 days each month than exactly the number of days between payments?

A. The general opinion is to figure according to days.

Q. Does a neat and well-furnished office get business and help create favorable publicity?

A. It was the unanimous opinion that it does.

Q. Why cannot the present law be amended so that household goods may be replevined, especially from a third party?

A. It would be necessary to have a legal opinion on this question.

Q. How many offices are coöperating with Dr. Robinson? How many know about his survey?

A. A good many are, a good many did not know about the survey and the secretary took the names of those that wanted to reach Dr. Robinson.

Q. How do you get new business?

A. Look for it in a persistent way.

Q. Should colored people be discriminated against?

A. No.

Q. Is it good policy for a chattel company to enter the auto Finance Field?

A. The opinion is that it is a different class of business and should not be connected with the chattel business. It it not generally done.

Q. For the good of the business are there too many companies in this State? Which hurts the worst, competition in small towns or a city like Indianapolis?

A. As long as customers are not overburdened or doubled, it makes no difference.

Q. Does the membership of this Association feel our business should have closer supervision.

A. Unanimous. Yes.

Q. Is it advisable to discontinue the use of receipt cards and issue receipts for each payment?

A. Opinion divided.

Q. Should a loan company follow the rules of banks in closing every legal holiday?

A. That should depend upon local conditions and the rule should be followed accordingly.

Q. Can a married woman mortgage her personal property without the consent of her husband?

A. If so, it would not be good policy.

Q. Do the members present favor one or two meetings a year?

A. It would necessitate changing of by-laws.

Q. Do managers favor loans made in payments longer than one year?

A. Divided opinion.

Q. Will a furniture store lease hold good over a chattel mortgage?

A. Yes.

Q. Is it advisable to transfer an account to another company in another city, immediately after he moves?

A. Yes, by all means, but notify them at least.

Q. What advantage of using a car on the outside?

A. A broad question.

Q. Explanation of the Indianapolis Exchange.

A. Referred to Mr. Farrington.

Q. Do you think it a good idea to overload a man even though he has the security?

A. No.

Q. How can the chattel business in a town of five thousand be increased? What side lines can be handled in connection with the chattel loan business at a profit and not increase the overhead?

A. Insurance, real-estate and use every method of advertising.

Q. What is the real purpose of the Association?

A. Coöperation—Raising the standard of the loan business upon the highest plane.

Claude H. Stratton Was Toastmaster.

At the Banquet two very interesting addresses were given by Dr. Joseph Guenther of New York City, Field Secretary of the Legal Reform Bureau and The Honorable Charles A. Bookwalter, who was the principle speaker of the evening.

Dr. Joseph Guenther elaborated on the fact that it would be necessary that more publicity and educational work be done if we were to raise the standard of business upon the level of that of the banks and other financial institutions in the estimation of the public. He showed the progress that the business had made in the last five years and expressed himself that we were entering upon a new period "The Industrial Period," that the small loan business had an opportunity of proving its worth to the industrial worker, the same as the bank does to the larger business.

The Honorable Charles A. Bookwalter in his characteristic way said that he received an inspiration from the address of Dr. Guenther, that two or three booklets sent him by the Association in order that he might know more about the business had convinced him that the business was a necessity. For the last three evenings he had read and re-read those books and that more publicity of this kind should be given the public in order that they might have a more thorough understanding of the business. He went into detail regarding the industrial worker and referred to his early life when working at his trade, (printing). How some one in the shop always financed the men, but at rates that would startle the present loan man. In order to sell your problems to the public, it will be necessary that you distribute educational propaganda to the thinking public. Nothing would be a better investment than spending money with the printer.

C. M. Lemon of the Farmers Trust Co. said that it was service you were selling which justified the rate of interest, as the loans were too small to consider interest only.

Charles A. Camp, Banking Commissioner in his few remarks said that not one single complaint had been made against any member of the Association since the May convention.

There will be a managers meeting held in Fort Wayne some time during the month of February. Ample notice will be given every member of the Association. In planning all meetings of the State Association, it is the earnest desire of the Secretary to have the complete coöperation of every member. It is needless to say that you get out of the Association exactly what you put into it.

ILLINOIS.

As this was the first regular meeting since the new officers were elected, Ex-President Albert Snite opened the meeting with a very appropriate gavel presentation speech, which was responded to by President Woll, who expressed for the entire Association deep gratitude for the splendid and unselfish service rendered in behalf of the Association and its members by Mr. Snite, during his two years in the chair.

President Woll then called the afternoon business session to order and proved conclusively that he meant business, and was taking his Association official position seriously, for he frankly stated that, in his opinion these business meetings were not mere formalities, and he could not afford to and did not intend to spend his time preparing for and conducting the meetings unless a bigger and more prompt attendance is registered in the future. President Woll, in assuming this attitude, proves his qualifications for the office, and wants the entire membership to distinctly understand that his services will continue only upon condition that he be given support in way of meeting attendance.

Treasurer Lynch reported a balance of $838.90, with all bills presented to date, paid.

The Membership Committee reported one resignation and one new member. The new recruit is the Lee Loan Company, 6469 Sheridan Road, Chicago.

No special Committee, or the Grievance Committee had a report, and we then took up the matter of adopting a State Association Emblem. After considerable discussion, the emblem used by the National Association with the words "For Lawful Methods Only," was adopted. Members desiring to use this cut may secure same from the Secretary.

A slogan, "Get together, Stay together, Work together, Grow together," offered through Mr. Rose, was not adopted, but was commended highly.

The proposition of changing the title of the presiding officer from that of Chairman to President, having been constitutionally provided for at our previous meeting, was, after a great deal of pro and con discussion, finally decided in favor of President. This title applies also to the Vice-Chairman of our Association.

Correspondence was then read by the Secretary, including letters from Mr. East and Mr. Rutherford thanking our Association for its coöperation during the recent National Convention, together with a letter from the Hotel LaSalle inviting our Association to use the hotel for our meetings, a letter from Mr. Willis Baird expressing his appreciation for the interest the Licensed Lenders took in the Near East Relief Fund, a letter from Mr. Frank E. Scott, Sec'y of the Chicago Band Association, thanking our members for their contribution to that fund, a letter from Attorney Charles R. Napier advising that he had induced the License Bureau of Chicago not to class our members as brokers, together with other interesting correspondence from our local members.

Mr. Napier made a few brief remarks upon the Near East movement, as he was authorized at a recent Executive Committee meeting to use his judgment in arranging for our Association's activities in connection with that movement.

Mr. Woll, who is Chairman of the Clearing House Committee, gave us a rather detailed survey of the Clearing House status throughout the country. He said that in Philadelphia, a Clearing House was operated through the Merchants Department of the Association of Commerce, that they had nine members, and the monthly cost to each was about $25.00. He further stated that in Indianapolis and Pittsburgh, all of the licensees were members of the Clearing House.

The open office then came up for a very brief discussion, followed by a general outline of the procedure for the remainder of the meeting, and the business session was adjourned at 6:10 to a 6:30 o'clock dinner.

Between the business session and dinner, the late arrivals, our guests and the ladies gathered in the hotel parlors on the second floor, where friends recalled old times, and new friends were made. As the Northwestern University Syncopating orchestra pealed forth enticing strains of music, eighty-six persons filed into the Rose Room, where a delicious chicken dinner was served. The ladies were presented with a rose, and at each plate was a booklet containing the address of Charles R. Napier, given at the recent National Convention. Dancing was enjoyed between courses, and immediately after dinner, Clifford F. Jackman of Chicago spoke very interestingly upon the conditions in the Near East.

The next speaker was Harvey H. Hill, Sec'y, Illinois Chamber of Commerce, who gave us a brief history of that organization, and explained its purpose, object and accomplishments to date. Mr. Hill is known throughout the entire State as an organizer, and his talk enthused our members with the proper Association spirit. It is expected that the Illinois Licensed Lenders will all become affiliated with the Illinois Chamber of Commerce.

Willis W. Baird, former President of the Chicago Association of Commerce, spoke, and commended our Association upon its progress and upon its activity in the Near East movement.

Our next speaker and guest of honor was Wlliam A. Murphy, new Director of the Department of Trade and Commerce, Springfield. Mr. Murphy portrayed a surprising degree of knowledge about our business, and his views were very much favored by our members. Mr. Murphy made it plain that, in his opinion, there is a field for real service in the Small Loan business, and that the members of our Association are prepared to render that service efficiently. He stated that we take up the lending business where the Banks leave off. He is of the opinion that our business is so related to that of banks, that our supervision should come under the banking department. Mr. Murphy feels that our Association has and will facilitate matters both for the lenders and for the Department of Trade and Commerce, and he expressed appreciation for our cooperation and the courtesy universally extended the examiner, Miss Cartmill, by our members.

The final speaker of the evening was Dr. Louis N. Robinson of Swarthmore, Pa., who is making a survey of the Small Loan business. Dr. Robinson spoke very interestingly and at length, soliciting the cooperation of our members in the compilation of information. He made frequent references to the booklet containing the National Convention address of Attorney Napier, and advised that we adopt the ethics prescribed therein as a standard.

After a short recess, the reading of papers upon and the discussion of practical subjects was taken up by the Managers Committee, with Mr. Stemlie presiding. The meeting continued until 11:00, and a general discussion followed each of the papers, which are hereinafter made a part of these minutes, together with report of Illinois delegate to National Convention.

"HOW TO INVESTIGATE A LOAN."

By Miss Roscoe, Mgr. Mason Financial Company, Chicago.

I think we all agree that it is necessary to get all the information possible when looking up a loan, and that a thorough investigation is indispensable.

It would take hours to treat this subject adequately, but since all we have to-night is a few minutes for remarks and a discussion, I will try to leave most of the time for the discussion, which I know will prove most interesting.

I thought it best that we consider in these few minutes just what the procedure would be, in looking up a loan and some of the facts brought out by the investigation.

The first step would be to learn from The Lenders Exchange whether the applicant already has a loan. Then we should determine if he is offering the same security to both companies.

Second: Get what information is available through the Credit Agency,—from them we can find out if the applicant has made application for credit before, as well as other information that may be helpful.

Third: Verify statement with regards to Position always.

By the information we now have on hand we can easily judge whether the loan is worthy of further investigation, and if so it is given to the investigator, whose report should bring out the facts most necessary to the manager in deciding whether the loan should be made or rejected.

First: The applicant's ability to meet his payments in accordance with the agreement he is making. That would be determined by his income as well as his expenses.

Second: What is the character and the reputation of the applicant—That can be found out from the local merchants in his present as well as his past neighborhood, as they usually get considerable of the neighborhood gossip, and may know something of his habits.

Third: Does he own the personal property that he is offering as security, and is it sufficient for the amount of the loan.

I think I had better stop now, as we do want to hear the discussion.

Thank you for your close attention.

CLOSING A LOAN TO MAN AND WIFE ON HOUSEHOLD FURNITURE.

By John Bronahan, Mgr. C. C. Erd Co., Chicago

After it has been decided that a loan will be made and all necessary information regarding applicant has been obtained, the papers are made out and laid on the desk before the customer.

First the statement is explained, and we impress upon them that this statement must be brought in or sent in every time a payment is made in order that proper credit may be given their account. The statement is made out in the name of both husband and wife, to impress upon them that both are held responsible for the obligation. We then point out their address, and impress upon them the importance of notifying us in case they desire or intend to move and explain to them that it is a violation of the law for mortgagor to move mortgaged property without securing permission from the mortgagee to do so. They are told that we have no objection to their moving so long as they make known their intentions before doing so.

We then point out the amount of the loan and the manner in which payments are made, emphasizing the importance of making payments on the date they are due. (Customers are always given the privilege of naming the day on which payments will be made, as they can then offer no excuse for failing to make payments.) We urge them to be prompt in their payments, and tell them that this strengthens their credit, and that this may be of some assistance to them in the future should they require another loan.

By this time we have decided whether we will record the mortgage. If we intend to do this, we collect a recording fee and make a receipt for it in their statement. (Very few mortgages are recorded, only about 1% of our loans. This is usually done only in cases where loans are made to people in the rooming house business, business people of other kinds, and on questionable loans.)

We always try to be sure they understand how the interest is calculated. After we have explained the rates, we ask them if they understand it and can figure the interest. Ninety-nine per cent. will say they do. We then ask what will be the payment on their loan up to a certain date and let them figure it out. This is one way of finding out whether or not they really understand how it is done. A customer who knows how to figure the interest is generally satisfied and very seldom makes any complaint.

We next have them sign the papers, but before doing so we point out the amount of the loan, security, payment on principal, and the due date. We do not ask customers to read the papers. This is optional with them, and very few people do so.

After the papers have been signed, we hand them the money generally leave it on the desk between man and wife and ask them to "Please count the money."

Just before they leave the office, we ask them if everything is understood, and tell them that if after getting home and reading over the statement they find something they do not quite understand, they should not hesitate to come to our office for further explanations.

By Arthur L. Weinshenk.
Chicago Finance Co.

Your Manager's Committee has requested me to render you my version as to procedure in certain cases, having designated different subjects hereinafter named, to discuss.

It would appear to me that these topics should have been submitted to your attorney, Chas. R. Napier, for accurate response, for I can only give you my humble opinions of the practical side, which may be at direct variance with any necessary legal process or procedure, so that I trust you will be kind enough to attribute any incorrect answers to my ignorance and be charitable in your thoughts where I am in error.

The First: Under What Conditions Should An Account Be Renewed?

Any account that has shown the right disposition to pay principal and interest and particularly the interest, and where original conditions, risk and security have suffered little depreciation, is worthy of renewal, either of pending balance or by merging into a larger loan. Proper treatment of accounts inspire confidential relations that is imperative in our business, which, after all, is one of personal contact; where there is a refusal of renewal, it creates a dissatisfied patron and more often the loss of an account; so definitely, I would say that where the lender wishes to retain the account, I would renew, and in arriving at such decision the patron should be given every possible consideration; interest at least of course, having been paid with reasonable regularity.

The extension should be drawn in duplicate on the regular form provided for that purpose, signed, executed, acknowledged and delivered by and between all parties to be original mortgage; a copy of the extension should be filed with the same official who acknowledged the original mortgage, at any time within 90 days after due date of mortgage and who should certify on the original extension that it has been filed with him by true copy thereof, and the original then recorded in the County Recorder's Office where the original mortgage is recorded, at any time within 90 days after due date of mortgage; provided, of course, the property is still located within the jurisdiction of that County. The releases should be drawn on the blank forms known as Release of Chattel Mortgage, signed, executed, acknowledged and delivered by the mortgagee and recorded in the same County Recorder's Office where the original mortgage is recorded. In both of above forms acknowledgment of signature is made before a Notary Public.

A Bill to foreclose chattel mortgage must be filed in a Court of equity in every case where the security is necessary household furniture; the necessary pleadings are brought to an issue before the Trial Court, upon completion of which, the case is referred to a Master in Chancery for the taking of testimony for both sides; the Master then draws his report of conclusions from the evidence and submits such report to the Trial Judge for approval or rejection, and in either case a decree is entered by said Trial Judge and the security then may be seized in accordance with the mandates of such decree and disposed of accordingly; this procedure, however, is purely a matter for the attention of your attorney, the details of which are his duty and not the lender. Where the security is not necessary household furniture such as an automobile, fixtures, etc., foreclosure may be perfected by declaring the mortgage and note due according to the provisions of the instrument and when any of the terms of the mortgaged contract have been violated or defaulted, thus permitting such declaration and actual possession when taken of the mortgaged property either by actual seizure or replevin, and a statutory notice (usually 5 days) rendered the mortgagor by mail to his last known place of residence, of the time, terms and place of said sale enumerating the property to be sold, and within 10 days after such sale a report of sale must be rendered by mail to said mortgagor, a process which also is advisable to have your attorney direct and govern.

The Fourth: Proper Method Of Filing Assignments.

In our experience, we have filed assignments in two ways; one by personal delivery of a certified copy of the original assignment, obtaining the name of the person in the employ of the firm with whom the assignment is filed; the other, by certified copy of the original assignment sent by registered mail with return receipt requested.

The Fifth: Proper Procedure To Protect Your Mortgage When Goods Are Placed In Storage By Customer, With Or Without Consent Of Mortgagee.

Our office has, in every instance, presented in person a regular written mortgagee's demand for the immediate possession of the goods placed in storage, enumerating in detail the mortgaged property; if the property has been stored with the consent of the mortgagee, then arrangements should be made with the warehouseman for the proper delivery to the mortgagee of the warehouse receipt covering the goods, such warehouse receipt in every instance to be in the name of the mortgagor and by him properly endorsed; if without the consent of the mortgagee, an effort should be made, irrespective of such written demand so served, to obtain from the mortgagor the original warehouse receipt properly endorsed; in either event, it is my understanding that a written mortgagee's demand protects the mortgage and the warehouseman is liable ofr the payment of such mortgage lien, in case he delivers the property in the face of such written demand within a reasonable time after the service of same; in every instance that I know of in our office, the warehouseman will deliver no goods, unless he first obtains a written release of such mortgagee's demand; and in case of foreclosure, the warehouseman has a first lien on all the property, where the goods are stored with the consent of the mortgagee. Where the property is stored without the consent or knowledge of the mortgagee, the warehouseman, so far as the mortgagee is concerned, is only entitled to such charges as have accrued on and after date of mortgagee's knowledge of storage or notification of mortgage lein providing that the mortgage has been duly acknowledged and recorded prior to the date the warehouseman took possession; he is entitled to all charges in case of unrecorded mortgages.

The Sixth: How To Make Non-Negotiable Warehouse Receipts Negotiable.

This topic is one of importance. We have usually proceeded in four directions in such cases; one by having the words "Non-Negotiable" changed to read "Negotiable"; another by having the warehouse write on the face of said receipt that the words "Non-Negotiable appearing on this receipt are hereby made null and void;" another by the warehouseman's consent in writing on the face of the warehouse receipt to the transfer, assignment and delivery of said original warehouse receipt; and finally by having the warehouseman acknowledge by letter the fact that he has received notice of mortgage lien and stating that he will immediately notify the mortgagee of any contemplated removal, thus giving ample time to the mortgagee to protect his lien by negotiating with the mortgagor, foreclosure by Bill in Chancery or by replevin suit. We have found that practically every warehouseman with whom we have become involved does not object to the latter method, when he does object to changing the original warehouse receipt; furthermore, even though receipt may be marked "Non-Negotiable" we have found that the goods will be delivered to the mortgagee upon presentation of the original warehouse receipt properly endorsed. Coöperation with warehouses is one of the important duties of every aggressive Manager.

Even though I have endeavored to answer the above inquiries it must be understood that there are, in nearly every case, conditions and instances that arise, whereby proper judgment must be displayed and used in the negotiations so requisite for the protection of the mortgage lien and where debatable questions arise, the same should be submitted to your attorney for his attention. My experiences have taught me that the procedures above enumerated have been ample and sufficient for the proper protection and collection of the amount due. Many of these questions are governed by Statutes and performance should be made accordinly and again I suggest, where in doubt, let your attorney be your guide.

GEORGIA SMALL LOAN LAW CONSTITUTIONAL.

In the case of Badger vs. The State—No. 3226—Supreme Court of Georgia has upheld the constitutionality of the Georgia small loan law.

Fish, C. J.—Defendant was found guilty of a violation of Section 1, 8, 12, 13, and 17 of the Act of the General Assembly approved August 17, 1920 (Ga. L. 1920, page 215), providing for the regulation of small loan business. The constitutionality of the Act was challenged in the trial court by demurrer to the accusation. The exception is to the overruling of the demurrer. Held, that the Act is not unconstitutional as violative of any of the provisions, hereinafter set forth, of the State or Federal Constitution: 1. "Protection of person and property......shall be impartial and complete." "No person shall be deprived of life, liberty, or property, except by due process of law." "Nor shall any State deprive any person of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law, nor deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws." 3. "The legislative, judicial, and executive powers shall forever remain separate and distinct, and no person discharging the duties of one shall at the same time exercise the functions of either of the others, except as herein provided." 4. "No person shall be compelled to give testimony tending in any manner to criminate himself." 5. "The right of the people to be secure in their persons, houses, papers, and effects against unreasonable searches and seizures, shall not be violated," etc. 6. "No person shall be compelled in any criminal case, to be witness against himself," etc. 7. "Laws of a general nature shall have uniform operation throughout the State and no special law shall be enacted in any case for which provision has been made by an existing general law." 8. "No law or ordinance shall pass which refers to more than one subject matter, or contains matter different from what is expressed in the title thereof." "9. "No conviction shall work......forfeiture of estate."

The constitutionality of the Act in question is sustained by many decisions of courts of last resort wherein similar legal principles were involved, among which are the following:

Cutsinger v. Atlanta, 142 Ga. 555;
Carroll v. Wright, 131 Ga. 728;
Early County v. Baker County, 132 Ga. 126;
People v. Stokes, 118 N. E. (Ill.) 87;
Harbison v. Stamer, Id. 94;
U. S. v. Distillery Company, 259 Fed. No. 14,966;
Wessel v. Timberlake, 116 N. E. (Ohio) 43;
Com. v. Puder, 104 Atl. (Penna.) 505;
Juhan v. State, 216 S. W. (Tex. Crim. App.) 873;
See notes to Re Schncke, 21 L. R. A. (N. S.) 813;
State v. Sherman, 27 L. R. A. (N. S.) 893;

Judgment affirmed.
All the justices concur.

CREDIT BUREAUS.

Indianapolis, Ind.
November 17, 1922.

Dear Mr. Kehr:

Enclosed find an article regarding Credit Exchange Bureau's which I believe would be a good article to publish in the Lenders News, while not particularly on our subject it would be applicable to our business.

If you will get a copy of December issue of The System magazine, on page 707 you will notice an article regarding Credit Unions which refers to the doubling up on loans. In my opinion this is one subject that the A. I. L. A. should be interested in at the present above all others, as a good many companies are starting new offices and being over zealous in obtaining business, rather encourage than discourage the doubling of loans.

If we ever expect to get this business on the plane that it should be, we must first clean our own door mats before trying to educate the public. Nothing is more serious to our business than permitting more than one loan to a customer, because the one who borrows two or more loans is the one to fall the quickest.

I shall be glad to hear an expression from you. It may be that I am taking this matter too seriously, but as I see it now, I do not believe that I am,

Yours very truly,
R. F. Hartz, Sec'y, I. I. L. A.

Sees Interchange Credit Bureaus as Saviors of Future.

Solon J. Carter Tells Association Bad Debts Will Be Past.

National and local credit interchange and adjustment bureaus eventually will minimize business failures, and while serving as a savior to those firms which otherwise would go bankrupt, will perform a distinct service to creditors, declared Solon J. Carter, ex-judge of

"I am satisfied that the general public is unaware and I question whether you men really appreciate the vast sums lost annually through inefficient credit information," he said. "Before credit men began to organize and make their work known, it was customary to pick out some faithful employe in a firm, without regard to his knowledge of credit work, and make him credit manager. Even then he did not have the backing of the executive heads of the business. Rather was his work retarded by them, because about the first time he would turn down a credit, the boss would accost him with 'What on earth are you trying to do? Ruin one of our best customers?'

EXPERIENCE ON BENCH.

"Now, what is the condition to-day? In some cases it is not much better. Let's take as an example a small business firm, the head of which is known to be honest and upright. He has a good standing in the community. Every thing seems to be in his favor. He buys and buys and buys, until finally he has an account of $1,000, when his credit is stopped. Then he comes forward with a down payment of $300 and he can turn right around and buy another $1,000 worth of goods, without regard to his financial standing. It isn't his fault. In all truth, now, isn't it true that the trouble was that his credits were not properly handled? No one firm can stop that sort of thing, but a majority of the firms in the state united can stop it, and that is where the credit interchange bureau comes in"

Mr. Carter based most of his remarks, he said, on knowledge gained from cases brought before him in bankruptcy while on the bench. He declared that only in three cases which were brought before him were the firms utterly worthless.—Indianapolis Star, November 17, 1922.

1. Constitutional law 250, 258—Usury 149 (1) — Interest statute penalizing usury held not to deprive party of due process of law or equal protection of law.

Laws 1919, p. 524, § 1, making it a penal offense to loan less than $300 at a greater rate of interest than 12 per cent. without a license, does not deny due process or equal protection of the law.

2. Statutes 76 (6)—Making it penal to loan less than $300 at greater rate than 12 per cent. without license held not to violate prohibition of special law where general law can be made.

Laws 1919, p. 524, § 1, making it a penal offense to loan less than $300 at a greater rate of interest than 12 per cent. without a license, is not violative of Const. art. 5, § 21, as the Legislature has the power to fix one rate of interest for small loans and another for large loans.

3. Statutes 118 (1)—Subject-matter of statute penalizing the charging of more than legal interest held expressed in title.

The subject-matter of Laws 1919 p. 524, § 1, making it a penal offense to loan less than $300 at a greater rate of interest than 12 per cent. without a license, held sufficiently expressed in the title of the act, which is "to license and regulate the business of making loans," etc.

4. Constitutional law 87—Statute penalizing usury held not to deprive one of right to acquire property.

Laws 1919, p. 524, § 1, making it a penal offense to loan less than $300 at a greater rate of interest than 12 per cent. without a license, does not deprive one of his right under Const. art. 2, § 3, granting the rights to acquire, possess and protect property.

5. Constitutional law 159—Usury statute held not to impair obligation of contract.

Laws 1919, p. 524, § 1, making it a penal offense to loan less than $300 at a greater rate of interest than 12 per cent. without a license, does not impair the obligation of a contract.

En Banc.

Error to District Court, City and County of Denver; A. F. Hollenback, judge.

Lou E. Warner was convicted under Laws 1919, c. 159, § 1, prohibiting the charging of more than 12 per cent. interest on money loaned, and he brings error. Affirmed.

DENISON, J. Plaintiff in error was convicted under section 1, c. 159, S. L. 1919, of engaging in the business of loaning less than $300 at a greater rate than 12 per cent. per annum, without a license. He was also convicted on a count under section 17 of the same act, but the court set aside the verdict on that count. He brings error and attacks the constitutionality of the act on the following grounds:

(1) That it deprives defendant of due process of law.

(2) That it is a special law where a general one could have been made applicable, and so violates section 21 of article 5 of the Colorado Constitution.

(3) The subject of the act is not expressed in the title.

(4) It violates section 3, art. 2, of the Colorado Constitution, in that it deprives plaintiff in error of the right to acquire, posses, and protect property.

(5) It impairs the obligation of contracts.

[1] As to the first point there is nothing in the act touching the question of due process. Counsel argues, however, the question of equal protection. We took this statute from Illinois. The question was determined there before our act was passed. People v. Stokes, 281 Ill. 159, 118 N. E. 87.

[2] The second point amounts to a proposition that the Legislature cannot fix one rate of interest for small loans and another for large which needs but to be stated to be refuted. The power of the Legislature is not so limited.

[3] As to the third point: The subject-matter of section 1, upon which the defendant was convicted, is expressed in the title. The title is as follows:

"To license and regulate the business of making loans in sums of three hundred dollars ($300) or less, secured or unsecured, at a greater rate of interest than twelve (12) per centum per annum, prescribing the rate of interest and charge therefor, and penalties for the violation thereof, and regulating the assignment of wages or salaries, earned or to be earned, when given as security for any such loan."

"That no person, copartnership, or corporation shall engage in the business of making loans of money, credit, goods, or things in action in the amount, or to the value of three hundred dollars ($300), or less, and charge, contract for or receive a greater rate of interest than (12) per cent. per annum therefor, except as authorized by this act and without first obtaining a license from the State Bank Commissioner hereinafter called the licensing official."

This section is part of an act which provides for licensing the business of loaning $300 or less at a greater rate of interest than 12 per cent, per annum and so is within the scope of the title.

We say nothing as to section 17 because the Attorney General has not assigned error with reference to it.

[4, 5] The propositions on the 4th and 5th points are so manifestly unfounded that they require no answer.

Judgment affirmed.

On January 1, 1923, the Russell Sage Foundation appointed Dr. Louis N. Robinson of Swarthmore, Pennsylvania, to make a survey of the Small Loan Business in the United States. Since April 1st, of last year, Dr. Robinson has been studying the small loan business and laying the plans for just such a survey as the Russell Sage Foundation now contemplates.

It is interesting to know that the loan men themselves requested the Foundation to make this survey. They felt that there were still many unsolved problems in the small loan business, and further progress would come only from careful scientific study of the entire situation. Mr. L. C. Harbison of Chicago, first consulted with Dr. Robinson last April and finally induced him to look into the possibilities of such a survey. The report which Dr. Robinson made to Mr. Harbison proved sufficiently interesting to induce several lenders to bear the cost of the preliminary work incident to the survey. Among these lenders were Mr. F. E. Tyson, Mr. A. C. Broughman,, Mr. J. H. Aufderheide, Mr. E. P. East, Mr. L. C. Harbison, Colonel Clarence Hodson, Mr. George W. Kehr, Mr. Charles G. Mueller, Mr. C. H. Watts, Mr. William P. Woll, and Mr. W. A. Zumpfe.

The Russell Sage Foundation has now taken over the task and will push ahead with the work as rapidly as possible. It is highly gratifying to the lenders who first conceived the idea of the survey that the Foundation thought sufficiently well of it to take it over and to appoint as director of the work the man whom these lenders had induced to look into the project.

Dr. Robinson comes well prepared for the work. The following personal history taken from "Who's Who in America," will give some notion of his scientific preparation for the task in hand:

"Robinson, Louis Newton, economist; b. at Tunkhannock, Pa., November 3, 1880; s. John Marklin and Annie Elizabeth (Thacher) R.; A. B., Swarthmore (Pa.) Coll., 1905; studied Cornell U., 1905-6; Joshua Lippincott traveling fellow, Swarthmore Coll., Univs. of Halle and Berlin, 1906-7: fellow in economics and statistics, Cornell, 1907-8, Ph.D., 1911; m. Caroline Hadley, of Swarthmore, Pa., June 18, 1908. Instr. in economics, 1908-9, asst. prof., 1909-13, prof. 1913-17, Swarthmore Coll.; chief probation officer, Municipal Court of Phila. 1918-21, mem. and sec. Pa. State Penal Commission of 1913; mem. Pa. Commission to Investigate Prison System of 1917. Member Am. Inst. Criminal Law and Criminology, Am. Econ. Assn., Am. Statis. Assn., Delta Upsilon, Phi Beta Kappa. Mem. Friends Church. Author: History and Organization of Criminal Statistics (Hart, Schaffner & Marx prize essay series) 1911; Penology in the United States, 1921; also numerous articles and pamphlets along lines of criminology. Home, 411 College Ave., Swarthmore, Pa."

An outline of the survey which Dr. Robinson contemplates was given in an address which he delivered at the New York Convention. This appears in the 1922 Year Book of the American Industrial Lenders Association and all who are interested in the further development of the loan business should read this address as we understand that this outline will, in general, be followed by the Foundation in the work which it will do. The disinterestedness of the Russell Sage Foundation in all its investigations is well known, and we lenders can rest assured that this survey by Dr. Robinson will be conducted in a fair and impartial fashion that cannot help but be beneficial in the long run to all who are vitally interested in the Industrial Loan Business.

LEGISLATION.

With almost every state in the Union holding legislative sessions this year, a busy time is anticipated by our National Legislative Committee and the other organizations, notably the Russell Sage Foundation and the Legal Reform Bureau, which are interested in improving small loan conditions in America. Already we have been advised of the introduction of the Uniform Small Loan Bill on January 4th by Senator Jackson in the Minnesota Legislature. Favorable newspaper comments upon this may be found elsewhere in this publication.

On January 3d, Representative Drinnon introduced House Bill No. 21 in the Tennessee Legislature, which purports to be "a bill to regulate the business of salary and loan brokers and persons lending on personal property, and fixes the maximum fees and profits." In the main, this bill seems to be patterned after the Uniform Small Loan Bill but takes a very important deviation when it attempts to fix the interest rate at two per cent per month. Probably when the hearing before the Judiciary Committee, to which this bill has been referred, takes place, the legislators will be convinced that any rate less than three and one-half per cent per month will not correct the existing bad conditions in Tennessee. Reports indicate that the Bank Commissioner of Tennessee will support the one hundred per cent Uniform Small Loan Law drafted by the Russell Sage Foundation, as a department measure.

It is reported that a bill has been introduced in the Connecticut Legislature purporting to reduce the interest rate now permitted for small loans of $300.00 or less from three and one-half per cent per month to one and one-half per cent per month. This bill has probably been prompted by some misinformed persons who are not familiar with the cost of conducting the small loan business and the losses incident thereto. No doubt the Public Welfare organizations which originally sponsored the enactment of the Uniform Bill in Connecticut, will be on hand when the hearing is held before the Legislative Committee, armed with all the necessary data to prove that the existing rate permitted under the small loan law of Connecticut is just.

We have received copies of the Uniform Pawnbroking Bill drafted by the National Federation of Remedial Loan Associations and endorsed by the Legal Reform Bureau, which is responsible for the printing of this bill for general educational purposes. We understand the bill will be introduced in several of the state legislatures which do not have adequate pawnbroking legislation. The bill seems to be a big improvement over any existing pawnbroking legislation now effective.

YEAR BOOKS.

Our 1922 Year Books came from the printers January 4th and promptly on that day, we started mailing complimentary copies to public officials, public welfare associations and members of the American Industrial Lenders Association. Others who had ordered and paid for the book were also supplied. Any who may desire the book, not included in the above list, may obtain copies at the rate of $1.00 each, upon application to the National Secretary. Considering the information the book contains, we believe it is worth more than the price asked for it. You will find in it a complete directory of the American Industrial Lenders Association members and all the proceedings of the Eighth National Convention, during which some high class papers and addresses were given. A digest of the small loan laws and a map showing the legislative status of small loan laws are some of the interesting features. At this writing the edition is two-thirds exhausted. Any who wish copies shoulld order them promptly. Persons who have received it say it is indespensible. Here are a couple complimentary remarks:

My Dear Mr. Kehr:

I want to thank you for the copy of the "year Book." According to my way of thinking, it is the best "gotten up" one that we have ever had and I know to whom the credit belongs, no one but you.

Your friend,
C. H. Stratton.

Dear Mr. Kehr:

I am in receipt of a copy of the 1922 Year Book.

I have not yet had time to read the book, but I have glanced through it and I want to compliment you on the contents and general get-up.

It is without question the finest edition of the Year Book to date.

Yours very truly,
L. C. Harbison.

In connection with the Year Book it is interesting to note that a recent number of the Prentice-Hall Business Digest quoted a considerable portion of G. W. Farrington's paper on "Good Will" which was published in full in our 1921 Year Book.

Dear Sir:

I wish to congratulate you upon the excellent edition of the year book of the American Industrial Lenders Association, and to thank you for the copy I received this morning.

I should appreciate very much having my name placed on your mailing list for future issues of this book.

Thanking you again for your favor, I am

Very sincerely yours,
Doane Merrill.
Supt. of Banks.

Dear Mr. Kehr:

The Year Book came duly to hand for which accept my thanks personally I think it is the best ever gotten out and I intend to place same in my library for future reference and etc.

Hastily yours,
A. S. Ezekiel.

Philadelphia Pa.

Dear Mr. Kehr:

The 1922 Year Book reached be a day or two ago. I can see in it many valuable suggestions to all persons who are connected with the small loan business. I sincerely think that the Association is to be congratulated upon this excellent presentation of its proceedings.

I was very much interested in the completeness of Mr. James A. Lyons' article in the December number of the Lenders News as regards his renewing of loans to a former customer. The detail in which he goes into the situation is quite illuminating. I am wondering if you would be good enough to give me Mr. Lyons' address, so that I might ask him for some suggestions or possibly a copy of his application blanks.

If it is in order (if not don't hesitate to tell me) I would appreciate such a blank from you. I am enclosing a copy of the one that we use. You can readily see that it is very incomplete, and I have to resort to filling in between lines for many things already.

Some of us are still considering legislation to propose to the Legislature, but like all new institutions we are working rather haphazardly still. We are very much obliged for your suggestions and assistance thus far.

Very truly yours,
J. L. Dunn.

INDIANA.

According to the Marion Leader-Tribune of Wednesday, December 20, 1922, A. C. Broughman, general manager of the Legal Loan Company, was elected president of the Marion Kiwanis Club for 1923. The election followed the meeting of the new board of directors, held on December 19th. The Marion Leader-Tribune makes the following interesting references to Mr. Broughman:

"The president has lived in Marion practically all his life and has long been identified with civic affairs. He was prominent in all the drives during the war. He served as exalted ruler of the Elks lodge and is considered an excellent organizer. His willingness to accept the post was gratifying to the new board.

"The new president will take charge of the club administration after January 1st, the present staff holding over until that time. In stating his policy, Mr. Broughman declared he was hopeful for an active coöperation from the entire membership. He said he expected to use every member of the club in some capacity during the year."

The above reference to Mr. Broughman is appreciated by all the members of the American Industrial Lenders Association, who desire to congratulate him on the honor bestowed. It proves that our members have the respect of the communities in which they live and that those who take an active part in local civic affairs reap their just reward.

The same honor was conferred upon Dal. T. Hurry, manager of the Legal Loan Co., Logansport, as he was elected president for the coming year of the Logansport Kiwanis Club. His election was also unanimous and the office not solicited. Mr. Hurry has been for more than nine years manager of an office of the Legal Loan Company. For six years he managed the Rockford Loan Co., Rockford, Illinois before being transferred to Logansport.

R. J. Spencer, Jr., president of the Legal Loan Company just completed his year as president of the Rotary Club of Marion. Mr. Spencer has been chairman of the Indiana Industrial Lenders Association, although he has never been actively engaged in the small loan business but has been interested as an investor. For a number of years he has devoted his entire time to the Grant

Trust and Savings Company of Marion, being at present treasurer and managing director.

T. H. Bedell, vice-president of the Legal Loan Company was recently elected president of the Marion Association of Commerce. Mr. Bedell has never been actively engaged in the loan business, but like Mr. Spencer, has been an investor for the past nineteen years.

Fred Daves, manager of the Legal Loan Company of Kokomo, Indiana, has just completed his term of vice-president of the Kiwanis Club of Kokomo. He is a charter member of the Kokomo Kiwanis Club and has been an active director since the date of its organization. Every year he has been honored with something by his club and is now slated to become the secretary for 1923. He prefers, however, that the honor should be given to some other member as he feels he has been in a position of prominence in the club long enough.

R. F. Hartz, president of the American Loan Co., of Indianapolis, is and has been for the past year or so, secretary of the Lions Club of Indianapolis.

There are quite a number of loan men in Indiana that are active members of organizations such as the Rotary, Kiwanis and Lions Club in their respective communities.

As the above was written, the writer was thinking, "I wonder how many other states in which we have members, can match the prominence of the Indiana members in similar local business men's organizations." It is a fine thing for the rest of us to have Indiana as the example before us as it may inspire other members in our organization to follow this excellent example. It is fine to know that we have among our numbers, men of the caliber that fits them to hold prominent positions in local community clubs.

It is a compliment to any member to be asked to join one of these clubs but it is a lot more to his credit to take an active part in it because to do so means that he is giving of his time and talents to the community which he serves.

It has always been the policy of the American Industrial Lenders Association to encourage our members to identify themselves with local and state organizations having as their object the betterment of the communities in which they are located. The National Secretary would like to know from all of our members, what if any connection they may have with local or state associations outside of their connection with the state and national lenders organizations. If any of them are now directors or hold any office or have done so, we should like to know about that so that the public may learn to know the character of men now engaged in the small loan business.

BILL PROPOSES STATE CONTROL OF LOAN SHARKS.

Measure Regulating Interest Rates Is Supported By Many Organizations.

Curbing the activities of so-called "loan sharks" who charge exorbitant rates of interest to small borrowers is the purpose of a bill introduced in the Minnesota Senate yesterday by Senators Joseph Jackson of St. Paul and Sherman W. Child of Minneapolis.

The bill, backed by the Minnesota State Federation of Labor and a large number of organizations interested in the people who are obliged to seek small loans, is a copy of the law now on the statute books of a large number of states. The Russel Sage Foundation has been instrumental in having the measure passed throughout the country.

The bill requires persons in the loan business to obtain a license from the state. The limit fixed for individual loans is $300 and the interest charge shall not be in excess of a three and a half percent a month on unpaid balances. The bill regulates strictly the conduct of the business of the lender. It prohibits and specifies punishment for loans of money by unlicensed dealers in excess of the contract rate provided by the state.

The following are the organizations which are back of the bill introduced in the Senate yesterday and which is to be introduced in the House next week by Speaker Nolan of Minneapolis and Representatives Fred Starkey of St. Paul and W. L. Bernard of Duluth: Minnesota Federation of Labor, Legal Aid Society of Associated Charities of Minneapolis, the Family Welfare Association, the United Charities of Transportation Brotherhood's Legislative Board, the Federal Shop Crafts Legislative Board, Women's Christian Association, the Women's Coöperative Alliance, the Children's Protective Society, the Unity Settlement Association, the Pillsbury Settlement House and Associated Jewish Charities.

House Passed It Two Years Ago

A large number of prominent individuals and the Minnesota Committee on Social Legislation, representing more than 40 organizations interested in welfare work, are also indorsing the measure.

This same bill was passed by an overwhelming vote in the House two years ago but was lost in the Senate when it failed to come out of the committee in time.—Minneapolis Tribune, Jan. 5, 1923.

TO SWAT THE SHARK.

There is no more humane or practical measure to come before the present Minnesota legislative session than the uniform small loan law.

The bill provides not only uniformity in the making of loans but a high degree of protection for borrowers of a class which has been shamefully exploited. This is accomplished by licensing lenders making loans up to $300, specifying the maximum interest rate, placing the lender under the supervision of the state examiner and making it easy to apply adequate penalties to lenders who transgress the law.

If the measure is adopted there will be an end to such obvious evasions of the old usury law as cumulative commissions on loans purposely made for short terms in order to multiply renewals, inspection charges and other devices for ensnaring the unwary employed by chattel lenders of the shark type. There will virtually be an end to such pathetic spectacles as broken men and tortured women having paid $150 on a loan of $100 with the debt as far from cancellation as ever. Such practices were all too common 10 years ago or more; in more recent years the situation has been somewhat relieved by competition from lenders operating upon a fair, business-like basis and by free legal aid to oppressed borrowers. But whatever improvement there has been has resulted from the voluntary action of individuals. Abuses are still possible and actually practiced because it is not a law but merely a business policy that discourages them.

The uniform small loan act will set up a law with teeth in its as a guaranty of fairness and protection to borrowers and the lenders may accordingly expect an increased volume of business because of state supervision.

Sixteen states have this law already in operation. Minnesota should be the seventeenth.—Minneapolis Daily News, January 6, 1923.

THE PROBLEM OF SMALL BORROWING.

There is need in Minnesota of more intelligent and effective regulation of the business of those who lend money to small borrowers for limited terms. The existing law is faulty in several particulars. In the first place its terms are easily evaded and its purpose thwarted by those who choose that course. In the second place it does not take into proper consideration the nature and demands of the business itself.

Under the auspices of a great organization—the Russel Sage Foundation, an extensive investigation of this business has been made. The investigators came to the conclusion as a result of their research that it is entirely reasonable and fair to permit the lenders to charge a monthly interest rate of 3½ per cent. This figure is stated as the minimum rate that should be considered in view of the small retail character of the lending, the risks involved, the losses sustained, and the work of collection involved.

There is a large field for this kind of lending that is untouched by the larger lenders of money and unsought by them. In the nature of things the field must be covered in some way, and it should be covered under regulations that experience has shown to be fair to both lenders and borrowers. A system that offers proper safeguards against such extortions as are practiced now by the unscrupulous lenders serves an ever-present need in every populous community.

A regulatory bill now before the Legislature represents the composite impartial judgment of many worthy welfare organizations in the Twin Cities. It would require state licenses of lenders, would limit loans to $300, would establish a maximum interest rate of 3½ per cent a month on unpaid balances, would regulate strictly the business conduct of the lender, and would stipulate penalties for unlicensed dealers, lending money at rates in excess of the rate fixed by the state.

Because the Minnesota law of to-day is vitally defective we have the type of business man called "loan shark" who preys on small borrowers. He is the exception, but he works many injustices on clients, as any one of the organizations sponsoring the pending bill can testify, and he casts reproach on the whole small loan business. There should be such a law as will enable these lenders to make a reasonable—even a generous—profit on their business in legal process. Only thus can the state hope to purge itself of the "loan shark." Anything else creates undue temptation to lawlessness and injustice in the business. —Minneapolis Tribune, January 6, 1923.

New Brunswick, N. J.
December, 15, 1922.

Dear Mr. Kehr:

We note in the November issue of the Industrial Lenders News a "Beware" notice, and we have a customer whom we believe it would be of benefit to advertise in this manner. While in this city one Otis F. and Jessie E. Stevens applied to us for a $30 loan, which was paid A No. 1, likewise four loans thereafter. In September 1921 he obtained a $90 loan on which not one penny has been paid. He has held different positions and is a fellow between 30 and 35, clean cut, light complexion and a smooth talker. We traced him to 879 Congress Street, Marion, O., but the laws of Ohio according to our attorney are so different to those of New Jersey, he feels that we would be at a greater loss to press the case. We believe however a little notice will probably save another company, and hope this is not too late.

Very truly yours,
Middlesex Finance Co.,
F. B. Merritt, President.

Dear Mr. Kehr:

In connection with the legislative map which the Bureau prepared, we are advised that Wisconsin appears erroneously. The reason for this is that the Small Loan Law of that state, which is the laws of 1913, chapter 115, approved April 26th, was declared to be unconstitutional by the attorney general of the state, so that the commissioner of banking has written the Bureau that money lenders' licenses are not required and that all sections of the act are void except in so far as it limits the rate of interest and fees which may be charged to 7% per annum on loans of $100 or less; plus 4% per annum on a reasonable sum actually lent.

This act provided for a "permit," as it is called, and provided for no license fee, no bond and no renewal of the permit.

Wisconsin, therefore, is in the same position as Mississippi and Texas, where previous inadequate loan laws have been declared unconstitutional and should have been so indicated in the outline of the state map.

It may be desirable to print this for the general information of those who have occasion to examine the map. We are at a loss to understand how the detail was overlooked when the map was prepared, as the Bureau records clearly show this situation.

Very respectfully,
Dorothy Clair,
Acting Secretary.

NEW JERSEY.

At a meeting of the New Jersey Association, held at Paterson, New Jersey, November 23d, the association went on record against sending the Lenders News free to anyone excepting those holding membership in the national body, and that if licensees who are members of state associations but are not affiliated with the national body desire to receive the publication that they should subscribe and pay for the publication, to the National Secretary direct.

On the subject of financing future national conventions, it was the sense of those present that the same be financed half from the National Treasury and the other half to be contributed by the association located in the state where the convention is held; and against the proposition of levying an assessment against other state associations for defraying any part of the expenses as it was felt that all taxation for national purposes should be embodied in the national dues.

DUES.

On February 1st, dues in the American Industrial Lenders Association will be payable through your State Association Secretary, or the National Secretary, according to your location. Do not postpone attention to this important matter because the longer you do the longer you will be without your new 1923 membership certificate. The American Industrial Lenders Association has undertaken to partially support a number of important legislative campaigns and must be refinanced to carry on its other important work. Your continued support will prove your appreciation and wisdom.

NEW MEMBERS.

The following have recently been added to the A. I. L. A. membership Pa.; Beneficial Loan Society, Easton, Pa.; Beneficial Loan Society, Reading, Pa. Other offices of this same organization which have lately been opened are expected to be elected to membership during the coming month.

8. Pawnbrokers and money lenders Key 1—Money Lending may be regulated.

The business of lending money may be regulated by the Legislature.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Jefferson County; C. B. Smith, Judge.

Suit by Joe Boston against the Alabama Brokerage Company for damages for causing the loss of his employment by filing with his employer an assignment of wages. Judgment for the plaintiff in the sum of $1,000, and the defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Count 1 was eliminated on demurrer, but is copied here as part of same was included in count A when the complaint was amended:

"The plaintiff claims of the defendant $5,000 damages, for this, that heretofore, to wit, on the 15th day of September, 1920, the defendant willfully, wantonly and intentionally and maliciously and wrongfully placed or caused to be placed with plaintiff's employer, St. Louis-San Francisco, Railroad Company, a corporation, an alleged assignment of wages or 'notice' or assignment of wages, which assignment or notice therof was 'void,' which was known to the defendant, but, notwithstanding said knowledge, the defendant willfully, wantonly, and intentionally, wrongfully, and maliciously placed or caused to be placed with said St. Louis-San Francisco Railroad Company, the same well knowing that so to do would in all probability cause plaintiff to be discharged from the services of said employer, and without regard to the consequences of said wrongful, willful, wanton, intentional, and malicious act which said act defendant did, or caused to be done, on the day and date aforesaid: and plaintiff further avers that, on account thereof, and as a direct and proximate consequence thereof, said St. Louis-San Francisco Railroad Company has pulled plaintiff out of their service and discharged him from his occupation as fireman for said St. Louis-San Francisco Railroad Company, at which occupation plaintiff earned a livelihood; and plaintiff further avers that he has suffered very great loss, inconvenience, and annoyance, that he has been unable to collect his wages due him from said railroad company without suit against them, and that he has been unable to pay his just debts on account thereof; that he has been unable to procure other employment and has lost much time on account thereof; that he has been rendered less able to aid and provide a suitable living for his wife and children; that plaintiff's standing and reputation with his said employer has been greatly damaged; that he has suffered great damage in that it has been made difficult for him to procure other like employment in the Birmingham district. And, whereas plaintiff further says that all of his aforesaid injuries and damages were caused by reason of and as a direct and proximate consequence of the willful, wanton, intentional, wrongful, and malicious conduct of the defendant as aforesaid; hence plaintiff sues."

"Count A. Comes the plaintiff in the above-entitled cause, and, with leave of the court first had and obtained, amends his complaint by hereby referring to and incorporating, as a part of the following count, called 'A,' all words and figures contained in count 1 of plaintiff's complaint heretofore filed, and, in addition thereto, immediately following the word 'void,' wherever, the said word appears in said count 1, the following averment, to wit: That said assignment was not in compliance with the act of Alabama Legislature approved April 11, 1911; that the defendant was a money lender, and engaged in the business of lending money in Alabama; that the assignment the defendant held at the time alleged assignment was filed with said plaintiff's employer the same was? and was for a loan of money and given for wages to be earned."

"Count B. The plaintiff claims of the defendant the sum of $5,000 damages for this, that heretofore, on, to wit, the 15th day of September, 1920, plaintiff was an employe of the St. Louis-San Francisco Railroad Company; that on or about said day and date aforesaid the defendant, acting through its servants or agents within the line or scope of their authority or employment, willfully, wantonly, and maliciously lodged with plaintiff's said employer an assignment or notice of an assignment of wages; and plaintiff avers that said alleged assignment, if any there was, was void, in that it failed to comply with the terms of the Money Lenders Act of Alabama in the year of 1901, approved March 9, 1901; that a copy of same was not furnished plaintiff at time same was purported to be executed; that same had not been recorded in the office of the judge of probate of Jefferson County within five days after its making, if made; that it was taken by defendant, if any there was, for a loan of money as security, and rate of interest is not stated; that the defendant was engaged in the business of money broker; and plaintiff well knowing that said assignment was void, and that its filing of the same with plaintiff's employer would cause plaintiff's said employer to discharge plaintiff from its service; and plaintiff avers that the defendant, acting as aforesaid, notwithstanding said knowledge, did willfully, wantonly, and maliciously lodge or cause said assignment to be lodged with said employer; and plaintiff avers that, as a direct and proximate consequence of said willful, wanton, and malicious act, plaintiff lost much time from his employment; that his said employer discharged him and he suffered all the injuries and damages set out in count A of plaintiff's complaint, heretofore filed, which injuries and damages are hereby specially referred to and made a part of this count."

The following are the grounds of demurrer:

"Now comes the defendant and demurs to the complaint as amended and to each count thereof, separately and severally, and assigns the following grounds of demurrer to said complaint and to each count thereof:

"(1) That the facts alleged in said complaint do not as a matter of law render said assignment void.

"(2) That said act of Legislature of 1901, under which said count B of the complaint as amended is drawn, is void and unconstitutional in this: Said act is what is known as class legislation; said act violates section 23 and section 24 of the Constitution of 1875 (article 1); said act violates section 2, art. 1, of the Constitution of 1875; said act violates section 22 and section 35 of the Constitution of 1901; said act violates section 104 of the Constitution of 1901; said act violates subdivisions 13 and 19 of section 104 of the Constitution of 1901.

"(3) Said act of 1901, commonly known as the Money Lenders Act, under which said count B of said complaint as amended is drawn, is void and unconstitutional in this: Said act attempts arbitrarily to place certain burdens, restrictions, and penalities upon persons conducting a certain business in the countries of Jefferson, Walker, Morgan, and Etowah, and same restrictions, burdens, and penalities are not placed upon those doing a like business in the other counties of the state.

"(4) It is not made to appear that the transactions of the plaintiff and defendant come within the purview of the act of the Legislature of Alabama approved March 9, 1901, regulating the business of money brokers or persons who lend money for themselves or others on bills of sale, notes, or mortgages on personal property or other personal security in Jefferson, Morgan, Walker, and Etowah Counties.

"(5) The act of March 9, 1901, regulating the business of money brokers or persons who lend money for themselves or others on bills of sale, notes, or mortgages on personal property, or other personal security, in Jefferson, Morgan, Walker, and Etowah Counties, is unconstitutional, in that it unjustly restricts counties in the exercise of their right of contract.

"(6) Said act of March 9, 1901, is unconstitutional in that it only applies to loans which do not exceed $75, and which are not made by persons engaged in the business of banking.

"(7) Said act of March 9, 1901, is contrary to the general law of the state of Alabama regulating the rate of interest on loans of money in the amount not exceeding $75.

"(8) Said act of March 9, 1901, undertakes to permit money brokers to charge 12½ per cent per annum on loans of money of less than $75, in violation of the general law of the state of Alabama.

"(9) Said act of March 9, 1901, is unconstitutional in its terms, obligations, and effect.

"(10) Said act of Legislature regulating the rate of money in Jefferson and other counties is contrary to section 104 of the Constitution of Alabama, in that it permits the higher rate of interest to be charged than 8 per cent per annum.

"(11) Said act of March 9, 1901, regulating the business of money brokers, or persons who lend money for themselves or others on bills of sale, notes, or mortgages on personal property, or other personal security, in Jefferson, Morgan, Walker, and Etowah Counties, is unconstitutional and void, in that it makes it a criminal offense for any person other than one engaged in the banking business to take or attempt to take, except by regular process, any property sold or mortgaged, or on which he claims a lien obtained by him as security for a loan which does not exceed $75, and which was made for him through a money broker engaged in business in Jefferson County, Ala., and which said loan was made at a rate of interest not exceeding 8 per cent per annum, and which was evidenced by a note signed by a mark, unless said signature was attested by two witnesses who were not of kin to the lender, and who were in no way interested in the loan, either directly or indirectly, and who were not at the time employed by the lender, and unless the mortgage or lien has been recorded as required by section 101 said act."

D. D. Trimble, of Birmingham, of appellant.

C. E. Wilder, of Birmingham, for appellee.

Bricken, P. J. The appellee brought suit against the appellant to recover damages for certain injuries alleged to have been caused by appellant.

The theory of his action is that the appellant was a money broker in Jefferson County, Ala.; that appellee was employed by a railroad in that county, and borrowed some money from the appellant and to secure that loan gave the appellant an assignment on his wages to be earned in the future from the railroad company; that this assignment was void under the act of 1911 regulating the assignments (Acts 1911, p. 370), and under the Money Lenders Act of 1901 (Acts 1901, p. 2685); that the appellant presented this void assignment to appellee's employer, and insisted upon payment thereof, which resulted in his discharge, and in the injury and damage complained of. There was a verdict and judgment in favor of the appellee for $1,000, from which this appeal is prosecuted.

On this appeal it is practically conceded that the assignment was void under the two statutes above referred to, if the statutes be valid enactments. In the letter accompanying his brief counsel for the appellant expressly waives all assignments of error except the first and second, which challenge the sufficiency of accounts A and B of the complaint as amended. These two counts of the complaint sufficiently show that the assignment was void if the two statutes above referred to are constitutional, and that the plaintiff was entitled to maintain the action for the alleged injury done him.

(1) The main insistence on this appeal is that the act approved March 9, 1901, known as the "Money Lenders Act," is unconstitutional. In brief, it is argued that this law violates article 14 of the federal Constitution; but, as this point was not raised in the lower court, it is not presentd for review here. The appellant further contends that the act above referred to violates section 2, art. 1, and sections 23 and 24 of the Constitution of 1875, and that it violates sections 23, 35, 104, and subsections 13 and 19 of section 104 of the Constitution of Alabama of 1901. The appellant further contends that this statute arbitrarily places a burden, restriction, and penalties upon money lenders in the four counties to which it applies that are not placed on persons engaged in like business in other counties of the state, and that the act discriminates between banks and money lenders.

Many of the objections raised by the appellant to this act are satisfactorily answerd in the excellent opinion of the late District Judge Jones in Re Home Discount Co. (D. C.) 147 Fed. 538, where this act was construed and its constitutionality upheld.

(8) The business of money lending may be regulated by the Legislature without doing violence to any constitutional provision, and we think this statute is not subject to any of the criticisms directed against it in the brief on file. Mutual Loan Co. v. Martell, 222 U. S. 225, 32 Sup. Ct. 74, 56 L. Ed. 175, Ann. Cas. 1913B, 529; State v Sherman, 18 Wyo. 169, 105 Pac. 299, 27 L. R. A. (N. S.) 898, Ann Cas. 1912C, 819; Bullard Investment Co. v. Ford (Ala. App.) 89 South. 837; In re Home Discount Co., supra; International Text Book Co. v. Weissinger, 160 Ind. 349, 65 N. E. 521, 65 L. R. A. 599, 98 Am. St. Rep. 334.

The demurrer to Counts A and B as amended being properly overruled, and this being the only ruling of the trial court that we are invited to review, it results that the judgment appealed from must be affirmed.

Affirmed.—The Southern Reporter, Oct. 28, 1922.

ILLINOIS.

To the membership of the Illinois Industrial Lenders Association, and others.

Announcing the regular quarterly meeting.

Time:—Friday, January 26, 1923, six P. M.

Place:—Morrison Hotel, Chicago.

Program:—Dinner, no entertainment, no speakers, no visitors, strictly stag, except ladies actively engaged in the business.

Object:—To give everyone an opportunity to express himself freely; to unburden himself of any complaints, queries or suggestions; to offer constructive criticism, or, in other words—to think out loud in any manner he darn pleases.

Reason:—To gratify a long-felt desire of President Woll's, and others, to have just such a meeting, in a hope to develop a more intimate feeling among our members, and, with a desire, through such contact, to improve every day business practices.

Result:—This arrangement should result in the most substantially representative meeting we have ever had. If such is the case, it will undoubtedly be the most important, instructive and beneficial meeting in our history, so far as the interest of the practical loan man is concerned.

Question:—Will you attend? Or rather, how can you stay away?

Sincerely,
L. T. Baker,
Secretary.

W. P. Woll,
President.

PEORIA, ILLINOIS.

November 21, 1922.

Dear Sir:

Enclosed please find check for the Lenders News, which according to our records should pay up to July, 1923. Sorry this was overlooked by us until this time.

I am enclosing with this a little talk made at our luncheon club a short time ago, also a newspaper clipping with reference to our Credit Grantors Association, which will convey the information as to my connection with it, in fact the loan men here are all members, and we have a very live organization. We are putting on to-night a mock trial, with some of the best attorneys participating. The trial will bring out some facts which are not generally known to credit men. The activities of loan men in their local organizations is, we think, a good thing and the benefits accruing to the loan business are, no doubt, beneficial and far reaching.

The National Convention, this year, must have been a wonderful meeting, and I indeed was sorry that it was not possible for me to have been present. General business conditions here, we think, are very good.

Yours very truly,
A. E. Paris, Manager,
Central Loan Company.

Short Talk Made to the Peoria Advertising and Selling Club.

My impression of the subject: What we have done to improve business; seems to have been somewhat different than the gentlemen who have preceeded me on the program.

My thought on observing the subject for discussion to-day was that it had reference to the thing or things that our particular business had furthered or promoted as directly affecting our customers or clients with reference to aiding or assisting them with the problems which have been theirs since the close of the world war.

Of course the reducing of overhead, the purchasing of goods in smaller quantities, permitting a quicker turn over, the use of proven rules of advertising, are all splendid for the improvement of business within its self, and the customer gets the benefit of it in the reduced price of his purchase.

However to those of you who are not familar with my business, the Industrial Loan business, I desire to say that our part in the effort to improve business, has been largely along the following lines. We have loaned money to a great number of clients to pay house rent, grocery bills, and many other accounts of like nature, brought into existence by loss of employment, or reduced wages.

This money has entered the regular channels of mercantile places and has served a double purpose if you please, for it has permitted that individual to discharge his pressing obligations, thereby making a more contented citizen of him, and by reaching the common avenues of trade has had its certain effect on business in general.

The amount of this money when you consider the five companys so engaged in this work in this city, is a neat sum, and no doubt much of it has passed through the hands of many of the firms you gentlemen represent.

We have extended to those of our clients who were unable to pay through lack of employment or sickness, the time of their payment, and in some cases this has been many months.

This we feel, has had its quieting effect, rather than an irrating one, and when we consider the number we are serving, we can assume that it has had some little to do with the improvement of business, for surely it has not disturbed. We believe that the conduct of our buiness since June 14, 1917, has been such, that we have the confidence of those with whom we come in contact, and that we are lifting, rather than pulling, thus taking our place with other lines of effort which help to make a city.

A E. Paris.

TRUE SUCCESS.

The only permanent basis for success is righteousness. For a young person to get any other belief into his mind is fatal.

Of course, there are a great many people who have money or who occupy a conspicuous place, or who otherwise seem to be flourishing, and are not righteous, but if any one has not sense enough to see that these are exceptions to a great general rule he has not sense enough to succeed.

Success in the U. S. A. means success in business.

And business in its largest and most permanent terms is the most moral thing in the world, the one thing in the world to which righteousness is the most essential.

The great business successes of the modern world are not founded on lies, nor cheating, nor profiteering, nor graft. They are founded on honesty, integrity, good faith and good will.

Judge Gary, chairman of the United States Steel Corporation, speaking the other day at a chamber of commerce luncheon, made the statement that those who occupy positions high in the business world should make certain "that at all times and in every way we do the right and square thing, that we treat our business associates right, that we treat our neighbors right, that we treat our employes right that we treat the public right, and then stand up for our own rights."

Which is pretty good gospel.

MARYLAND.

The regular monthly meeting of the Maryland Industrial Lenders Association was held in the Board Room of the Merchants and Manufacturers Association, Baltimore on Tuesday evening, January 9th at 8 o'clock. Chairman Larsen presided.

The minutes of the meeting show that there were present, Messers. J. Edgar Richardson and Earl Fuggitt, of the United Finance and Security Corporation; H. C. Moore, Chesapeake Loan Company; E. S. Armstrong, National Equitable & Investment Company; W. F. Oliver, Jr., F. M. Ebert and C. R. Hathaway, Household Loan Company; Lewis F. Eckhardt and Roy T. Baseman, Peoples Loan Society; F. B. Snyder, Beneficial Loan Society; E. F. Moore and H. H. Larsen, of Philadelphia, Pa.

Upon motion by Mr. Oliver, seconded by Mr. Snyder, the reading of the minutes of last meeting were dispensed with.

Report of Officers.

The chairman of the Executive Committee and Entertainment Committee being absent, the secretary reports the Entertainment Committee had been successful in securing Mr. E. S. Armstrong to prepare a paper to be read at this meeting. Mr. Armstrong chose as his subject "Coöperation."

In the absence of our treasurer, the secretary reports that the association has on hand, $232.44 in cash with an advertising bill, covering three months in the Baltimore Magazine for $41.35. The matter being acted upon, the secretary was instructed to advise the treasurer to immediately pay the said advertising bill. It was recommended by a majority of the members that the secretary suggest to the Executive Committee that they change our ad in the Baltimore Magazine in each issue.

The secretary reports that the Executive Committee held a meeting on November 23d, 1922 in the office of the Coöperative Loan and Investment Company, at which time, it was decided upon that not over $3,000 be spent in financing National Conventions in the future. Half of this amount to be raised by the State Associations, and the balance paid out of the National Treasury. It was the consensus of opinion that Atlantic City would be a most desirable place to hold our next National Convention. Immediately after this meeting the secretary advised Mr. Kehr, our National Secretary, as to our views on the subject.

The Executive Committee advised that they have been making a few investigations relative to the legality of new concerns operating in this city under the pretext of buying salaries from railroad employees, instead of making straight loans. If they are lending money on Salary Assignments, they naturally should be under the Banking Department Supervision. A complete report will be submitted at our February meeting as to what has been accomplished in this connection.

The secretary requested that each member send in promptly their check in payment of their semi-annual dues in the association. He also urged that the members send in their National dues at their earliest convenience in order that he may send Mr. Kehr, our National secretary, his check promptly in payment of all Maryland members.

Mr. Oliver called attention to the association of the sadness that came into the home of Mr. Hood, of the Coöperative Loan and Investment Company and offered a motion that the secretary advise the treasurer to order a floral design, and send it to Mr. Hood's residence in memory of the little mind that has passed out. This matter being seconded, and carried unanimously, the secretary arranged the matter promptly.

Mr. Armstrong being called upon read a brief paper entitled "Coöperation" as follows:

"Coöperation."

The loan business in this city has been "each man for himself." That is why, to-day, we have not a larger membership in this association. But before we find fault with others, clean out our own house first. We have a clearing house. How many of us take advantage of it? Can you give any good reason for not all using same? No, "Every man for himself" is the motto.

We cannot expect the public to have faith in us if we do not trust one another. Then why find fault with outsiders. We in the association should coöperate more and lead the way, for "In unity there is strength."

The power of all success is faith in others. We must cultivate this among ourselves. We must coöperate with the public by doing everything open and above board. If we do a clean, legitimate business, and not by the old method of get [illegible] money under any condition and not consider the other loan man, we cannot demand respect for our line of business.

The manager must coöperate with the Home Office, even though the management of his office is left to his discreation. There must not only be coöperation with the Home Office, but also with our own employees.

The investigator has it in his power to do great harm to his manager. When he is found to coöperate, greater results are gained, not only for his office, but for himself.

Efficiency in those ways in the office is a great asset. The way in which the customers are handled by these employees makes the reputation of the company. When we are treated courteously they immediately respect the company with which they are dealing.

We, as members of this association, should take the initiative in this great work of coöperation for the success of our business.

E. S. Armstrong.

Mr. Armstrong was complimented by several members, after which a general discussion took place by most every one present upon this subject.

Mr. Hathaway suggested to the association as to how good it would be to have every outside man in our offices present at each meeting. It is hoped that each manager will insist upon his outside men being present at all future meetings.

Upon a suggestion being made by Mr. Baseman that an outside man be assigned to prepare a paper to be read at our February meeting, this suggestion being looked upon with favor by most of the members, the secretary was instructed to contact the Entertainment Committee in this connection. It is hoped that a wide-awake outside man will be requested to prepare a paper to be read at February meeting that will bring a message to us all.

Mr. E. F. Moore, gave the members an impressive talk about the goodness of having a central exchange in Baltimore. He explained how successful the exchange was working in Scranton, Wilkes-Barre. Reading, Philadelphia, and other cities. He also sighted several cases where considerable money had been saved by members of the exchange through information they were successful in obtaining by being members of the exchange. It is a well known fact that there is a certain class of borrower who will willingly obtain as many loans as possible on his household furniture. An exchange successfully run is the only way that this evil can be corrected. It was a pity more members were not present to hear this clear forceful talk upon one of the foremost phases of the loan business of to-day.

There being no further business to transact, upon motion by Mr. Ebert, seconded by Mr. Snyder, the meeting adjourned until Tuesday evening, at 8 o'clock, February 13th.

H. C. Moore, Secretary.

PENNSYLVANIA.

Our members will be pleased to know that Governor elect Gifford Pinchot has reappointed Peter G. Cameron to be Banking Commissioner during his administration. Ex Banking Commissioner John S. Fisher is also to be appointed to an important cabinet position in the Pinchot program as he will be at the head of the new commerce department to be created.

OHIO.

It is reported that on January 10th, Senator Longhead introduced a bill entitled "To amend Section 6346-5 of the General Code to decrease the rate of interest on chattel loans of large amount."

THEY SAY.

Judge Elbert H. Gary, head of the United States Steel Corporation:

"Let us demand in this country full, fair, impartial, competent publicity, applied without fear or discrimination. The attitude and conduct of a nation should not be different from that of an individual. Gentlemen, what we preach let us practice conscientiously. Let us always transact our business on the basis of rendering a full equivalent for what we demand."

Mr. G. W. Kehr,
Harrisburg, Pa.
Dear Sir:

I am very sorry that I have been so long in answering your letter of November 29th, but the delay was unavoidable, as I had three different books to go through in order to get the information I desired in regard to the license numbers that were on the machines of Lewis & Hazel Atwell, when they left this city.

Upon examining the records, I find that Ohio license No. 332310 was issued to Mr. Atwell for a Ford Touring car, and license number 396826 was issued to him to be used on an Overland Touring car.

Hoping that this information will enable us to at least get a line on this man, and protect some other company of a bad loan, I remain,

Yours truly,
The Commonwealth Loan Co.

ADDRESS WANTED.

Name, Louis Atwell, wife Hazel, height about six feet, dark complexion hair turning gray, age about 60 years, wife's age about 35 years. When they left Cambridge, Ohio, they had 5 children, ranging in age from six months to 15 years. These people live in a camping outfit, composed of one Euick car with room built on, two Overland cars with rooms built on, and one Ford car with room built on. He told neighbors that he was going to Texas, but we heard later that he was somewhere in Florida.

Any information regarding these people will be appreciated by the Commonwealth Loan Co., of Cambridge, Ohio.

FRAUD ATTEMPTS RARE, CREDIT MEN ARE TOLD.

"Most people are honest, . It is a rare case when fraud is attempted. However, we want to know if the dealer is honest, if he is free from corrupt influences and practices and if he has due regard for contract obligations." This was part of a speech. "A Mercantile Analysis of a Financial Statement," given by J. A. Everson, assistant sales manager of the International Harvester Company, before the forum of the Chicago Association of Credit Men last night. He said that in the final analysis the basis of credit is integrity, ability and capital.

ACCURACY--ECONOMY--SPEED

To All Users of Meilicke Calculators

A CALENDAR SIGNAL SYSTEM has just been devised which means even greater efficiency to all offices now equipped with the small MEILICKE INTEREST CALCULATOR—Model U.

The purpose of this calendar system is to eliminate the computing of time—in other words, the figuring of the number of days between payments is done away with by the use of this metal calendar signal system. It is attached to the celluloid tabs of the cards according to the days of the month. By turning back to the date of the previous payment you will read the correct interest answer immediately. No mistakes and a wonderful saving of time is effected. Now in use in many offices.

To offices now using the MEILICKE TIME AND INTEREST CALCULATING MACHINE we would strongly urge your trying one of our smaller models (Model U as shown above) in addition to your present equipment. For phone conversation, or on the manager's desk they are very practical. Especially useful in checking mail payments.

Price is only $2.50 per set, prepaid. Cash with order

Set consists of 60 days and full set of months. Full directions furnished.

Read What Baker & Company, Chicago, Say

The William I. Marsh Co., Chicago.

Gentlemen: —The Model "U" with the calendar signal system or date clips is both speedy and convenient. The changing of these clips each morning, by actual observation, consumes between three and four minutes, which means a great saving of time as compared with its operation during a day's business, without the signal system. After the use of the clips is clearly understood, there is not a busy Loan Office in the country that would do without your Model "U" with the calendar signal system attached, after a ten days' trial.

We heartily endorse this little device, and conscientiously recommend it to every man in the business. Very truly yours,

MONEY AS A STABILIZER

An Address by Hon. J. Willis Martin, President Judge of the Court of Common Pleas, Philadelphia, before the Annual Meeting of the Pennsylvania Association, November 16, 1922

It is indeed a great privilege to have been invited to this gathering to-night, not only by reason of the admirable entertainment that has been presented to us, but it is a rarer privilege to be able to look into the faces of these beautiful women and handsome men and feel they can be "touched" for a loan! (Laughter.)

There are various ways, as you know, of obtaining money. Three small boys were discussing the financial problem one day, when one of the boys said, "I bet you my father makes more than your two fathers put together." And the other boy said, "Why, what does your father do to make so much money?" The first boy said, "My father is a doctor, and he just sits there all day, and the people come in, and he writes on a little piece of paper and they go out and they pay him $10 every time they come there." The second boy said, "Oh, that's nothing. My father is a lawyer. He goes into court and talks for twenty minutes or a half hour, and he gets $500." The third boy scoffed. "Well, my father can make more money than your two fathers put together. He makes a whole lot of money." And the other two asked him, "What does your father do?" He replied proudly, "My father is a minister, and when he preaches on Sunday it takes six men to carry up the money!" (Laughter.)

The grim struggle that enveloped the world from 1914 to 1918 strained the mental and material resources of the world. In that struggle mankind exerted more brain power, energy and resourcefulness than it was ever thought it possessed. All the fiery concentrated energy of the human race was applied to the principle of self-preservation. It was the biggest job man has ever undertaken, in vastness, intensity and human effort; and when the war was ended and the victory was won, and the great adventure over, men and women came back to find the old ways tame, the old life dull, the old restraints burdensome, and they themselves possessed by a desire for change and variety and a longing for something different that they never felt before. We see it in the turnover in industry, in the strikes, in the enormous increases in divorces and the crimes of violence, murder and the lust for gain, and the extravagant expenditure of men and women, and, what is worse, in the discontent.

There are two ways of treating a disease, and this was a disease of the body politic. One is to treat the symptoms and the other is to remove the cause. For many years, and until comparatively recent times, as an illustration, take the case of insanity. The doctors in a hospital for the insane assumed that when manifestations of behavior indicating an insane patient were apparent, that there must be a lesion of the brain. That theory has been exploded to very large extent, for a great many manifestations of insanity are the reflex of some trouble with the kidneys, with the digestive apparatus, or some other organ of the body, and, when that has been straightened out, more cases of insanity have been cured than were ever thought of in the years gone by. And in many other instances that is true—instead of treating the symptoms, the doctors have tried to arrive at the cause, and so to-day the politicians and statesmen are endeavoring to find the cause for this unrest and remove the cause rather than undertake to force people who were in this state of mind to obey the laws and conform with the customs.

In recent times a scientist has invented the gyroscope, what is known as a stabilizer, and this is put aboard ships and its use has reduced the roll of a ship in a heavy sea from about seventeen and a half degrees to three and a half degrees; and so it is important that this uprising, this upheaval in the world politic should be reached in some such way by a "stabilizer". How are you going to do it? The first thing to study is the mode of bringing it about. Now, in the case where the man who has not is jealous of the man who has, the best way is to endeavor not necessarily to take from the man who has and destroy him, but to build up the man who has not, and one of the great principles by which this City of Philadelphia has come to be known as "the city of homes" is because every encouragement has been offered to the smaller earners to own their own homes, and hence we have a condition where in case of riot, the law applicable to this county makes the county responsible in tax for any damage done, and it is necessary to bring home to the great body of rioters most of whom are property owners, that it means a tax on property, to eliminate the idea of destroying property. And that brings to my mind an advertisement that appeared some time ago in a daily paper reading: "Wanted, 300 rats and 1000 roaches," and someone being curious to find out why the rats and roaches were wanted, whether for scientific purposes, or otherwise, went down to the office of the newspaper to ascertain who could put in such an advertisement, he wanted to find out, as a matter of curiosity, what a man needed all these rats and roaches for. He secured the address of the advertiser from the newspaper, and when he arrived at that address he found a pretty ill-natured sort of a fellow, and the curious one said, "Tell me this—what was your idea of inserting this advertisement in the paper—wanted 300 rats and 1000 roaches." "Well," the other replied, "I have been living in this house for some time, and my landlord is a very hard proposition, he has been putting up the rent year after year, and I got notice from him a short time ago that if I didn't pay a larger rent next year I would have to surrender the house, but the lease states I would have to surrender the house in the same condition as when I rented it, reasonable wear and tear excepted, and that is why I wanted the rats and roaches." (Laughter and applause.)

Now one of the best illustrations perhaps of that condition of unrest that arises by reason of the desire for wealth, appeared when the automobile was first introduced. Originally the automobile was an expensive article and only the wealthy could afford it. Automobiles were for the hated rich, and there was a great deal of ill-feeling on the part of those who travelled the streets and saw these automobiles dashing about in a way to endanger life and limb, and, as occasionally happened, someone was run down and the person driving the automobile was brought into the criminal court. Great difficulty was experienced in keeping them from being punished, no matter what the circumstances were. I recall the case of a man who was innocent of any vicious intent or design who ran his automobile up Broad Street on the East Side as far as Cambria Street. At that point they were tearing down a building, and the bricks from this old building were piled up into a large sized pile, say

12 feet high, 15 feet wide, and about 60 feet long. This man ran his automobile until he came near the crossing, when he slowed up, and when he passed the crossing he began to speed up again, and when he came to the upper end of this pile of bricks, which was about 60 feet from the crossing, a man suddenly rushed out from behind the bricks and dashed in front of the automobile, and, of course, was knocked down and injured. The driver stopped his machine and took the injured man to the Samaritan Hospital, where he engaged a private room, and went to see the man's family to find out what he could do. The man was not very seriously injured, and in about six weeks he was out of the hospital, all his bills were paid by the man who drove the motor; and the first place that injured man went was to a lawyer's office, and the lawyer, in order to intimidate the driver and force him into making a settlement, had him immediately arrested, and later his trial came up, and the jury had all made up their minds to punish him severely. But the foreman of that jury happened to own an automobile, he knew how unjust the whole thing was, that the accident was really the fault of the man who had been injured, and so he said he would stay out all night before he would bring in a verdict against the driver of the automobile, because it was most unjust. Now, today, nearly every man, woman, boy or girl owns a "tin lizzie", and it is very hard to punish anybody, indeed the pedestrian seems to have no right on the highway.

You may recall the story of the two Irishmen who met one day on the street, and one said to the other, "Mike, I have been thinking over the hard times, and I have decided the best thing for all of us is to become Socialists." "Why, that's what I am," said Casey. "You are a Socialist?" said the other. "Shure, I'm a Socialist," said Casey. Said the first, "Do you mean if you had two horses you would give me one?" "Of course I would." "If you had two cows, would you give me one?" "I would." "And if you had two goats, would you give me one?" "I would not," said the other. "Why is that?" the first asked in surprise. "Because," said the other, "I have two goats." (Laughter.)

There are two great advantages offered in this business that you men are engaged in—one, the advantage to the lender, the other advantage to the borrower. When a man is in the condition of depending upon his manual labor, if he has any intelligence at all he knows that ultimately that will not get him anywhere, especially if he expects to raise a family and has to depend upon the work of his hands. But he also knows, by what he reads and hears, that many a man who had nothing but his hands to depend on, with the use of his brain power and a small amount of capital, not only acquired a fortune but became eminent in the community. The knowledge that in order to borrow money he must have collateral, is going to make that man hopeless. What chances are there for the man like that, naturally envious of those who are better off? Now, if the man can go to an institution to borrow money, and can borrow that money not on collateral, but on his character, and if he knows that the things that make up that character are honesty, industry and integrity, he is going to build up a character of that sort, and when he builds up a character of that kind, he makes himself a better citizen, and an asset to the community. On the other hand, if he falls into the hands of the so-called "loan sharks", which this act was intended to abolish, he becomes a hopeless slave to the money lenders, he naturally sinks into crime of some form, and there seems to be no hope, no chance for him.

Now, on the other hand, the people who engage in this sort of business, of course, must be protected. If they attempt to make a charity out of a business of this kind, then that insults the decent man, and simply makes the man who is no good, worse. Therefore, there must be some regular method pursued in these laws that are made, there must be a sufficient return to insure the principal, a sufficient profit to insure the return of the principal, and a reasonable rate of interest; and when that is accomplished the people who engage in this business can feel they are building up in this community a better and more substantial citizenship than if the matter was left in the hands of these money sharks or these people were driven into the pawn shops as their only refuge.

When this is accomplished, when these people are made better, the whole community profits because, although the war is over, still we have before us, as history has demonstrated in the past, "times that would try men's souls," and straightforward men in a community such as this have to stand as a bulwark against transgressions of the law and hold for the strict observance of it. (Applause.)

ILLINOIS.

The regular quarterly meeting of the Illinois Association was held at the Morrison Hotel, Chicago, January 26th.

At 6:20 P.M., dinner was served, in the Rose Room of the Morrison Hotel, to sixty-six men and two ladies, all of whom are in some capacity actively engaged in the Industrial Loan Business in Illinois, each being a member or an employee of a member of the Illinois Association, there being no visitors present.

The dinner was too good to describe, and we had, in the nature of pepsin tablets to aid digestion, a black-faced comedy dialogue, during coffee, which put everyone in a cheerful mood, lending well to the success of the business meeting which followed, as it was a strict, straight, serious business session.

The by-law procedure was adhered to, after President Woll called the meeting to order, the Roll Call and Reading of Minutes of the previous meeting were dispensed with, as established by precedent.

Membership Committee reported sixty-seven members all in good standing, except four, who were delinquent in payment of dues since January first of this year. Mr. P. L. Blazer of Lincoln, Illinois, who recently obtained a license from the Department of Trade and Commerce, was present, and applied for membership in the Illinois Industrial Lenders Association, the Illinois Chamber of Commerce and the American Industrial Lenders Association.

The Grievance and Special Committees had no report to make.

President Woll then announced that the National Association Convention would probably be held at Louisville, Kentucky, in September of this year. He stated that it was proposed that the National Association pay one-half of the expense of the Convention, which was to be limited to possibly $2000, and, after a brief discussion, it was evident that the Illinois Association could be depended upon to contribute between $250 and $500 to the payment of the other half of the Convention expense.

By proper motion, President Woll was authorized to appoint a Legislative Committee, which he did, consisting of Messrs. Weinschenk (Chairman), Turgrimson and Ward.

The Secretary was then authorized to issue new membership certificates on the first of each year, bearing on their face large colored figures to designate the year. Such certificates have been ordered, and our members may expect receipt of same in due course.

It was then called to the attention of the meeting that the word "lawful" was misspelled on the Association emblem adopted at our last meeting, and the Secretary was authorized to have new and proper cuts made, which has been done. Any member wishing to use this emblem on his stationery, may secure cut for fifty cents from the Secretary's office.

An invitation, from Roy F. Hartz, Secretary of the Indiana Association, was read, requesting our members to attend the Managers' meeting of the Indiana association, to be held at Fort Wayne, Indiana, on the 15th of February. This invitation was very much appreciated, and President Woll and others may attend.

The State and National dues were mentioned, and all members urged to remit promptly.

Messrs. Harbison, Napier, and Woll spoke on the advantages of our men affialiating with the Illinois Chamber of Commerce. Much enthusiasm was aroused. Messrs. Griswold, Biederman, Blazer, Bratt, Palmer, Bodine, Gray and Dr. Wagner indicated their desire to become members of the Illinois Chamber of Commerce. This will give us an enrollment of about thirty-five men.

Mr. Napier, in a brief talk, made reference to a recent investigation of a Chicago member by the Department of Trade and Commerce, which resulted in the revocation of his license. Mr. Napier, in his usual eloquent and impressive manner, and with his sincere paternal interest, gave us considerable good advice, and many suggestions.

Although it was not a State Association matter, Mr. Rose, who was recently appointed Chairman of a Clearing House Committee, reported briefly on the activities of his Committee. A meeting of the Chicago members, to discuss the matter, was called for the afternoon of February 2, 1923.

Following this, the evening's really big and important event transpired. President Woll went down in the history of our Association as a forceful, inspiring, extemporaneous speaker. As he warmed up, he jestured and modulated in such a regular spellbinder fashion, that we were all ears with interest. His subject was apparently, "What is the matter with us loan men?" for he picked us to pieces, showed up the weak spots, and made well-founded criticism. His eloquence, however, was only surpassed by his diplomacy, for he was so kindly in his attitude, that he created a unanimous disposition toward strictly ethical business practices. President Woll thinks that one of our outstanding faults is a lack of understanding of what we owe, as individuals, to our fellow members, to our State and National Association, and to the Loan Business at large. Inasmuch as our business is in the nature of a semi-public institution, having been recognized by the Law, and takes us into the very homes of our customers, both the borrower and the business deserve a very broad and deep consideration by those in the business of making small loans.

He spoke at length upon the necessity of strict observance of not only the Law, but also the rulings and suggestions of the Department of Trade and Commerce.

For those who did not attend this meeting, it is unfortunate that Mr. Woll had no manuscript, or that no stenographic report was made, for it was one of the most "worth while" talks we, as an Association, have ever heard, evidenced by the applause he received, and the handshakes offered after adjournment, which followed his talk.

INDIANA

A meeting for the managers of the members of the Indiana Association was held at Anthony Hotel, Fort Wayne, February 15th. R. C. Hardisty, R. E. Cadorette, C. H. Wilcoxen composed the committee in charge. We hope to publish an account of this meeting in our next issue. No papers were read. The whole meeting was open for the discussion of practical subjects. A bill purporting to amend the interest rate permitted by the Indiana small loan law from three and one half per cent per month to two per cent per month introduced in the Indiana Senate, Tuesday, January 23d, was promptly killed Thursday, January 26th, after a public hearing had been held. At the hearing Judge Collins and Father Tavish were the principal speakers. Both maintained that there was no money to be made at a rate higher than that proposed by the bill and that the existing rate only permitted the lenders a fair return on their investment.

C. H. Stratton appeared in behalf of the members of the Indiana Association and explained the impracticability of the bill.

A credit union bill has appeared in the Indiana legislature but we have no knowledge of its advancement since its introduction.

LEGISLATORS.

Stop! Look! Listen!

STATE OF GEORGIA.

Department of Public Welfare
State House, Atlanta, August 31, 1922.

Hon. Cecil Neil, Speaker of the House of Representatives, General Assembly of Georgia, Columbus, Georgia.

DEAR MR. NEILL:

My attention has been called to an effort during the last session of the legislature to pass an act reducing the monthly rate of interest permitted under the Small Loan Law as passed by the Georgia legislature in 1920.

I have looked into this matter carefully and have consulted with the Russell Sage Foundation, which has made extensive investigations in the operation of the Small Loan business, because of its interest in preventing extortionate charges to small borrowers. I am advised by John M. Glenn, Director of the Russell Sage Foundation that the Georgia law is practically the one which was prepared by his organization. He further states that on the basis of his investigation the rate charged under this law is not unreasonable in view of the heavy expense and risk involved in making small loans. He states further that any reduction in the rate will put the legitimate licensed small loan agencies out of business thus turning the small borrowers back into the hands of the illegimate loan sharks.

I am therefore wiriting to heartily endorse the Small Loan Law as it now stands and to urge your assistance in stopping any future effort toward making its provisions effective.

I do this in behalf of the unfortunate classes in whose interest the State Department of Public Wellfare was established.

Very sincerely yours,
Burr Blackburn,
Secretary.

NEWS ADS PAY.

SMOKERS TAKE NOTICE

LOUISVILLE, Ky., January 29, 1923.

MY DEAR MR. KEHR:

I have a sample of Red Burley smoking tobacco that was grown in the hills of old Kentucky, where the dewdrops of the early morn are as fragrant and sweet as the new-mown hay, and the nearest I have to the well remembered "Old Kentucky Dew" or "Bourbon," which is gone forever.

Thinking either you or some of our conventional friends would enjoy smoking some of the product from the hills of old Kentucky, I would be delighted to send this sample to you with my compliments.

Should you know of anyone who has a grievance against his mother-in-law, tell him to load his pipe and go to her. I feel quite sure that the judge will do the rest.

If you can use this, please advise me.

Yours very truly,
C. E. REED.

LOUISVILLE WINS NINTH NATIONAL CONVENTION.

After considering suggestions and invitations from members for the past several months, the National Executive Committee has unanimously voted to hold the next national convention in Louisville, Ky., September 19th, 20th, 21st, and 22d.

The guiding influences with the Executive Committee were that the next convention should be held some where in the middle west at a convenient place easily reached by the majority of our members and where accommodations were satisfactory and yet not so attractive that the business of the convention might be neglected.

The plans for the next convention will be less elaborate from the amusement and entertainment standpoint than the last three but they will lack nothing in educational features both for members and guests.

Mr. C. E. Reed, 203 Coleman Bldg., Louisville, Ky., the National Vice-Chairman from unorganized territory will be chairman of the local Committee in charge of arrangements.

The Seelbach Hotel will be our headquarters and a large meeting hall will be provided by the Louisville Convention and Publicity League. Kentucky being one of the so-called outlaw states, an open meeting for the discussion of the merits of the Uniform Small Loan Law, adopted by the states having a majority of the population will be arranged. Legislators, Public Welfare and Labor Organizations will be invited to attend.

Material for this month's NEWS being limited and reading these winter nights agreeable pastime we are publishing a detailed account of our next convention city:

Louisville Centrally Located.

It is the most nearly central of any large city in the United States, only fifty miles from the center of population as revealed by the 1920 Federal census. Geographically, it is just far enough South to be in easy reach of every section of the country, and far enough North to be within a few hours' ride from the Canadian border. From East and West it is the very middle of the Union.

Nine Trunkline Railroads.

It is served by nine trunkline railroads, with schedules that permit of close connections in any direction, if desired, or of twelve-hour daylight or overnight stopovers. Its two railway stations are both in close proximity to the retail district of the city, and accessible readily by street cars to all the various industrial districts. Through Pullman service is available on all lines to every point East, West, North and South, with a consolidated downtown ticket office in the heart of the city. Freight terminals are located equally advantageously, while a belt line railroad serves all industries in a splendid manner.

Fine Hotel Facilities.

It possesses the very best of hotel facilities. All the principal hotels are situated in the center of the business and shopping district, and each is provided with a fine auditorium suitable for large conventions and smaller halls for those of less magnitude. One difference between Louisville's hotels and those of many other large cities is that the management of each is thoroughly imbued with the friendly spirit of this city and uncommon pains are taken to insure the happiness and comfort of each individual guest. This is just a part of Louisville's program to sustain the city's reputation for hospitality, and it has paid large dividends in a country-wide feeling of friendliness for our city.

Adequate Convention Halls.

It possesses what undoubtedly is the greatest convention and exhibit hall in America. The Jefferson County Armory, two blocks from Fourth and Walnut Streets—on Walnut—the busiest intersection in Louisville, has the largest unobstructed floor space in the United States, not excepting even Madison Square Garden or the Chicago Coliseum. The main floor contains 53,000 square feet, beside which are commodious balconies and smaller assembly rooms. In addition to the Armory for convention purposes, there is a large municipal auditorium with a seating capacity of 7,000, the various hotel auditoriums, theaters, churches and other halls available for such use.

River a Scenic Charm.

It possesses points of interest to the visitor in the widest variety, and has attractions of national fame either within its limits or near by. The Ohio River which, as it approaches, passes and leaves Louisville, presents its most charming stretches, is one of the big attractions to those who love to view the wonders of nature. A medium of a rapidly growing freight and passenger traffic, the Ohio above and below Louisville also is a delight to the eye, and the palatial excursion steamers that make Louisville their home port during the summer season provide one of the most enjoyable means of entertainment for the visitor.

Beautiful Park System.

It possesses public parks unrivalled in natural beauty by any in America. Louisville is blessed with a park system in which the hand of man played small part. The three larger parks, Cherokee, Iroquois and Shawnee, each is of a distinct type of unfailing beauty with a full measure of utility. In these parks are fifty-seven tennis courts, twenty-two baseball diamonds, two large outdoor swimming pools, one free golf course, and innumerable picnicking spots with commodious shelter houses, while the other twenty smaller parks and playgrounds are the mecca for the children of the city, for a wide variety of playground apparatus and trained instructors are provided. Besides the parks proper there are thirty-five miles of parkways and park roads which offer wonderful motor tours past the most beautiful private estates and less pretentious homes to be found in any city. Convention visitors invariably are entranced by the beauties of Louisville's parks and boulevards.

Points of Historic Interest.

It possesses historical associations that are of never-failing interest to the visitor. Here can be pointed out the supply base of Gen. George Rogers Clark, who founded Louisville, and who won the Great Northwest, and whose body lies in beautiful Cave Hill Cemetery; near here also is the tomb of Gen. Zachary Taylor, fourteenth President of the United States; on the southern outskirts of the city is the site of Camp Zachary Taylor, where more than 75,000 of the youth of the country received the training that fitted them to turn the onward march of the Germans into a rout, while within an hour's motor trip of Louisville is the 40,000-acre Camp Henry Knox, one of the Government's principal permanent artillery training centers.

Three hours distant by motor is the log cabin birthplace of Abraham Lincoln, and a little farther on is Fairview, Ky., where Jefferson Davis, the leader of the Confederacy, was born. Only a few miles out of Louisville is the house where Prince Louis Phillippe lived as an exile from France before he became King of France. Two hour's motor ride from Louisville is the world-famed Trappist monastery of Gethsemane, while very recently has been found the burial place, near Louisville, of the father of Abraham Lincoln.

Mammoth Cave Near By.

But perhaps the most famous point of interst near Louisville is Mammoth Cave, accessible by railroad or motor, while in Indiana, a few miles northwest of Louisville is Wyandotte Cave. Both of these caverns for years have been the objective of thousands of tourists, and as arrangements now are possible for special train service to Mammoth Cave by convention parties from Louisville, this great natural wonder in many instances has been one of the greatest factors in drawing conventions to this city.

Louisville's Climate Favorable.

Louisville possesses climatic conditions which are most favorable. It has neither rigorous winters nor enervating summers, enjoying a mean average annual temperature of about 57 degrees. A 49-year report by the United States Weather Bureau shows an average of 33 days with a temperature of 90 degrees or higher and 74 days with temperatures 32 degrees or under, while the average annual rainfall is 43.81 inches.

Adequate Street Car Facilities.

Louisville is served over 178 miles of city street car tracks, and also by eight electric interburban lines, operating 230 miles of trackage. The interburban lines provide a particularly advantageous suburban service, which accounts in considerable measure for the immense number of beautiful country homes near the city, and which invariably is the source of much comment from visitors. Louisville's street car system is one of the best in the country, as not only does it operate well-appointed lines on all the principal streets toward the downtown district, but it has crosstown lines which make unduly lengthy trips unnecessary. Louisville also has one of the most modern, complete and efficient taxicab systems to be found anywhere, with rates so low as to excite comment from most visitors.

City Brightly Lighted.

Louisville is one of the best lighted cities in the country. It is adopting the ornamental lighting standard system for its principal downtown streets, and this will be extended from time to time to the residential sections. Louisville is served with natural gas, and its water supply, obtained from the Ohio River and purified at one of the largest and most modern filtration plants in the country, is one of the city's strongest boasting points. When the visitor to Louisville opens the tap in his room he can be assured he is getting water as pure and potable as can be obtained.

Plenty of Amusements.

In points of amusements, other than those heretofore described, Louisville is well provided. There are some forty theatres, including picture shows, with two devoted to the legitimate drama, several to vaudeville, and in the ranks of the movies is one which was only recently completed at a cost of $1,000,000, which is said to be the finest in its appointments of any save one in the country—and that one in New York.

Famous Racing Center.

Besides its theatres, Louisville is perhaps famed as much as the home of the internationally-known Churchill Downs race track as for any other reason. Here is run annually, early in May, the historic Kentucky Derby, the oldest turf classic in America, in which the flower of the world's three-year-olds compete. It attracts around 60,000 race lovers each year. Racing starts here each spring early in May (Derby Day), and continues about twenty days. Fall racing dates are usually in the month of October.

Louisville also is the seat of the Kentucky State Fair, which has a wonderfully beautiful location, and which is adequately equipped with exhibition buildings, race track, etc. The mammoth manufacturers' building is available for conventions.

Noted for Its Churches.

Louisville is distinctly a city of churches, and a religious census a few years ago revealed that Louisville has a larger percentage of church members per 1,000 population than any other large American city. There are two large theological seminaries and 271 churches, with property worth in excess of $8,000,000. Its public library system consists of one main library and eleven branch libraries scattered to the best advantage over the residential sections. It has a large central Y. M. C. A., with railroad and negro branches; a Y. W. C. A., Y. M. H. A., Knights of Columbus, and other kindred organizations, well housed. The Pendennis Club is a Louisville landmark, which is famed the country over and which numbers among its membership, besides the most prominent men in this city, many of the eminent personages of the country. Louisville has three country clubs, each with magnificent establishments and beautiful golf courses, while a fourth is in process of organization.

Plenty Here to Eat.

Louisville also is distinctly a well-fed city. It is in the heart of a wonderful truck garden section, in which is grown the very best of all that is good to eat, both in the way of vegetables and fruits, and consequently it is not dependent upon any other market for supplies of this kind. Louisville also is blessed with a large number of excellent restaurants, from the most ornate to the "one-arm" variety, where one may be served to suit every taste.

Wonderful Shopping District.

Another feature that is always remarked by every visitor is Louisville's retail shopping district. Louisville has the general reputation of having the most interesting, as well as the best decorated show windows in America. These beautiful windows only reflect the excellence of the stores back of them, and it is a matter of common knowledge that Louisville's stores offer greater shopping attractions, especially for women, than those of almost any other city. In fact, so widespread is the reputation of Louisville's stores that New York itself is often referred to as "The Louisville of the North."

Ideal Convention City.

All in all, Louisville is an ideal convention city, and she is glad to have the stranger within her gates. She offers as an inducement all and more than any other city can promise in material advantages, but most of all she offers a genuine, sincere welcome, and has made a standing pledge to live true to that traditional reputation for real hospitality, which, after all, is only that very human touch needed to make us all real friends—not merely casual guests or acquaintances.

We are glad to have had this opportunity to speak directly to you, you prospective sojourner in our midst, and we hope that after you come here you will carry away with you the feeling that Louisville tried sincerely to be good to you, to provide for your comfort and happiness while here, to earn your good will and to send you away with nothing but pleasant recollections of your visit, so that not only will you want to come again, but also that you will recommend our city to your friends wherever you may roam.

Louisville was established by an act of the Virginia Legislature in May, 1790. It was named in honor of Louis XVI, of France, and is, therefore, properly pronounced.

MONEY LENDING—A BUSINESS NECESSITY.

The above appeared on the first page of one of Harrisburg's leading newspapers recently and is published only because it shows the present day attitude of the press and public toward legitimate money lending. Several years ago this paper led a vigorous attack against the "loan sharks" that caused the district attorney to open his office in defense of the victims. The whole matter eventually culminated in sane legislation being enacted fair to borrower and lender.

GEORGIA.

The Georgia Industrial Lenders Association held a banquet in the Pine Room at Hotel Ansley, Thursday evening, January, 11th, which was attended by all the members of the Association,, as well as all employees, including the ladies.

The meeting was addressed by Richard B. Russell, Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of Georgia, who stressed the point that the Industrial Loan Business had become to be recognized as an actual necessity and as one of the leading financial factors of any industrial community and was glad that a scientific rate had been legalized that was fair to both the borrower and lender.

The meeting was also addressed by Robert B. Blackburn and Tillie Von Nunes, two prominent Atlanta Attorneys, who have been interested for a number of years in the general uplift of the Industrial Loan Business and declared that such a business was just as necessary to any community as the Commercial Banks.

A number of interesting talks pertaining to the Industrial field was made by members of the association.

A. B. Madison, Chairman and Toast Master of the occasion, made an interesting talk at the close of the meeting extending to the guests of the evening the appreciation in behalf of the association of their presence.

CALIFORNIA.

Los Angeles, January 25, 1923.

My Dear Mr. Kehr:

The Year Book of the American Industrial Lenders Association came to hand a short time ago. I glanced through it hurriedly when it arrived, but have deferred acknowledging receipt of same until this time, as I felt that the volume was worthy of careful perusal and thought.

I believe it is the best Year Book that has ever been published. The articles are certainly constructive for those engaged in the business, as well as those who may have the privilege of reading the same, who are not directly interested. The business is rapidly taking its proper place in banking and financial circles, and the public is coming to a more full realization of the needs of the working man, and the necessity of providing him with proper credit accommodations when he needs them.

The conditions in California are deplorable, and I can see that they are gradually growing worse since the enactment by the people of our so-called Usury Law. I have not noted any effort to enforce the same on the part of our officials, although we do have, in both Los Angeles and San Francisco, the old free lance offices who charge in excess of the legal rate and take the chances. The only way that our present law can be changed will be by placing the matter on the ballot and submitting it to a vote of the people at a general election. I doubt if this will ever come to pass, therefore it is doubtful if California will ever have a law resembling in any respect the uniform law now existing in so many of the Eastern states.

I have recently received a number of accounts from various Eastern offices where the parties have skipped to Los Angeles, and in many cases they have frankly stated that it was upon your recommendation they were sending them. I wish to thank you for the good word you are passing out, and also state that there is a very fair percentage of these cases where I have secured settlements.

Again thanking you for the Year Book, and with best personal regards and wishes for a prosperous 1923, I remain

Very truly yours,

W. Hall Crowell.

HOW MANY OTHERS?

Dayton, Ohio. January 26, 1923.

Dear Sir:

I see where you are asking the different members whether or not they are affiliated with any business men's clubs in their respective cities.

I am proud to state that I have for three years been a member of our Local Lions Club, having served the Club in the capacity as secretary, for one year, after which I was elected to the board of directors, for a term of three years, which I still hold, and am at present chairman of two committees, also a charter member of this organization. It has been a wonderful help to me in doing some publicity work in enlightening some of our foremost business men in regards to our business of which they now have an entirely different understanding. My suggestion is for each member of our own organization to become members of some of the business mens' clubs in their city, and become active members, get on committees, serve as officers, and do their duty to their club and community. I am sure excellent results can be obtained by social intercourse with the best business men that each individual city has.

Here's hoping Mr. Kehr, that your next list you publish will be a long one showing each member's club affiliation.

Yours truly,

B. F. Wunsch.

LIONS TO SUPPORT "LOAN SHARKS" LAW.

Local Civic Organization Will Give Active Support to Bill Proposed In Present Legislature.

On the attitude of the West Virginia legislature toward the proposition that 3½ per cent interest per month legitimately charged is better than 10 to 85 per cent charged by "loan sharks" in the city will depend the passage of the small loan act that will have the backing of the Lions Club of Charleston.

The West Virginia loan shark is to be put out of business, provided the legislature this year enacts the small loan law proposed by the club. The law will, in effect, put an adequate license fee on the conducting of the small loan banking business and, at the same time, will give persons engaged in this business the privilege of charging a much higher rate of interest than the 6 per cent now allowed by statute.

A few years ago it would have been impossible to prepare a comprehensive statement of the facts connected with small loan business. Nothing was generally known about it except that it was controlled by men who were said to operate without the law, who charged barbarous rates of interest and who earned themselves the obnoxious title of "loan sharks."

In this state, from time to time, opposition to the methods of the loan shark have sprung up, but uniformly they have gotten nowhere. It is now held by persons who have investigated conditions fully that these efforts failed for the reason they were directed toward the prohibition of small loan borrowing instead of placing safeguards around the borrower.

The thing that startles the advocates of a remedy for the existing conditions is that investigation disclosed the fact that small time loans cannot profitably be made for a rate less than what appears on its face to be usurious interest.

Several Loan Sharks Here.

There are a number of institutions in Charleston having as their business the making of small loans. The majority of them are said to be conducted along legitimate lines, but there are others that are said to make interest charges beyond all reason.

It is generally supposed that persons borrowing from these companies do so because they are drunkards and bums The reverse is said to be the case, for the simple reason that no one is going to lend an irresponsible person money without adequate security. The extent of the risk in small loans is said to be based almost entirely on the character of the borrower.

One loan company showed that 373 persons borrowed because of sickness, 203 to pay debts, buy furniture and educate children, 201 for miscellaneous expenses, such as moving; 105 in connection with their own small business operations, 95 for some expenses, such as repairs, taxes and insurance; 66 for emergencies caused by unemployment, 56 because of extravagance or dissipation, 43 because of death, and 16 because of bad investments.

Borrowers Have Jobs.

In almost every instance the borrower is employed. The records of one loan company showed that of a number of his customers, 247 were clerks, 245 were government employees, 344 were in business, 177 held minor public positions, 114 were policemen, 198 were firemen, 113 were salesmen, 108 were printers, 81 were factory operators, 64 were bookkeepers and accountants, 44 were stenographers, 40 were foremen, 39 were tailors, 67 were managers, 34 were machinists, 33 were inspectors, 24 were court employees, 24 were artisans, 33 were agents, 18 were teachers, 18 were telegraphers, 15 were doctors and dentists and 3 were conductors.

The small loan is said to run in all sized amounts, from $25 to $300. The amount of interest charged is based, in the loan shark "banks" on what the customer will stand for and what the manager has the cupidity to charge. It is stated that the rate rarely runs below 10 per cent per month and sometimes goes as high as 85 per cent. This means 120 to over 1,000 per cent per year.

It is the custom of the lender to take the interest out of the cash payment. The borrower then goes ahead and pays off the principal of the loan in regular installments. Before the loan is made a full investigation is conducted relative to his standing in the neighborhood and his record with various employers. If the investigation shows that he is honest and a steady worker he gets the money. Sometimes a deed of trust is taken on his household effects, but not always. The risk is usually a moral one.

One Refused to Pay.

It is told of a local borrower that when he woke up and found that he had contracted to pay usurious interest, he paid up an amount equal to the principal and 6 per cent interest, the legal rate, and flatly refused to pay the balance. "All right," said the loan shark, "but you'll wish you had paid in full."

Now it is shown that the persons who patronize the loan sharks are likely to be chronic borrowers. They are often improvident, and so, when adversity comes their way, they have to have cash, no matter what it costs to get it. This happened with the customer who had refused to pay more than 6 per cent. He went back to the loan shark and made application for a loan. He was refused. He agreed to stand for almost any charges, but he was told that his business was not wanted.

Applications to other establishments of the kind in the city were also fruitless. No one would have anything to do with the borrower, and he had to suffer for the lack of money. The word had been passed around to the others to be on the lookout for him, and the fraternity saw that the story was noised about to the small loan borrowers in general so that all might take warning.

Is 3½ Per Cent Too Much?

The point about the proposed West Virginia statute that causes many to look at it askance is the fact that the interest charge that is to be allowed under the law is 3½ per cent per month, or 42 per cent per year, on all loans under $300. To many this appears to be usurious, but small bankers claim that they cannot afford to loan for a less amount.

It is pointed out by advocates of the law that the 3½ per cent per month is just enough, under average conditions, for the bank to realize 6 per cent on its capital after payment of the cost of doing business and making the loan. That the interest charge on $100, the average amount of a loan, would be $10.50, it has been figured that the expense attending the making of the loan will average $9. On the fact that the rate of 3½ per cent is an economic saving over that of 10 to 85 per cent, the advocates of the law base their claims. For, it is claimed, if the law does not pass, the loan shark will continue to ply his trade, and if it does pass, he will have to go out of business.

MARYLAND.

As Secretary of the Maryland Association, I cannot impress it too strongly upon your minds the benefit you will derive from an educational point of view by attending our next meeting to be held on Feburary 13th at 8 p.m. in the Conference Room, 6th floor of the Merchants and Manufacturers Building, 22 Light St., Baltimore, Md.

The Executive Committee have a report to submit relative to new concerns operating in this city under the pretext of buying salaries.

Mr. Roy T. Baseman, investigator and adjuster of the Peoples Loan Society will read a paper on "How I handle an application at the home." Mr. Baseman's subject is one well worth while, and ample time will be given for a general discussion on this subject.

Executive Committee Chairman Mattingly will submit twelve questions treating upon the foremost phases of our business of to-day.

We contemplate at this writing submitting at least one company for membership.

Come yourself, see your outside men are present, prepare to take an active part. Help us make this meeting worth while.

Sincerely yours,
H. C. Moore.

MEMBERSHIP ADVANTAGES

Springfield, Illinois. Jan. 17, 1923.

Mr. D. H. Rose,
Chicago Mortgage Loan Co.,
Chicago, Ill.

Dear Sir:

Yours of the 16th received with remittance for which we thank you very kindly. I don't believe we would ever got our money if it had not been for your efforts.

I know that you don't make any charges for this work but I want you to buy yourself a new hat at my expense. I am enclosing a check for $10 and I want you to feel that we appreciate the efforts you have given in our behalf.

Yours truly,
H. M. Griswold.

Chicago, Ill. Jan. 18, 1923.

Dear Mr. Griswold:

We are returning the check for $10 you sent us as collection fee on your Geo. Weigle account.

It is true that this was rather a hard account to collect, however, we do not feel that you are under obligation to reimburse us in any way as we were glad to render any service we could. As you are a member of both the State and National Association we feel you were entitled to our best efforts.

You ask that I buy a new hat with the $10.00 but I feel sure I wouldn't know how to act in a $10.00 hat. However, if we were to get many such flattering letters in appreciation of our services the writer might have need for a larger hat eventually.

We are satisfied to know that our efforts in your behalf were appreciated.

Sincerely yours,
D. H. Rose.

Jackson, Mich. January 22, 1923.

My Dear Mr. Rose:

In my absence the remittance covering the balance of the Johnson (Jacobson) account arrived. At least it only lacks a few cents and we will forget it.

Any amount he has paid you since he should be willing to leave with you for your trouble. However, we wish to assure you that we stand ready to pay you whatever is satisfactory to you for your clerical work in handling this account. The locating of this party and the wonderful service you have given us is something that can not be paid for with money and should we ever be able to assist you in any such way we assure you that every effort at our command will be exerted.

Again thanking you and with kindest personal regards to Mr. Harbison, we are

Yours truly,
Michigan Mortgage Loan Association,
E. I. McCuen.

Chicago, Ill. January 26, 1923.

Dear Mr. McCuen:

It of course pleases us to know that our efforts in the collection of your Jacobson account met with your approval and support.

It is a duty we owe one another as State and National Association members to render such service for each other to the best of our ability, however, when our efforts meet with both approval and appreciation it is not only a duty but a pleasure to render any service possible.

This service of itself to an owner of one or two local offices should be worth a good part of both State and National Association dues.

It is hardly likely that we will have occasion to call on you for a similar service but if it will be possible for you to render such service to some fellow member or if our efforts will help to enlist your continued support of the State and National Association in their work, we will feel amply repaid.

If you have occasion to ask our help again, we will be glad to do our very best for you.

Sincerely,
Chicago Mortgage Loan Co.

YEAR BOOKS AT A PREMIUM.

To cover the cost of printing and mailing a charge of a dollar has been made for our Year Book which has been published annually since 1917.

The demand for the 1922 book has been strong and the supply is daily diminishing. Any readers who want a copy will have to write the national secretary promptly. We now have on order a copy of our 1919 Year Book for which the customer will pay two dollars. Here's a chance to make a hundred per cent without "license bond or supervision." The book must be intact and in a good state of preservation. Write the National Secretary if you have a copy of the 1919 Year Book that you will part with. Thanks.

Checks for dues have been coming in nicely during the past month and to date about two-thirds of the members of the National body have remitted. It is hoped the remaining members will respond promptly as your officers have other things to do beside writing collection letters.

LEGISLATION

During the past month there has been considerable activity in the State Legislatures, about two-thirds of which are holding sessions this year. Legislation touching upon the small loan business has come in for its share of attention. According to reports, Russell Sage Foundation uniform small loan bill has been introduced in the states of Rhode Island, New York, North Carolina, South Carolina, Tennessee, West Virginia, Minnesota, Missouri, Montana and Washington. Wherever the bill is pending we are advised that it is receiving the hearty support of public welfare and labor organizations, together with many prominent citizens who desire to improve small loan conditions in the states which lack adequate legislation on this subject. The opposition, as years of experience has taught us, comes principally from the uninformed and the high rate lenders, who prefer to take chances upon illegitimate profits in preference to fair legitimate profits, and the respect and protection for their business which they never can enjoy until their business is properly regulated and supervised.

The most progress seems to have been made by Minnesota whose House of Representatives passed the bill January 24th. Although the margin was only one vote, we are told that many members who favored the bill were absent when the roll call was taken.

Apparently for the sake of notoriety, many legislators have introduced bills in the states where satisfactory small loan legislation exists, which are reduced rate measures. In New Hampshire a bill purporting to reduce the rate from 3% and fees per month to 1% a month has been offered but we are informed there is little chance of its ever getting out of committee because in the public hearing which was recently held it was shown that if enacted into law, this measure would drive all the legitimate small loan agencies out of the state and the people who are served would either be denied the service or be compelled to pay exorbitant rates to loan sharks who would take chances of evading the law.

A bill purporting to reduce the rate from 3% to 2% a month was introduced in the Massachusetts Legislature. According to our latest advice, the sponsor of the bill will not press its passage.

To be fashionable, Representative Loprete has introduced a cut rate measure in the New Jersey Assembly, purporting to reduce the rate from three to one and one-half per cent per month.

Ohio has a similar measure but we understand the bill has not progressed since its introduction.

As stated elsewhere, a bill purporting to reduce the Indiana rate from 3½% a month to 2% per month was promptly killed two days after it was introduced, at a public hearing at which appeared some prominent Indianapolis citizens.

Reports from Iowa are conflicting, some of which indicate that a reduced rate bill has been introduced in that state, and another bill repealing the uniform small loan law of Iowa. If these reports are true, we have every reason to believe that when a public hearing is held on these measures, that the Iowa legislators who are responsible for these measures will change their minds if they desire to be fair to the masses in their state who find industrial loan service under proper conditions which now exist, necessary.

Pennsylvania has a bill before it, sponsored by the imitation Morris Plan companies, many of which have been promoted in this state, supplementing the small loan law, which if it becomes a law will permit licensees so inclined, to make a flat interest charge and divide the interest into equal weekly or monthly instalments so long as it does not exceed the maximum interest rate of 3½% per month permitted under existing statute.

The 1½% measure introduced in the Conneticut Legislature, according to last reports, still rested peacefully in committee.

Apparently there is a national movement on foot to add the cerdit union and coöperative bank facilities to existing financial agencies, as bills of this character have been introduced in many states during the past month. No progress is noted in any of these measures, and we hear that the banks and building and loan associations are opposing these measures on the ground that they are not needed.

CONNECTICUT.

The annual meeting of the Connecticut Association was held at the Hotel Garde, New Haven, Wednesday, January 17th.

Those in attendance were as follows: H. P. Stephenson, A. S. Edwards, Alan K. Dolliver, E. P. East, George Hodson, F. W. Hawkinson, T. C. O'Brien, E. R. Bitting, A. Berman, W. O. Kendall, H. G. McMullin, L. Scarpa, W. A. Burchard, Edmund J. O'Brien, Ralph Bitting.

After luncheon the meeting was called to order at 2:30 by Chairman T. C. O'Brien.

Brief and timely remarks were made by Edgar P. East, George Hodson and Aaron Berman.

The following report of the Secretary was approved as read.

During the year the Association held five meetings as follows: January 11th Hartford, February 8th Waterbury, April 12th Bridgeport, June 21st New Haven, October 18th Hartford.

The report of the Treasurer showed a balance of $387.50 on hand with all bills paid.

The Committee on Membership reported the application of the Beneficial Loan Society, New London, Conn. which was approved by the Executive Committee.

The resignation of Mr. Bumsted of the Publicity Committee was accepted.

The election of officers, being in order, it was moved and seconded that Section 2 of the by-laws be suspended, and a nominating committee of three be appointed, they, to report in fifteen minutes. Those appointed to the Committee were: F. W. Hawkinson, E. P. East, A. Berman. Those nominated were as follows:

The newly elected Chairman, Mr. Dolliver, took the chair, and made the following appointments:

Auditing—H. G. McMullin, Membership—T. C. O'Brien, Publicity—L. Devine.

A rising vote of thanks was given the retiring officers.

It was moved and seconded that all checks be signed by the Treasurer, and countersigned by the Secretary.

That the Treasurer open an account with the Phoenix National Bank in Hartford, and that a copy of these resolutions be placed with the bank.

The Association went on record as follows:

1. Favoring Louisville, Ky. as the place for the next National Convention.

2. Recommending that the time of the Convention be the latter part of September.

3. That half of the Convention expenses be paid by the National Association, and the other half pro-rata among the members. The total cost not to exceed $3000.

The Secretary was instructed to send a copy of this to the National Secretary, and each member of the Executive Committee.

The following papers were read and proved very interesting:

"How to Handle Collections."—E. R. Bitting.

"Handling the Skip."—Louis Scarpa.

"How Can We Improve Ourselves to Give More Efficient Service."—W. O. Kendall.

Some of the papers read at this meeting will be published in future issues of the NEWS.

LICENSE REVOKED

The Maryland Bank Commissioner has revoked the license of Harry Bennett who operates under the name of the Aisquith Credit Co., and refused to grant a new license to a man to whom he sold the business.

Bennett's plan was to split up loans into five dollar amounts. In other words instead of making a twenty dollar loan he would make four loans of $5.00 each and charge a notary fee of 75 cents on each loan.

When the purchaser of his business applied for a license he was told by the banking department to join the Maryland Industrial Lenders Ass'n, and get an O. K. on his business methods and then apply for his license.

This is a step along the right lines and the banking department is to be congratulated upon the action taken.

JERSEY BANK HEAD DIES IN WESTFIELD.

ALSO WAS CANDIDATE FOR GOVERNOR UNTIL ILLNESS FORCED HIM FROM RACE.

TRENTON, N. J. February 11. 1923.

Commissioner of Banking and Insurance William E. Tuttle, Jr., of Westfield, died to-day at his home there from malignant endo carditis, from which he suffered since last September. He was taken ill while a candidate for the Democratic nomination for Governor last fall.

The deceased was one of the foremost public men in the State, being a man of ability and administrative capacity. His candidacy against Governor Silzer caused a division in the party organization and after being stricken ill, withdrew from the race. He later took up the reins for Governor Silzer.

Specialists were called in his case and it became necessary for a transfusion of blood. This proved of little assistance.

Commissioner Tuttle was 53 years old. He was born at Horsehead, N. Y., in 1870, and was educated at the Elmira Free Academy and Cornell University. In 1897 he started a lumber business with his brother, Arthur D., at Westfield.

PROMINENT IN CONGRESS.

He was active in Union county politics and was chairman of the Union County Democratic Committee. He was elected to Congress in 1910, re-elected in 1912 and was defeated in 1914 and 1916. While in Congress he had a law passed fixing the compensation to railroads for the carrying of mail. He was regarded as being one of the soundest business men in Congress.

Commissioner Tuttle was a delegate to the Democratic National Convention in 1908 and 1916. He was appointed by President Wilson in 1915 as the sole commissioner of the United States to the National Exposition of Panama. For his services in Panama he was warmly praised by the President of the Panama Republic and Secretary of State Robert Lansing. The relations between the United States and Panama were strained at the time and he performed a delicate task with honor.

Governor Edge named Commissioner Tuttle to the Board of Conservation and Development in 1918, and on January 17, 1921, he was named Commissioner of Banking and Insurance by Governor Edwards.

Commissioner Tuttle, who was unmarried, is survived by a brother, Arthur D., of Westfield, and a sister, Mrs. T. H. Judson, of Elmira, N. J. Funeral services will take place from the home tomorrow evening and interment will be at Horeheads, N. Y., Wednesday morning.

Just about a year ago Commissioner Tuttle delivered an address to our New Jersey members which was published in this paper. The small loan business has lost a good friend and able official.

By W. G. CHANDLER

Business men are realizing that no one man can know it all; that every man can make a profitable exchange by giving his knowledge and experience for that of others. For while he gives the knowledge of one man, and without taking anything away from himself, he receives in return the ideas and information of many. The business principle, "that exchange is the best which gives both parties the largest possible profit" has been found as successful in the exchange of knowledge as of commodities.

The handling of the chattel loan business has undergone a radical change in the past few years. The work is now being done under modern methods, with greater intelligence and a better knowledge of conditions. The dispensing of credit to the borrower is being reduced, if not to a science, at least to a study on scientific lines. The loss from bad debts, has, I believe, been considerably reduced. This statement to an outsider might be reason for his believing that we have curtailed the business, and we have as far as the big deals are concerned, but extending credit to the small and more desirable borrower is on the increase.

The average loan concern conducts its business through people who do the work incidently and without giving it much attention and study. This, from the standpoint of immediate profit in dollars and cents may be all right, but it is having a bad effect on the business as a whole, for the public at large do not approve of such methods adopted and we all suffer for the sins of those who conduct themselves in this way.

It is apparent that this condition of affairs must not be allowed to continue. The new order of things is to improve, to raise the standard of the business, and it is the intention that this Association is to be an important factor in bringing this change about, and that you, as a member, shall do your share. To-day we must turn our capital oftener than was the case several years ago, when the extension plan of loaning money was popular, and this condition of affairs calls for a change of method and a better understanding of conditions governing the business. Getting back to my statement that the present day loan man's work is done on a more scientific basis, I do not mean to leave you under the impression that the matter of making loans has been reduced to a strict science, or that individual cases are governed by infallible rules. This is impossible, but we can, and to a certain extent do, keep an average. A large part of this improvement in the past few years is due to the improved facilities for carrying on the work.

The position of manager is one of responsibility, and a certain dignity is becoming in every one who holds such a position. The worth of a manager is demonstrated in the judgment he uses in accepting business.

The loan man is the best who will approve the largest percentage of his applications and still keep his percentage of loss down to a fair average. One man might turn down half of the applications he gets, while another would accept 90 per cent of them, and both show the same percentage of loss. It is easy to see that the man who made 90 per cent of his loans would be the better manager of the two.

Aside from being a man who had at least a fair education, a good manager must first be a good collector. This ability gives him the confidence to make a loan that a weak collector will turn down. His judgment must be good. He must be quick to read human nature and to read character, and above all, he should possess strong intuitive faculties. An ounce of intuition is worth a pound of logic when we reckon with human nature and its manifold ramifications for our impressions of men and things seldom proceed from logical deductions.

Speaking of the manager who makes 90 loans out of his 100 applications brings up another question, and that is,—why is it that most of the losses are on accounts that we have "had before." Are we as careful in making renewal loans as we are in making new loans? Apparently not. Present facilities make it hardly excusable for a man to make a new loan that never pays.

Very few new loans find their way directly to the profit and loss account. This is avoided by our care in getting first reports, as against our care in getting reports later on when the customer renews, for conditions change for the worse as well as for the better, and a customer that is not desirable to-day may make a good loan in six months or a year and vice versa. An office boy can tell a real good man, or a real bad one, but these two represent only about two per cent of the 100 which present themselves for our consideration. The other 98 are neither the discreditable or the unquestionably good. This 98 per cent is divided into three distinct classes. Those who are honest and intend to pay, those who are honest and of good intentions, but who overestimate their ability to pay and eventually will fail to pay, those who never intend to pay and are simply trying to obtain money under false colors. The latter class is fortunately small. The great majority of borrowers are of good intentions, and a loan man can make no bigger mistake then to go on the assumption that all people are dishonest dead beats, and that his business is to keep his office from being cheated. This suspicion and pessimistic attitude will hurt his work and the business of the office.

There is no man so proud and sensitive as the "poor but honest" and it is largely with this class of people that we have to deal. Every man must make a living for himself and family, and he realizes that honesty for him is the best policy. All men, with rare exceptions, follow the line of least resistance, therefore, to be honest is the best politic thing a man can do, for it reduces the struggle for support and success to a minimum. But the question arises, how are we to tell the good from the bad? The application has been taken at the window, the outside man has made his investigation, and his report to the manager. With this report and the customer before him the manager must decide almost on the spot, from the information on hand and the impression he gets from his customer, and from the information he gets from his customer, and from the information he can get by direct questioning, whether to make the loan or not. There was a time when it was the habit to ask anything you wanted to, and to dictate terms as suited you best, and when we did not have to consider the sensibilities of the borrowers but those days are gone forever. The desire now is to do things differently, and if no other reason compels it, competition does. Getting back to the direct line of thought, the manager must, of course, secure certain information relative to a customer's stability and circumstances, preliminary to the actual paying over of the money. The greater part of this information can be had by indirect questioning, leading up to unconscious admissions, side remarks and implications. The usual information desired is, the reason the customer is borrowing, the source of his income, from which the payments are to be made, where the main stay of the house works, and the general circumstances of the customer. If we start on our search for this information from an attitude of suspicion, we are bound to antagonize the customer. We must rather appear sympathetic, obliging, etc., as if all were a mere formality and unnecessary for the extension of credit in this particular case. Be pleasant, have the appearance and express a tone of friendliness and an apparent desire to be helpful and accommodating. In short be liberal. A liberal policy is very necessary for the growth and popularity of our business. To be popular is next to being successful. I believe the most successful offices are the most popular and the most popular the most successful. Do not misunderstand me to say that a liberal policy is to be an easy going policy. This would work harm and maybe ultimate ruin to the business. The salvation of a liberal policy is a stringent collection system. With due discrimination, be liberal in making your loan, but have it understood from the first that you expect prompt payment. This gives you a good name for liberality, and among those where it will do you little good the close collection of accounts will do you no harm. We all have our bad accounts. No office is complete without them, and it is with them we work out our salvation. If properly handled when the first payment is overdue, our troubles are less than if the loan is made without the customers having had a proper understanding of what is expected of him. Up to the time the payments become due we have accounts. After the payments become due we have slows. Divided into classes we can say that accounts are,—before maturity and in this stage are no trouble at all. When due they are not bothersome and need little attention but when they become past due, then we often see them with one foot in the P. & L. column. Then is when we begin to lay awake at night and scratch our heads and think. The question in this event is, what kind of a slow have I here? Is this man simply careless of his obligation or is his failure to meet us on time the beginning of a studied attempt to beat us out of the money? We sometimes think that the proper thing to do is to get right after him and hard at that, but policy tells us we cannot afford to lose this customer. People can be trained to pay promptly as they can be encouraged to be dilatory. The longer payment is put off, the heavier the burden becomes and the older an account gets, the harder it is to collect. Delay in meeting one payment often throws the whole lot of those that follow out of gear and makes their collection difficult. The temporarily hardup customer can generally give some reason for his condition, and very often there are very good reasons for his not paying with his usual promptness. Generally these people feel the gravity of the situation, and they are eager to explain to us. In such cases it would be harsh treatment, to say the least, to push a man, when perhaps, the circumstances are beyond his control. When there are extenuating circumstances and we know what these circumstances are, we are forced to the course of forbearance and leniency from any standpoint we may look at the case.

While I have not, up to this, said much of the outside representative, I have not forgotten that his is an all important position and we cannot get along without him. He has had his part to play in all that has been done in the deal up to this time, but when the account becomes a slow, he comes in for his heavy work, and acts as a medium between the customer and the office. He becomes the eyes of the manager in looking over the situation at the house. A good outside representative is an artist. But to be that comprehends a great deal more than is generally supposed or even apprehended by representatives themselves. As a vocation it is capable of being made an important one, and althought it leads, and often rapidly, to a managership, few, in my opinion, take it up to be followed or studied as it should be. Let us ask what the qualifications of a first class representative should be. First of all he must be generally adapted for the business. He must be a good judge of human nature. He must have a strong faculty of intuition. This is a prime requisite, for as I have said before, it is through his discernment that I am enabled to form opinions, or as I say, impressions. It would be absurd for any of us to believe, or disbelieve any statement depends on the impression made on us, and this impression is not a matter of willing or exerting choice. On past due accounts the inventive genius for making excuses and giving reasons is particularly active. Sometimes reasons and promises given are pure fiction and sometimes they are honest enough, but based on too sanguine expectations. Sometimes promises are made with the intention of gaining time for the debtor's own purpose, and again promises are made to be kept. How are we to know? if the representative is not a judge of men he cannot know. No man is in these things infallible of course, but there is a marked difference in this respect in men.

A representative, as well as the manager, should be polite. It does not pay to antagonize the man who is in your debt. You lose his friendship and you may get his ill will. Such a condition of affairs is often only remedied at the end of the year, when you tell the P. & L. story. Be polite, be smooth, but be firm. Keep in mind, last, and all the time what you are after, and bend every effort to get it. Conditions must, however, be considered and leniency must be shown and extensions granted, but this is only a part of the scheme to get what you are after. In short, get the confidence of your customer, for confidence between men is an important factor. Extend the time and coax the customer and when it becomes necessary, in the best interest of other business and do everything in your power to collect rather than begin foreclosure proceedings and my advice, Mr. Manager, is to take up this point first with your employer or superior officer.

INDIANA.

The second managers' convention was held at the Anthony Hotel, Fort Wayne, February 15th. There was a good attendance and a lively discussion on the numerous subjects presented. Joseph Baum acted as chairman of the meeting and introduced the speakers, including Rev. Arthur J. Folsom whose remarks are as follows:

"I was very much pleased a few days ago when our friend, our mutual friend, Mr. Baum, came to see me and asked me to be his guest on this delightful occasion, and I have enjoyed it thus far very much and I am quite sure that all of you have, because I have watched with a good deal of interest the growing friendship and the better acquaintance among you. I was just telling Mr. Baum that I love this sort of occasion, because it draws us so much closer together. We have a feeling when we have gotten through with a banquet of this kind that we know each other better, and I say to you that he and I have been friends for a long time, but from now on we will be better, closer friends, and that is the idea of having a meeting of this kind, around the table.

"There is also another feature. My attention was called a moment ago, by Sam Jackson, to the fact that he had eaten so much that he was afraid he would be just a little loggy this afternoon at his work. That made me think, as I looked at him, that he is healthy and a pretty big chap, and my mind went off to a preacher preaching away up in the Maine mountains. Several weeks ago a banker from Boston went to spend his vacation there, and while there, on a Sunday morning, he concluded he would go to the little church on the hillside and attend service. He went, and there were a few people there, and as he sat there the preacher began to pray, the long prayer as we call it. He opened it up by saying: 'Thank God for all his mercy on us poor worms.' And, as he warmed up, he continued with more of a like nature, and after it was over the banker from Boston said to himself, 'I am going to take that poor man out with me to the hotel and give him a real dinner and see what effect it will have on him. He took the preacher to the hotel and they had a delightful time and he went back that evening to the service with him, and when the preacher got up to open his service he seemed to have a different atmosphere, and when he began the prayer he did not say 'on us poor worms.' He said: 'Oh Lord we thank thee that we are but little lower than the angels.' He had had a beefsteak.

"We are pleased to-day to extend to you a welcome from the cities and counties of the good old state of Indiana, and want you to know that the people of Fort Wayne are just as kindly and cordial and have just that same kind of hospitality for which they are noted, and we want you to feel it to-day, and I wish, therefore, to express, in my humble way, for the City of Fort Wayne our welcome for you. I am not the Mayor of the city, and never expect to be, and I am not even the prosecuting attorney, and never expect to be, but there are those here who are, and, nevertheless, I am speaking for them, since that is my part, to give you a real hearty welcome. Also, I desire to welcome you in the name of the Chamber of Commerce of Fort Wayne, and for the Chamber of Commerce I welcome you to our city. A few years ago a number of us came together and we concluded that the time had come for us to have a real Chamber of Commerce in Allen County, and it was a good deal like when the change came on the farm years ago. I remember when father and I hitched up Maud and George and went to town and put on several hundred pieces of machinery, which when put together made a self-binder. I can remember when we departed from the self-reaper days to the self-binder. So it seemed to us in Fort Wayne that the time had come to depart from the old reaper days of a commercial club and enter into a larger sphere, and it is to-day our Chamber of Commerce, and I ask you to-day, while here, to consider one of the livest organizations in the middle-west; i. e., our Chamber of Commerce. And it is my relations with that institution in the last five or six years, going out to other cities I have come away very happy in the idea of carrying on these conventions on a broad-gauge, liberal, happy basis, nd that is why to-day I wish to extend to you from the Chamber of Commerce a very hearty welcome. And from just our plain citizens, the kind that need the help you can give them. There never was a time in history when man was so dependent upon his fellow-man as to-day. The farmer tells us to-day he is independent, and there is a common expression, often used, that men, at a time in life, become independently rich. Can you imagine? If all he had was a million dollars, he would be the poorest of the poor, if he had none of the other pleasantries that come in modern life. We have the man that makes clothes, and another makes shoes, and another does something else, and we feel the dependence in that sense of the word. There is also another thing going on these days that is a very great blessing to many people. I will say, gentlemen, in the city of Fort Wayne there are thousands who own their own homes and many got their start be-because somebody was in the business of loaning, and they might not have got the start if they had not been able to get the loan. And so to-day there are thousands in our community, as in all communities or all the larger cities at least ,that depend upon somebody else to give them a start, or if they lose everything, as is often the case, and they are at the bottom of the ladder, or in the basement, and they must have a loan, who in the world will help them? There are men in every city who belong to such an institution as you represent and they are willing to give them the new start, the new kick-off in the game of life, and before you think, it is paid off and they go on their way rejoicing, and I say, therefore, gentlemen, I wish to congratulate you upon your ability to serve your fellowmen, and as Mr. Baum said, we have in our relations the spirit of rotary. If you have, I know very well it is all right. I believe thoroughly in the spirit of rotary because it is founded on the basis of service, one to another and always above self, and so I congratulate you upon your stand for service among men. Once more I remind you of man's dependence upon one another. We should fill our hearts with that glorious work, and if that was the rule we should feel the sense of responsibility in the fulfillment of the golden rule, 'Do unto others as you would be done by,' and I wish to say from what I know of your line of work, I should think the golden rule would work there as elsewhere, and I am sure it does, for as you serve your fellowmen and give them their start, the fresh start in life, you are doing something that they will rejoice in all through their lives. So, for the city of Fort Wayne, and the Chamber of Commerce, and for just the ordinary citizens, I wish to welcome you, and for Mr. Baum and the gentlemen of our city, who are a part of your institution, I wish to welcome you to the best city in Allen County.

I always feel a fellow is not exactly right in his mind if he says his city is the best in the world, and yet, after the Plymouth Church has endured me for thirteen years, I am inclined to think it is the best church in Indiana, or it would have kicked me out long ago. However, whether the feeling of welcome is greater east or west, or greater north or south, it can be nowhere greater than in Fort Wayne."

BILL TO CURB LOAN SHARKS PERMITS 3 1-2 PER CENT MONTHLY RATE.

Was Originated by Russel Sage Foundation 13 Years Ago and Is Now in Force in Eleven States, Says Clarence T. Case.

Special Dispatch to the Globe-Democrat

Jefferson City, Mo., February 23.—Proponents of House Bill 391, which was reported favorably out of the House Banks and Banking Committee Thursday, explained it to-day as a measure purported to curb extortionate rates of interest usually charged by loan sharks.

On its surface, the sponsors say, the bill allows a maximum of 42 per cent interest over a period of one year, but the rate seldom reaches its maximum. The interest is applicable by the month at the rate of 3½ per cent.

The bill is the one originated by the Russell Sage Foundation thirteen years ago to curb usurpation of small borrowers, according to Clarence T. Case, St. Louis attorney, who became interested in it here after it was introduced before the State Bar Association at its annual meeting last December.

3 1-2 Per Cent Monthly Rate.

Its 3½ per cent monthly rate is called the scientific rate which was fixed by an investigating body of scientists, who weighed arguments on the side of the lender as well as borrowers, Case explained. It provides for the keeping of numerous small accounts, various investigations and trips necessitated for collections.

It applies to persons who borrow less than $300.

The lender is amendable to the State Commissioner of Finance and is compelled to obtain a license for every loan shop at a fee of $100 each.

The lender is placed under a bond of $1,000, which may be increased at the discretion of the commissioner.

The commissioner is empowered to investigate any violations or reported violations of the law, and may revoke the lender's license if the latter is culpable.

Free Access to Books.

The commissioner has free access to the books and accounts of the money transactions which the lender is compelled to keep.

Every loan must be accompanied by a written statement with date and amount, together with rate of interest, to be given to the borrower.

No charge can be made for investigation into a borrower's standing. This is to be borne by the lender.

The rate of interest may not be compounded monthly, and in the event of suit, the lender cannot garnishee more than 10 per cent of the borrower's wages, in conformity with present laws.

Eleven states have adopted the bill so far, and five others, including Missouri, have it pending before the Legislature. It is on the calendar for engrossment in the House now.

Albert Schweitzer, Prosecuting Attorney of St. Louis, made a talk before the House Banks and Banking Committee when the bill was being considered, and declared the measure would enable him to effect prosecutions, which at present are surrounded with obstacles. He pointed to the clause authorizing the Commissioner of Finance to make a complete investigation of alleged violations.

Loan Sharks Getting 106 to 128 Per cent for Short Time Loans.

Loan sharks of the city of St. Louis are now charging and receiving in violation of state law, rates of interest for small-time loans ranging from 106 to 128 per cent, according to information obtained yesterday. The legal rate of interest in Missouri is 8 per cent.

A reporter of the Globe-Democrat visited the offices of four of the money lenders in the city yesterday and in each place made application for a $50 loan. In the office of the first concern visited, which is in the Liberty Central Trust Building, it was learned that an application, stating among other things, the position now held by the applicant, together with the amount of his salary per month and the length of time he had held the office, had to first be made out and then submitted to an alleged committee which passed or rejected the loan. In receiving the loan the applicant signed a note or agreement pledging himself to pay $12.75 each month or a total of $76.50 within six months for the $50 loan, the interest on which would be 106 per cent.

In the second office, which was in the Railway Exchange Building, the reporter found that he could secure a loan of $50 immediately, requiring neither indorsers nor security, and that in return he would have to pay $11 every two weeks for three months, or a total of $66 for the original loan, the rate of interest being 128 per cent.

In another office in the same building it was found that a similar loan could be made providing the applicant would pledge himself to pay $8.75 every two weeks for four months, or a total of $70, the rate of interest on the $50 note being 120 per cent.

At the fourth office in the Chemical Building it was learned that a loan could be secured, without indorsers or publicity and that the applicant would have to pay $12.75 each month for six months, or a total of $76.50 in all, the interest on the loan being 106 per cent.

By a Staff Correspondent.

Jefferson City, Mo., February 23.—Representative C. M. Edwards of Dunklin County, who introduced the Russell Sage Foundation Bill to curb loan sharks, by restricting the interest rates upon small loans to 3½ per cent a month, and putting money lenders under the supervision of the State Commissioner of Finance, said to-night that he believed such a law will be a great protection to small borrowers who must borrow without security of any sort.

"An interest rate of 42 per cent annually which this bill would permit, looks high, but I was assured by Clarence Case and others sponsoring the measure that the experience of the Russell Sage Foundation has been that a lower rate will not work out," he said.

"The feature of the bill which appealed to me," he continued, "was the provision requiring money lenders to register with the Finance Commissioner, pay a license of $100 a year and give a bond of $1,000 for faithful compliance with the law.

"Another good feature is that when one violates this law, or the contract entered into with the borrower, he not only forfeits the loan, but can be prosecuted.

"Mr. Case and other representatives of the Legal Reform Bureau of New York, presented statistics showing that the average interest rate of money lenders in the United States is in excess of 100 per cent and some run very much higher than that."

St. Louis Globe-Democrat, St. Louis, Saturday morning, Feb. 24, 1923.

PENNSYLVANIA.

The regular meeting of the Pennsylvania Association was held in the Banquet Room of the City Club, 313 South Broad St., Philadelphia, at 2 p. m., Friday, January 26, 1923.

The meeting was called to order by Chairman A. V. Hart.

Thirty-six member representatives were present. Mr. H. D. Holloway, Girard Investment Company, Philadelphia, was a visitor.

Report of Officers.

The treasurer reported on hand January 24, 1923, $2,336.64. On motion of Mr. Moore, seconded by Mr. Lyons this report was accepted.

The secretary reported a membership of 88—56 in good standing as of July 1, 1923; 51 members are likewise members of the American Association in good standing as of February 1, 1923. On motion of Mr. Herron seconded by Mr. Lyons the report was approved.

Report of Committees.

Executive Committee Chairman Webster reported a meeting of his committee on December 1, 1922, to consider the matter of advertising in the "West Philadelphian" as reported by a member being in excess of the space agreed upon by other Philadelphia members. Further, to consider the matter brought to their attention by Pittsburgh lenders that arrests were being made of borrowers whose accounts were in default, etc. Further, it was recommended that Messrs. Hart and Webster visit Pittsburgh immediately. Further, recommendation of the time the next National Convention be held in September, in a middle western city, the cost not to exceed $2,000. At a meeting on December 8th, the size of the advertising of the "West Philadelphian" was again taken up and conclusion reached that this was a circular and not a newspaper therefore did not come within the limitation of advertising The members agreed to have Messrs, Moss, Ezekiel and Webster endeavor to have the Philadelphia members abide by the present limitation advertisng understanding, and to make further report. Further, the matter of Guarantee Loan Company Beneficial Loan Society employment of former employee of the first mentioned was satisfactorily adjusted under Section 16 of the By-laws. Meeting on December 15th it was recommended that Chairman Hart be authorized to secure Press Agent for the Association for 1923 at a cost not to exceed $100. On motion of Mr. Wick, seconded by Mr. Herron this report was received.

Chairman Mueller of the Membership Committee in a brief but interesting manner called the attention of the members to the importance of having their competitive licensees in their community a member of our organization.

Chairman Moore of the Publicity Committee reported having appointed members throughout the state on his committee and that they were now ready to function.

Secretary reported for Legislative Committee Chairman Kehr, that a state wide committee had been appointed and were ready to handle whatever business came into their department. On motion of Dr. Mueller, seconded by Mr. Wick, the chairman was authorized to make such reasonable expenditures from the treasury as the emergency might require.

Unfinished Business.

On motion of Mr. Webster, seconded by Dr. Mueller the Employees Loan Society Harrisburg was reinstated to membership, the secretary authorized to invite even closer coöperation than we have enjoyed heretofore.

On motion of Dr. Mueller, seconded by Mr. Herron the Executive Committee recommended that $2,000 be designated as the limit of expenditure for the National Convention. The American Association $1,000, be paid from the treasury, the balance to be taken care of by those locally interested, and that it be held in a middle western city during September.

New Business.

On motion of Mr. Webster, and seconded by Mr. Lyons, the secretary was authorized to have one thousand booklets of Dr. Robinson's Annual Banquet Speech printed for distribution among the members and otherwise.

Chairman Hart made a report of his trip, accompanied by Mr. Webster, to Pittsburgh, and of his meeting with local lenders there to consider the matter of the arrests of borrowers for non-payment. He complimented the Pittsburgh men on their splendid coöperative spirit, and that the entire matter had been fully adjusted and all were entirely in sympathy with their recommendations that this practice be absolutely discontinued immediately. On motion of Dr. Mueller, seconded by Mr. Dobyns, a vote of thanks was tendered our representatives for their interest and good work.

On motion of Mr. Webster, seconded by Mr. Horn, the Beneficial Loan Society, 414 Peoples Bank Building, McKeesport, Beneficial Loan Society, 52 Center Square, Easton, Beneficial Loan Society, 547 Penn Street, Reading and the Beneficial Loan Society, 1409 Eleventh Avenue, Altoona were elected to membership.

On motion of Dr. Mueller, and seconded by Mr. Lee the chairman was authorized to employ a publicity man for 1923, the cost not to exceed $100.

Following a discussion of the holidays which are recommended for observance to all members, on motion of Dr. Mueller, seconded by Mr. Webster, the following were recommended and referred to the Executive Committee for attention:

New Year's Day, Washington's Birthday, Memorial Day, Independence Day, Labor Day, Armistice Day, Thanksgiving Day, Christmas Day.

J. C. Lewis, manager of the Citizens Loan Company of Norristown, spoke on the subject of "How I Secure Reference in Making a loan to a new customer" as a part of the regular meeting educational program. On motion of Mr. Gatter, seconded by Mr. Lee, Mr. Lewis was thanked for his effort and it was recommended that Mr. Lewis' paper be forwarded to the LENDERS NEWS for publication.

Mr. E. F. Moore, of Philadelphia, spoke on the subject, "Conducting a Small Loan Concern for Colored Borrowers Only." On motion of Mr. Lyon, seconded by Mr. Herron, his recommendations were approved and referred to the Executive Committee who are to present a plan for the carrying out of their views to be submitted to the members.

There being no further business to transact, on motion of Mr. Dobyns, seconded by Mr. Millard, the meeting was adjourned. C. H. WATTS, Secretary.

VIRGINIA.

The business session of the meeting was called to order by Chairman Pope, at 3:30 p.m., in the Banquet Hall at Richmond Hotel.

UNFINISHED BUSINESS.

Chairman Pope reported that a paper on Publicity was being prepared to be submitted to the Executive Committee for approval, but had not been completed yet. Chairman Pope also reported that another paper known as a Financial Statement to be used in making loans had been completed and was being used.

Secretary Garrett reported that this paper had been tested out at Lynchburg, and proved effective in Bankrupt Proceedings. The paper in question caused much discussion and the opinion was that it should be adopted as the uniform paper by members of the Virginia Association.

COMMITTEE REPORTS.

Treasurer Edge reported balance in treasury of $125.62, with all bills paid for the year of 1922.

Secretary Garrett reported twenty-five (25) licensees in the state and only twelve (12) members of the Association in good standing, all dues having been paid for the year 1922.

Mr. Herbert, of Norfolk, introduced Mr. F. C. Cross, president of the Universal Small Loan Corporation of Norfolk, who applied for membership in the State Association. A vote was taken, and this company was unanimously elected to membership.

Secretary Garrett stated that the matter of the plan of the Virginia Association regarding the financing, and also the place to hold the next National Convention should be discussed. Upon vote, it was decided that this be left to the Executive Committee of the State Association, which would report its findings to the National Secretary.

INTERMISSION.

Upon motion by Chairman Pope that the remainder of business be discussed after dinner which was scheduled for 6 p.m., upon vote this was carried and the members met in the Banquet Hall at 6 p.m.

Addresses were made by Mr. Sam Burnly, Mr. G. M. Smith-Deal and Mr. James Tyler, which resulted in turning the session into an open forum for a space of two hours. Debates on subjects of importance to the association were a result.

An excellent paper on coöperation was read by Treasurer Edge. Upon motion by Mr. Larsen that this be published in Pamphlet form for distribution among members of the association, a vote was taken and it was unanimously decided to order the publication of this paper.

Mr. Larsen of Philadelphia gave an excellent talk on Clearing Houses for members of the association, and explained how this was operated in Baltimore, which resulted in the promised support of all members present to adopt such a Clearing House in their respective cities.

The chairman announced that it was time to complete the business session and to elect officers for the ensuing year. The following were elected as officers:

L. E. Pope, chairman; H. Thompson, vice-chairman; F. Bray, secretary; F. C. Cross, treasurer.

EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE.

J. S. Edge, chairman; W. F. Bradshaw, F. T. Strand, L. E. Pope, F. Bray, T. P. Thompson.

LEGISLATIVE COMMITTEE.

Messrs. Mattingly, Moss and Cross.

PUBLICITY COMMITTEE.

Messrs. Edge, Bradshaw, Heflin, Strand and Herbert.

MEMBERSHIP COMMITTEE.

Messrs. McMurtie, Thompson, Heflin, Price and Garrett.

Next meeting will be held in Norfolk, April 12th. Time and place to be announced later by the Entertainment Committee, Messrs. Heflin, Bradshaw and Cross.

A rising vote of thanks was tendered to Messrs. Smith-Deal, Burnly and Tyler for their excellent addresses and suggestions. We hope to have them with us at our next meeting in Norfolk, Va.

MARYLAND.

The February meeting of the Maryland Association was held in the Board Room of the Merchants and Manufacturers Association Building, Baltimore on Tuesday evening February 13th, at 8 o'clock.

In the absence of the chairman and vice-chairman, Mr. J. D. Goldrick being called upon served in this capacity.

The minutes show that there were present: Lewis F. Eckhardt, Roy T. Baseman and F. L. Brush of the Peoples Loan Society; Lee H. Pumphrey and Lewis Niemeyer, Commercial Guarantee Co.; Joseph J. Wood, J. E. Turner and Herman Lappe, Community Finance Service; J. Beal Helm, G. W. Stancill, Jr. and H. C. Moore, Chesapeake Loan Co.; C. A. Gardner, United Finance and Security Corporation; F. M. Ebert, C. R. Hathaway and W. F. Oliver, Jr., Household Loan Co.; H. T. Mattingly, Surety Guarantee Co.; R. L. Smith, Reliance Guarantee Co.; C. S. Thompson, N. W. Ferri and W. M. Keller, Beneficial Loan Society and J. D. Goldrick, Union Loan Co.

REPORT OF OFFICERS.

There being no message from the chairman, Mr. Oliver who has been assisting the Executive Committee in obtaining data on the companies who are operating under the pretext of buying salaries, gave a complete detailed report as to what had been accomplished to date in this connection. It is hoped by next meeting that the Executive Committee will have in their possession papers and information that will be the means of rectifying the above condition. Great progress has been made to date.

Treasurer Goldrick reported $371.29 on hand with all bills paid.

Upon motion being made by Mr. Wood, seconded by Mr. Oliver, this report was accepted.

The secretary in making his report, thanked each member for their promptness in remitting dues covering our State and National Body. All dues are paid to date with the exception of one State and two National.

REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE.

Mr. Mattingly, chairman of the Program Committee, reports that we have secured Mr. Roy T. Baseman to prepare a paper to be read at this meeting entitled, "How I Handle an Application in the Home."

February 12, 1923.

To the Chairman,
Maryland Industrial Lenders Association, Baltimore, Md.

Dear Sir:

It is not my intention to be present at the February meeting of the association to be held February 13th and this office will not be represented.

The following report with reference to the Merchants and Manufacturers Association Activities is submitted.

The advertisement in the Baltimore Magazine has been changed and the new copy will appear in the March number.

Efforts to have our association take advertising space in the classified business directory published by the M. and M. Association, has been made, but I am not prepared to recommend it at this time.

On February 8th, I attended the annual banquet of the M. and M. Association. It was an exceptionally attractive banquet. Our membership seems to have taken little interest in this annual banquet, and I take this occasion to recommend it most highly and to suggest that in the future we record a much larger attendance than in the past. It is a splendid opportunity to contact the business men of Baltimore.

Respectfully submitted,
E. E. Hougham.

There being no membership committee, the chairman appointed J. J. Wood and W. F. Oliver, Jr., as members of this committee. They were instructed to contact C. Harry King, manager of Credit Service Incorporation and obtain his permission to submit his name for membership at our next meeting.

There being no report of special committee, no unfinished business, the secretary being called upon read a communication from Mr. E. R. Kline of Pittsburgh, advising our body that he had transferred his interests in Hagerstown, Md., to the Community Finance Service Incorporated also requested that we change the membership accordingly. This being acted upon favorably, the chairman ordered the secretary to make the necessary changes.

Mr. Roy T. Baseman being called upon read the following paper:

I first want to impress upon you that there are good and bad people in every class and locality. In approaching an individual a man can best serve his firm by observing the following rules:

First:—That no person should be discredited until proven untrustworthy.

Second:—All petty arguments and controversies should be avoided as far as possible.

Third:—Explanations should be brief and to the point and always based on convincing facts.

I shall endeavor to tell you how the writer goes through the regular application at the home.

Upon arriving at the home, I ring the bell and upon receiving an answer, I say "Pardon me, what is the name of the people living here?" She will answer "Smith." I will say "John Smith?" "Yes."

Well, Mrs. Smith I am from the Loan Office. I look at her in case she will say, "What Loan Office." Perhaps she may have another loan elswhere. I take notice if guilt is written on her face. She invites me in. At this point I try to find something to admire, if there are children, I remark, "how pretty they are," regardless how they look to me.

My first question is "Mrs. Smith when would it be convenient for you and Mr. Smith to call at our office for the loan." If you can make the applicant picture herself receiving the money, the balance of your questions will be answered without any difficulty.

I then check over the application with the wife, and compare statements and note the difference in the two stories. I then ask permission to list the furniture, the chances are she will say "I think there is enough furniture in this one room to cover the loan." My answer. "I grant you that Mrs. Smith, but my firm requires a complete list of the furniture, in view of the fact that at some future date you may desire a loan of $300.00 as many of our clients do, and we will not have to put you to the trouble of taking a list again."

After listing the contents of the house I ask to see the rent or B. and L. Book. Question, "Such red tape. I thought the loan was to be made on the furniture?" Answer, "That is true Mrs. Smith, but it is merely to verify that you are Mrs. Smith, you must see that it is the best way the company has of verifying that fact." For example, Mrs. Smith if I were to come to you and you never having seen or heard of me before and asked you to loan me $100. Would you do it?"

That is practically the same thing you are asking this company as we require no signature other than your husband's. When it comes down to final facts Mrs. Smith, the company does not consider your furniture for the loan it is a question of your honesty and character.

I next ask to see the furniture receipts she may have; explaining to her if she happens to be buying on installment it will make no difference in her standing with our company in obtaining the loan. I note very carefully if the receipts are for the same furniture which I have listed. After explaining our Money-To-Loan Service, and our very reasonable rates, and assuring her she will find pleasant conditions at our office, I bid her a pleasant good-day.

Men always remember we are the channel through which the Good Ship Money Borrowers sails. His destination is our firm's cash drawer. Let us welcome the good ships and keep out the undesirable ones by giving our manager a thoroughly intelligent report on all applications. Roy T. Baseman.

Mr. Baseman was complimented by several members upon his thoroughness in looking up an application. The chairman consulted most every outside man present as to his views on the above paper. Much food for thought was gained by us all.

Mr. Mattingly presented the following questions for general discussion:

First. If an applicant asks for a loan of one hundred dollars on furniture, and it is ascertained that he owes a balance on certain articles of one hundred dollars, and a balance of one hundred dollars on a piano to another concern, is it best to advise the applicant to take a loan of three hundred dollars and pay off the two installment houses, which would consolidate the indebtedness or make the loan of one hundred dollars as applied for?

Second. Is it advisable at any time or under any circumstances to advise a customer that no interest will be charged on their account if so when? and if not, why?

Third. Is a three hundred loan desirable?

Fourth. What average size loan is preferred?

Several different opinions were expressed in reply to question number one. The majority of the members being in favor of pooling the borrower's obligation.

Lengthy explanations from the managers covering question number two, presenting actual transactions as occurred in their offices. All members agreed when circumstances and conditions made it advisable to accept principal only, it was wise to do so.

It was the consensus of opinion among most all present that a $300.00 loan was desirable, providing the company was selling service, pooling the borrower's obligations, giving him a long term to repay at a small monthly payment, thereby relieving the client from worry of several obligations. This encourages promptness and thrift with the average individual.

Loans ranging from $40.00 to $125.00 are the deals preferred by most brokers present. If the monthly payment on principal is over $6.00, $7.00, or $8.00 it is often hard for the average borrower to meet. Long drawn contracts are frowned upon, as frequently a borrower loses interest before the loan is half paid back. From eight to sixteen months should be ample time for the average loan to run.

The remainder of the evening was turned over to the outside men, who discussed in detail their method of approach in looking up a new application, their experiences in taking a recheck, their method of obtaining an audience with a delinquent at the residence, etc.

There being no further business, upon motion by Mr. Oliver, seconded by Mr. Ebert, the meeting adjourned until Tuesday evening at 8 o'clock March 13th.

H. C. Moore, Secretary.

London, January 20, 1923.

Stuart H. Benton, Esq.,
25 Church Street, New York.

Sir:

I have to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 30th ultimo addressed to the Board of Trade, and to inform you that the registration of Money Lenders in England and Scotland is under the control of the Commissioners of Inland Revenue. The official for Scotland is the Comptroller of Stamps, Inland Revenue, Edinburgh. In regard to Ireland, you should communicate with the Ministry of Commerce for Northern Ireland at Belfast, and with the Comptroller of Stamps at Dublin.

I am sorry that I cannot advise you of the names of the principal libraries in England, but most of the important cities and towns have libraries. I might add that the booklets referred to have not reached this office.

At the end of the last month, 21,899 registrations of Money Lenders had been effected in England at this office, but there is no means of knowing how many of them have ceased to carry on that business.

I am, Sir, your obedient servant,
A. E. Campbell-Taylor,
Deputy Controller of Stamps.

Peoria, Ill., February 17, 1923.

Dear Mr. Kehr:

I am enclosing to you a letter written by our state's attorney, to the secretary of the Peoria Merchant's Association.

This letter was read to a meeting of the Credit Grantors Association of which I am president, and the letter received such favorable comment and both daily newspapers gave it such prominent space, that I thought perhaps it would make good reading for the Lenders News.

I secured the permission of Mr. Galbraith, the author, and he said O. K. and desired to see a copy of the Lenders News. Yours very truly,

A. E. Paris,
Manager Central Loan Company.

Ernest J. Galbraith,
States Attorney,
Peoria County.

Peoria, Ill., Feb. 17, 1923.

Mr. H. F. Sehmer,
Secretary Peoria Merchants' Association, Peoria, Ill.

My Dear Sir:

Your Merchant's Association is vitally interested in the enforcement of the criminal law. You have been interested as secretary of that association in prosecuting a number of shoplifters, forgers and confidence game cases, in which the merchants were defrauded by crooks. It has occurred to me that some figures with reference to the number of jurors called and the way in which business men have themselves excused from the jury might be of interest.

I have had the jury list checked over and find that since the January Term, 1921, 754 men were served by the sheriff for jury service in the criminal court, that of these 41.6 per cent or 313 jurors were excused by the court that of this 313 excused 227 or 72.5 per cent of the total excused came from the city of Peoria. These figures are very striking.

We are unable to determine by inspection of the jury list how many of these excused jurors, residents of the city of Peoria, were members of your association. We know however, that quite a number of them were members, and that the very large percentage of the excused city jurors were business men of the city of Peoria or influential citizens.

If you could present these figures to your members in the usual way by bulletin or otherwise, we believe that your members would at least realize the importance of jury service and what a reflection it is upon your membership and upon the business life of Peoria to have so large a percentage of business men evading jury service. In fact it seems to me that when the merchants are so liable to become the victims of crooks, and as you know make constant demands upon us for the prosecution of these cases, that they should carry their interests a little further and be willing to perform the service of passing upon the guilt or innocence of crooks preying upon the community, themselves as well.

The proper administration of the criminal law demands that business men shall serve as jurors and actively participate in the enforcement of the law, otherwise the criminal law enforcement is likely to fall down, and I bring this appeal directly to you as a representative of these influential business interests who can help to make the administration of the criminal law in this community more effective than it has been in the past.

Thanking you for your attention to this matter, I am

Yours truly,
(Signed) E. J. Galbraith.

CONVENTION FEATURES.

E. G. Jones, City Passenger Agent of the Louisville and Nashville Railroad Company advised our local Chairman Chas. E. Reed about one of the interesting features of the next National Convention under date of February 12th as follows:

"Confirming my conversation in your office this morning.

"It will be my pleasure to arrange for the operation of a special train to Mammoth Cave for the accommodation of the officers, delegates and the ladies who will attend the above convention in this city, September 19th-22d, on any date you or your National Secretary select.

"We can name a very low rate of $8.50 per person for the day's outing, this rate to include round trip railroad transportation, Louisville to Mammoth Cave, two meals at the Mammoth Cave Hotel and the choice of the Echo River or the Martha Washington-Star Chamber route in the Cave. This special train will require a minimum of one hundred and twenty-five paid fares and can be operated leaving Union Station, Tenth and Broadway, this city, say 7:30 a. m., arriving Mammoth Cave 10:30 a. m., have dinner at the Hotel, the choice of either of the above routes in the Cave, supper at the Hotel, leaving there at either 5:20 or 5:30 p. m. on a special reaching Union Station, Louisville at 8:20 p. m. or 8:30 p. m.

"This will be an excellent opportunity for the delegates to visit one of the World's wonders at a very low expense and on their own special and have the advantage of being able to make the trip in a day and return to Louisville in time for connections to the East, North and West and any delegates enroute to the South, such as Nashville, Birmingham, or Memphis, can leave the special train at Glasgow Junction and take our through train from that point.

"The rate is also named on a basis of one hundred and twenty-five which is a very nominal cost and to compare it with an individual trip the railroad fare alone is $7.91 for the round trip not to figure on the meals and Cave trip.

"I am attaching copy of a circular which our Company will have printed for distribution among the delegats on their arrival at the convention, but will be glad, in the event you decide to make the trip, if you will give us whatever advance announcement of the trip in your preliminary advertising and program of the convention.

"Assuring you of my desire to work closely with you in an effort to make the convention a thorough success and thanking you for your interest in this matter, I am etc.

RHODE ISLAND.

The regular meeting of the Rhode Island Industrial Lenders Association was held at the Biltmore Hotel, Providence, Wednesday, February 7th.

Through the kindness of A. L. Wick of Phildaelphia, a copy of all printed forms used in Pennsylvania was shown the members. It was explained it would be of great benefit if the printed matter was standarized and had all the work done by one printer either locally or out of town. The members appreciated the various suggestions offered and were in favor of centralizing all printing.

The exchange system as established in various cities came up for a good deal of discussion and its practicability was ably demonstrated by Mr. Wick, who had papers outlining the manner in which the bureaus in different cities have successfully used it.

The Association as a whole appreciates the advantage it has over many of the associations in other states in not having to pass through the trials of the exchange bureau as first started and that it could enjoy the privileges of having it come to us as near a finished product as possible. Hopes of having the Bureau in operation within a few months were heartily voiced by the members.

It was moved and seconded that new certificates for the Association be printed.

Mr. Wickstrom and Mr. Wood were appointed as a committee of arrangements in preparation for the yearly banquet of the Association.

In addition to the regular business of the association, consideration was taken of the tentative draft of the Uniform Small Loan Law, which is proposed for enactment at this session of the Legislature. The association invited and advocated this legislation as it was decided that its provision was along constructive lines and voted unanimously for its enactment.

J. W. Wickstrom, Secretary.

ANDREWS PRESENTS LOAN SHARK MEASURE.

State House, Providence, Feb. 23d.—The bill known as the Russell Sage Foundation uniform small loan bill was introduced in the House to-day by Representative Harold B. Andrews of Cranston, the majority leader. While conforming in all essential particulars to the Sage Foundation law now effective in some twenty states, this bill was drafted with a view to adapt it to the needs and conditions particular to Rhode Island.

Its object is to abolish excessive interest rates on small loans, that is loans up to $300.00 for which no collateral is offered as security. In those states, which include Maine, New Hampshire, Massachusetts and Connecticut, where it has been in force for several years, it is said to have proved a remedy for the loan shark evil.

In this state, as in the others where similar legislation has been adopted or is being advocated, it has had the support of sociological students, financiers, economists and civic and religious leaders generally.

The bill has been indorsed by the following civic and commercial organizations in this state: Society for Organizing Charity, Kiwanis Club, Salvation Army, No. 1, Corps of Providence, Methodist Episcopal Ministers' Associations of Rhode Island, Y. M. C. A. of Providence, and New England Association of Ice Cream Manufacturers.

In addition to these indorsements it has the personal support of Bishop William A. Hickey of the Providence diocese of the Roman Catholic Church; Bishop James De Wolf Perry, Jr., of the Episcopal Diocese of Rhode Island. Rabbi Samuel M. Gup, pastor of Congregation Sons of Israel and David; Mayor Joseph H. Gainer, of Providence; Dr. R. D. Hollington, pastor of Mathewson Street M. E. Church; Dr. Edward Holyoke, pastor of Calvary Baptist Church, Providence and Henry F. Burt, Secretary of the Providence Society for Organizing Charity.

The sailent features of the bill are the licensing of money lenders by the bank commissioners, the license fee being $100 a year; the bonding to the state of lenders, inspection of lenders books and records at any time by the bank commissioner; limitation of loans not to exceed $300 at any one time to the same borrower and the fixing of a maximum rate of interest at 3½ per cent a month on unpaid balances of the loan.

No other charge of any nature whatsoever may be charged on the loan, all fees, commissions, investigation charges and the like, being absorbed in the maximum interest rate fixed by the law. This rate was determined on by acturial calculation as the minimum under which a lender could operate at a fair profit after a nation-wide survey of the hazards of the business by the students of sociology.

According to reports, the last month has seen some progress and some reverses in the numerous State Legislatures which are now in session. Friends of the movement to improve small loan conditions in this country are back of the Uniform Small Loan Bill which is now pending in Rhode Island, New York, Tennessee and Missouri. The bills appear to be favorably considered by the committees to which they have been referred and we are hopeful that as the weeks roll by that the legislative map with respect to small loan legislation will show an advance at the conclusion of the 1923 sessions.

Reverses have been met in Minnesota, where the bill passed the House but was defeated in the Senate. North and South Carolina after reporting the bill out favorably, killed it on the floor. These set-backs are best explained by the lack of education and inclination which is so essential to a thorough understanding of the small loan problem.

The reduced rate measures pending in New Hampshire, Massachusetts, Connecticut, New Jersey, Ohio, Indiana, Illinois and Iowa seem to be doomed to die in committee because their passage would mean the elimination of respectable institutions which are now rendering a necessary service to a large mass of the American people at a rate that permits only a fair profit to the investor.

Bills in Montana and Washington seem to have received favorable consideration but it is believed that the time of the session is not sufficiently long in those states to permit the passage of the Uniform Bill this year.

From all indications, West Virginia should become a legal state within a short time as the support given the Uniform Bill in that state has been general and by the best people and organizations known for their disinterested motives.

The demand for the Uniform Law in Florida seems to be growing day by day and it is probable that the Uniform Small Loan Bill will be introduced in that state when its Legislature meets within a short time. The only definite report we have of Credit Union legislation is from the Indiana Legislature which adjourned March 5th and on the last day passed an amended bill on this subject. The bankers and building and loan association people of this state appeared to think that many of the functions provided for in the bill were now being performed by their institutions so that they led the opposition to this legislation. Similar bills are pending elsewhere in committees, but none have yet become laws, according to our reports.

By Leonard Devine.

The question of educating the public is one of the most important ones facing every loan manager and in fact every one connected with the loan business, at the present time. It is a question in which we are all vitally concerned, and each of us must bend his energies and thoughts toward a betterment of the present condition. Of course we realize that the problem will be brought about by a fusion of the best ideas of each member of organization like ours. This little discourse will not by any means end our troubles but it may serve as a start toward a concerted effort to improve a situation which has plenty of room for improvement.

"Educating the Public to Pay Promptly," is one of life's little problems which must be solved some day, if we are to progress. Like all other evolutions it will be very gradual and since the small loan business as a legitimate installment enterprise is comparatively new, there is no doubt it will take a little while yet before the whole of the public will realize that a loan contract is not like a ordinary bill and must be paid on the date due. However, hard as it may seem don't let us say, "it can't be done." Merely telling the client that his installment is due on the tenth will not, in most cases, do the trick. We have got to show him a definite and positive reason. There are two themes which we can play up in this line.

One is easily disposed of. We all understand how to handle the case of the man whose account is in such a condition that we have to renew it for the balance to get it out of delinquency and with whom we don't care to deal any further.

On the other hand, with a man who is essentially honest, although a bit slow, and whose regard we don't wish to alienate, we will probably find it efficacious to stress the advantages of paying promptly, rather than the disadvantage of not paying promptly. By this I mean, convey the impression to him in a diplomatic way, that he may wish to avail himself of our services at some future time. If such a necessity should occur, it would be a great satisfaction to him to know that there is one place at least, where he can obtain ready cash just by signing his name. Even should this necessity arise, it will be a source of satisfaction to him to feel in his heart that if sudden reverses should occur, he will always have the Society to fall back on.

You have no doubt found, that most people when getting a loan, particularly their first loan, have the idea that they will never need another. Their's is a perfectly honorable ambition, to be free of debt once more and on the road to prosperity, with a few dollars laid aside for a rainy day. Nevertheless, your loan pockets will tell the tale: that true to the old saying, "they all come back." To such a man, our hint that he may need another loan, might fall on deaf ears, but to instill in him the feeling that he should be proud of his banking connections with the Society, to feel that he is above the average wage earner, will tend to create in him the desire to attain, and deserve this standing.

And after all, isn't this the easiest way? Doesn't it seem that by far the better way is to furnish him with the idea and let him furnish his own motive power? To me it does, in every case where I believe the man has intelligence enough to realize that credit with an institution like the Society is a very handy thing to a man who has no bank account. The best time to educate a client is during the period of his first loan and an apt quotation is: "Train up a child in the way he should go and when he is old, he will not depart from it." If a new loan is put on the books, and the slow card filed with the rest, and when the delinquent he is sent a first notice, and then a threat to put his account in the hands of an attorney, and finally an attorney letter, he will eventually get hardened to these things, and if he does, he will be very much harder to train. A good system I have been using is to look in the slow file every day for new loans due the day before, who have not paid. Generally there are none, if the loan was properly closed.

If there should be one or two, I get in instant communication with him either by telephone or by having the investigator call on him and have him come to the office to see me personally. I make a note on the ledger card so that if the cashier should take the payment, she will call my attention to the acount and I will then have a personal talk with the client. Then, if ever, is the chance to educate him. Make believe you have a personal recollection of him and of your understanding with him that his payments were to be made on the 10th, and no later. This is bound to make an impression on him and make him feel that you are watching his account at all times, and will help him to remember it on the 10th of next month. This is the foundation of his education and should he ever go delinquent again, a first notice would have many times the effect it would have had if you had neglected to give it that few minutes of personal attention. You will then have a client who will give you very little trouble, and who will at the same time, respect you for your insistence on his living up to his contract. This method will also create in him a greater respect for the contract since he will realize that it is a real, live, vital thing, ready to get right after him the moment he neglects it.

All this applies mostly to new accounts you put on the books yourself, for which you feel a personal responsibility. If you find this experiment successful, you will never have to reproach yourself with having made a good loan and then permitted it to go bad through lack of a few minutes of personal attention. Let our motto be, among others, "Build for the future."

Then again, some of us new managers on coming into an office, find that many old clients have not been properly trained and their loan due on the 10th, has generally been paid anytime between the 10th and 20th, or the 25th, in some instances. This is a rather bad condition since it makes it necessary to send one, two, or three notices in order to get every payment, which causes considerable trouble and inflates the delinquent list. It is impossible for a manager to get after every account in this condition but to revert to our new motto, he can "Build for the Future," by correcting this condition every time a client applies for a renewal of his loan.

In such a case, the method I employ, is to first ask him how much he wants, by way of starting the conversation. Then make an intensive study of the payments on his card, while keeping him in suspense, which will be broken by saying; "It seems Mr. Smith, that you have had a little difficulty in taking care of this loan. What seems to be the trouble, is it that your income is too small, or are your expenses too large, or is it just plain neglect on your part? Your payments were due on the 10th, you have generally been made anywhere from the 12th to the 20th. Perhaps the 10th is not a very convenient date for you to pay. Does your rent or other expenses come due around that time, or don't you get paid until later?"

In this way, you open up the ground in a diplomatic manner, for full discussion of the matter. He cannot take offense for he himself is in the wrong; he has not lived up to his contract, and yet he is asking for another one. Therefore, if handled rightly, he can be started off again, the same as a brand new client who has never been spoiled by neglect, and from then on, he can be made to realize that a payment due on the 10th, must be paid on the 10th, and no later, if he is to retain his credit standing. He has been faced for a moment by the possibility of being refused a new loan, which he absolutely needed, and in that moment he will see the error of his ways and realize the possible consequences of his carelessness.

Others of you have other ideas besides mine. I hope to see some one volunteer to make a further talk on this subject, to carry on what we have started to-day. This is one of our most important problems and on which we managers can participate to a greater extent than in any other. We can help to solve it better than any scientific experts, because we are on the ground and knowing the obstacles we are better equipped to work out a solution. Let us all chip in the best of our ideas, don't take only mine or those of any one other, but let us all give a talk from time to time, until we finally work out our solution, which will improve conditions even if it don't perfect them. Let us consider that this will be done some day, however, remote, and we might as well have a hand in it, for we will reap the benefits. It will make our office better, our job better, and our relations with our clientele much more pleasant.

By E. R. Bitting.

I believe you will agree with me that in most methods of operation in our business no definite rules can be laid down, or followed out in making collections, in fact we must or should be guided by the facts as we know them in each particular case, and follow the dictates of our own judgment as to which would be the best way to collect that particular account.

I might say you will never find two cases parallel in every detail, and that is the chief reason why I say we cannot establish any set of rules of collections.

I consider the first thing to do, in going after a slow, is to ascertain why the client failed to pay—if from lack of employment—sickness—or some other legitimate cause, the best results are usually obtained by sympathetic understanding. Take the borrowers into a private room—sit down and make them feel at ease, and go over it with them, and with a view of finding out just what their resources are, and when they expect them to improve, and if you are satisfied they are unable to meet the payment at that time—try to create the impression that you are very much interested in their welfare, and that you are disposed, in this case to extend the rules a little and grant them an extension of time, and set a definite date when you will expect the payment. I do not think it advisable to incur the enmity of the borrower who has "become slow" through any honest or legitimate cause.

If, on the other hand, they have become "slow" through carelessness, or some foolish expenditure, which the borrower should know would jeopardize his ability to pay, according to his contract, then I feel that the best results can be obtained by a firm and forceful presentation of the fact that the strict letter of the contract must be observed. This can almost always be done without resorting to a severe "balling out," and just how far you can go must be regulated by your knowledge of the particular case you are handling. Some have to be "jacked up every so often, or they invariably fall into a rut, and you have another chronic slow on your hands others require continual reminders in a forceful way to keep them off the slow-report—others, a few jolly remarks will bring the best results, and others, need no recognition at all. Then we have those who are perfectly good accounts who consider it their inalienable right to drift practically as they like, and resent any reference to the fact. It has been my experience in the number of years of business to let these latter severely alone.

Another important detail is to use the proper tact and diplomacy to lead up to an opening to get your argument home, and to present it in an understandable form, which requires a thorough knowledge of the extent of the mental intelligence of the person with whom you are talking, also the lines along which they think—and the language to which they would be most susceptible.

I believe in using the mail first, when an account goes slow sometimes two or three letters before asking a personal call, and then the outside man, should be instructed to make it plain that he does not intend to run there every month, and is there now to verify the fact that they still live there, and that the security is still intact. Only in very rare cases should he accept money at the house, in fact, only when you know that is the only way you will ever get it, for just as soon as you do, you are through seeing them in the office until they want another loan.

I do not believe in using form letters in addressing a delinquent, for each case usually requires a little different wording, and as soon as a borrower finds he is getting a form letter, it receives no attention, and when a manager has too many slows for him to dictate personal letters to each of them his office is getting in pretty bad shape, or he is not employing sufficient help. It is not economy to be compelled to pass up some vital point in the collection of an account, because you are too busy doing something else. The salary of an additional employee can be lost several times over by permitting the psychological moment for getting after a doubtful account to pass. No form letter is ever anything but a form letter—no matter how well disguised, and while it may suit three or four this month, it will not suit the same ones next month.

The telephone is very often a useful assistant in making collections where it can be used, and it is more valuable than a letter, for it puts you in direct contact with the delinquent and creates and leaves a more lasting impression than a letter, or a call from an outside man—for the borrower is usually more timid about coming in contact with the manager than the outside man, when it is necessary for the outside man to make a call, he should exert all his energies to getting the borrower in the office, and then his time has been wasted unless the manager is there to interview them personally, making it plain that you are taking a special interest in their case, and have already stretched all rules to the limit in their behalf.

Good results are sometimes obtained by "turning over" a slow account but this method should be used with discretion for many of them will consider that as they have gone two or three months behind with this account, they can do the same with the renewal, so it serves only where they can be made to realize that it is their last chance to make good, and it is for their own benefit, and if for instance, they are paying $10 a month on the principal, and you can renew them for $5 per month on the principal, then I would consider it a transaction worth while, and one which could be easily explained to them as being to their advantage.

I think the best way to make collections, when it becomes necessary, is by using a personal first letter, calling their attention to their contract, and the date due-making it short and right to the point, and if this does not bring results, follow it up by a second stronger letter, use the phone—then your outside man, and then use your own judgment when you get a hold of them personally.

There are many methods of collections in use, and numerous so-called systems that have been, and are being tried by different credit concerns—all, guaranteed by their originators to produce the results. But I believe the best method is to get in personal contact with the delinquent and analyze his case individually, and apply tact, diplomacy and the teachings of experience to each particular case.

AN ADDRESS.

By Dr. E. J. Cattell, of the Philadelphia Chamber of Commerce, before the annual Pennsylvania Association Convention, Bellevue-Stratford, Philadelphia, November 16, 1922:

After that wonderful introduction, my dear friends, I am a little embarrassed, knowing I will disappoint, and the part of prudence would be to remain silent, but that I cannot be, though I realize how wise it would be not to talk, remembering that remarkable 13th verse of the 22d chapter of Jeremiah, where it tells us that Jonah said to the whale: "This thing wouldn't have happened if you had kept your darned mouth shut." (Laughter.)

I have another handicap troubling me a little which will pass off, however. I spoke at two luncheons to-day, and I have been to two dinners to-night before I came here. When it comes to appetite, I take after both my father and my mother—one ate very fast and the other ate a long while, and when I got through I felt like the little fellow who went to the party, and that boy ate so much it should have removed every wrinkle from his body for the rest of his life. When he got through, he said to his nurse: "Pick I up, carry I out, but don't bend I." (Laughter.) Now, there is a trace of unbendability about me which I hope will pass off.

I really would like to say some of the real things I believe about your work. It is wonderful, it is helpful, especially to the man of small means, and we have many of that kind in Philadelphia. While there are fewer large fortunes in Philadelphia than New York, we have a wider distribution of money than I believe any other city in the world. We have a wider and larger ownership of homes, my latest estimate being about 198,000 owners of homes in Philadelphia, dwellings; we have to-day over 400,000 separate dwellings, built on their own land, with God's earth under them and God's sky over them, and out of that number only 20,000 are built of wood. They have all modern improvements, and it may interest you to know that 140,000 of them, mostly occupied by our skilled labor, have their own inside laundry, which saves us ten per cent in water consumption and means a tremendous help in the life of the people.

We have some of those cases you so definitely and directly relieve by coming to the assistance of men who in a crisis must have a little money. Many of our large business firms frequently require money and sell their paper in the great money markets, and lose interest on it in order that their credit may be upheld, so that in time of crisis they can get the accommodation they need. The small borrower never has that opportunity, and when necessity strikes him he must make personal application to a man who can measure character and who is able to make these loans, and thereby contributes to his continued prosperity and the prosperity of his family. You fill, to my mind, a very real place in the building of homes, the raising of families, and in the home life, and that is the heart of the republic, the heart of the whole world; and I want to say to you to-night, you are doubly welcome to this good City of Philadelphia, and I bid you godspeed in your work.

I am delighted to see so many lovely ladies here to-night. We are told that God made man first and woman afterwards, but man has been after woman ever since. You remember when Adam was in the Garden of Eden alone nothing moved, nothing happened, but when Eve came along everything moved and everything happened. (Laughter.) I think those words written by the Prophet Jeremiah four thousand years ago are just as true to-day—that a woman is only as old as she looks, and a man is never old until he quits looking! (I am not certain that Jeremiah wrote those words; it wouldn't have been half so sad if he had.)

I make it a rule to change my job every fifty years to keep from getting into a rut, and in my new office I have a sign reading: "If a pretty girl passes and I do not notice her, send for the coroner, because I'm dead." (laughter.)

I am an optimist myself, not through blind faith but, I believe, through an intelligent grasp of the situation. I have seen in my conscious life the wealth of America grow from seven billions to three hundred billions. I have seen in my conscious life the homes in Philadelphia grow from 75,000 to 400,000. Do you wonder I am an optimist when I witness the marvelous growth in this one nation? I have seen twice as much vealth accumulate in my life in one country as is to-day possessed by the rest of the world.

I passed over fourteen years of my life in other lands overseas. I have written about some seventy different countries. This year I have visited over 14,000 miles, visiting 38 states. I have come in contact with all conditions of life and all parts of this wonderful country. I might nention, to give added force to my words, that I predict we are on the edge of the greatest development, the greatest era of prosperity America has ever seen and I believe that in a few years Europe will enjoy the same return of prosperity.

I have recently talked with a very able banker from Belgium, and he told me that there was more money in Belgium to-day than ever before in their history. I had a talk with Sir Reginald McKenna, the head of probably the largest bank in the world, and he said his estimate of the property, the good investments of Britain outside of the Empire, ranged from two thousand millions to three thousand millions of dollars.

The world is not broke! The pessimist is nothing more than a blind man in a dark room looking for a hat that is not there. Be an optimist!

This old city is sometimes spoken of as slow and asleep. God help the rest of the world if we ever wake up! I made up the actual statistics of our factories, and I found that every time the clock ticks in Philadelphia, every second, we make 25 pairs of stockings; every second we make a new shoe; every two seconds a new hat; every three seconds a new pair of lace curtains. If we could put all our carpet mills up against a six-room house we could carpet it in 28 seconds—less than a half a minute! We build a trolley car every hour, a locomotive every two hours, a new house every twenty minutes, and a new baby every thirteen! (As I am a bachelor, I am bragging about other people's work, not my own.)

Will you not agree with me that it is a pretty busy old city? You hear that trolley car going by—that is one of a family that in every twenty-four hours goes ten times around the earth, without going out of Philadelphia. The total mileage of all our cars in 24 hours is about 248,000 miles, or ten times around the earth. Put our streets together and they will reach all the way to Denver, Colorado. It is a pretty big town to be asleep. It is good for the world that it does sometimes sleep.

I made three speeches this week in New York, and I find that I like to go there to get a breath of the country air. (Laughter.) One man introduced me as coming from "Sleepy Philadelphia," and I told them I came to New York through a tunnel built by a Philadelphian; I entered the finest station in the world, built by a Philadelphian. As I walked out into the city of New York, a friend said to me, "There is the second largest store in the city," and I saw "Gimbel Brothers," branch of a Philadelphia store. We walked a little further, and he said, "There is the largest store in the city, and I looked up and read "John Wanamaker," a branch of a Philadelphia store. I said "Where are you going to put up?" He said, "The Waldorf-Astoria," and he added: "That was built by Mr. Boldt from Philadelphia." We went on a little further, and I said, "I don't want a big dinner, just a little lunch," and he said, "Right across the street they feed about 36,000 people every day, the best place in New York for a quick lunch," and looking over I read the sign, "Horn & Hardart," a branch of a Philadelphia restaurant. I then said to him, "About the only thing in New York that I can see built by the New Yorkers are the graveyards and street cars."

Pennsylvania is a good old state. The more I see of the rest of the world, the more I love Pennsylvania. All her streets are peopled by men and women who are loyal followers of "Old Glory," who believe in home life, and, after all, my friends, that is the basis of my optimism for the whole world. Twenty-six million families in America! Thing of the influence of your own home, think of the old mother—rich if you have her, poor, indeed if, like myself, God has taken her away; and then multiply that influence by twenty-six million, represented by the homes of America, and you will see what an anchor the great Ship of State has, one that will help her pass through any storm that may sweep her decks.

And speaking of old folks reminded me of the story of two old people up in New York State. They had lived on a farm all their lives, and on the fiftieth anniversary of their wedding they decided to be extravagant, for they had always been very saving and had had little time for fun. Now they had read in the Saturday Evening Post about the wonderful luxury of the idle rich in New York, and they made up their minds they were going to the best hotel, and have the best room, no matter what it cost. They arrived in New York, inquired as to what was the best hotel, went to the Biltmore, ordered the best room, and got it. After the boy had deposited their bags in the room and left, they looked around at all the beautiful furniture, and, for the first time the old lady saw twin beds. She looked at them and then turned to her husband and said: "Josh, I am awfully disappointed. I thought we were going to be by ourselves." (Laughter.)

My friends, get in love with life, enjoy life, and believe the kind Father above has many good things in store for you. In your patriotism and your friendships, in your loyalty to lodge or church, let it be continuous, not spasmodic. You know there are people who celebrate the Fourth of July with a great deal of noise and then are traitors in actions and words all the rest of the year. Let me illustrate what I mean: Being an old bachelor, lots of people come to me for advice upon matrimony, and because I am an old bachelor, I give it. I remember quite recently a friend came to me and said, "Cattell, my wife and I are fighting all the time. We don't seem to get along together at all well, fighting all the time." I said to him, "This is a simple case. I daresay you have forgotten to pay her the attentions that you did during the engagement, that you have forgotten all the old tricks that won her." He said, "I didn't think it was necessary after we got married." I replied, "That is just where you are wrong. The thing to do is to start in today, buy her some roses, send her a box of candy, pay her a few compliments, and I know it will be all right. See me in the morning and report." He came in to see me the next day looking very dejected. I said to him, "Well, how did it work?" He answered, "Rotten!" "Tell me all about it," I said. "Well, I did just as you told me, I got the candy and the roses and perfume, I went home, and as soon as I opened the door I began to pay her compliments, but suddenly she began to cry. I said to her 'What is the matter?' And between sobs she answered, 'This is the worst day I have ever had. First the baby took sick, then a pipe burst and I couldn't get a plumber, the maid has left, and now you come home drunk!" (Laughter.) It was too sudden!

Be honest with others and honest and truthful with ourselves. Face the truth squarely—a lot of us haven't always the courage to do that. I have a dear friend who was induced four or five years ago to take the pledge. Two days after he took the pledge I met him, and I could see he had fallen off the wagon. I said to him, "Tom, I am awfully disappointed! Frankly speaking, you are drunk." And Tom answered, "If I'm not I have been badly swindled." But, I am glad to say, Tom later climbed back on the wagon, and didn't even get off to give his seat to a lady.

That is the only message I can bring you. You are very welcome to Philadelphia. You are doing your part to lead the world back to paths of pleasantness and peace, and don't, don't, go away with the idea that we are only a money-loving and money-grubbing people. I have lived in other lands years at a time, and I have found that no people in the world have kinder hearts than the Americans, no people in the world are more consistently trying to help others, no people are more sentimental than the Americans. Let me give you one picture before I leave, an illustration of what I mean:

I was at a great bankers' convention in New York, where 10,000 men were gathered from every section of the United States, all interested in money. I walked around that big lobby of the Commodore Hotel, and saw many old friends and they were all talking money, money, money, exchange, interest, hard coal, metal, commerce. I had been traveling all night and perhaps was a little nervous, for it certainly got on my nerves to hear that money, money, money! I decided to go to bed, and just as I was leaving the lobby, an old friend I had not seen for seven years, and who was at the head of a big bank in the southwest, came up to me, and after shaking hands, he said, "Cattell, come, sit down with me for a moment. I want to tell you something. Do you remember the last time we met, six or seven years ago?" I said, "Yes, it was at Hot Springs." I remembered it at once because at that interview, as we sat there in front of the Homestead Hotel, this man had opened his heart to me and shown that all his affections were centered in his boy whom he idolized, and I thought a great many times afterward, "I wonder what ever happened to that boy, that one human being in which he has placed such a wealth of affection." Then he went on, "You remember I talked of my boy and how I loved him." And then he stopped, seemed to pull himself together, and went on: "We lost him in one of the early battles of the war. It broke his mother's heart and it unfitted me for business for a long time, but about six weeks ago I had been sleeping, and just before the dawn, I seemed to have been disturbed by something, and opened my eyes, and the walls of my bedroom seemed to have disappeared. I seemed to be above the clouds, and suddenly I saw the face of the One I love and try to follow—the Master; and as I watched, wondering at my new environment, I heard that sweet voice calling my boy, and looking I thought I saw my boy approaching, and the Great Captain of all said to my boy, 'I have work for you to do,' and He seemed to give my boy some orders, and my boy smiled back at Him and disappeared, and then the walls of my room came back, and somehow my burden had fallen, my heart was at rest, my boy was doing something somewhere, and it was only a question of waiting, waiting, until we meet again."

There was the talk of money all around us, on every side, but this man had opened his heart and spoke of that which is spiritual, and underlying every phase of American life there is that deeper living that is our salvation because we all believe that each is a sovereign by divine right, and that flag stands for something holy and will never be lowered in defeat when we are leading a just cause, because we have behind us the infinite power and, guiding us, the infinite wisdom of the Great Leader.

May God bless your deliberations and take you home from this great city better citizens, more truly dedicated to the service of others and to the glory of God! (Applause.)

How I Secure References in Making a Loan to New Customers

By J. C. LEWIS

I consider the taking of a reference sheet not only one of my very important duties that has to do with the success of our business, but also essential to the collection department and a matter that greatly effects our Profit and Loss Account.

Why do we take references? The first thought that comes to our mind in answer to this question is in order to locate a customer should they abscond. There are three other purposes that a reference sheet ably serves as I see them.

I dare say that you have often been told a little story about a particular friend or relative, or given a minute description of some last place of residence.

Second, the advisability of making the deal.

While the report of the outside man is very essential in the making of a new loan nine out of ten deals made or rejected are determined by how and where the patron lives or lived, also how well they are connected, not only from the relative and acquaintanceship standing, but fraternal, and an employment one as well.

It has been conclusively proven that ninety-five per cent of the people who apply for and get credit are thoroughly honest at the time, also that the only three reasons why people do not pay are dead beat, poor management, and hard luck. Therefore, usually the patrons we experience trouble with are ones who become a victim of circumstances and their excuse always is hard luck. There has been many dollars collected from this type by getting in touch with the references, both with and without the coöperation of the customer.

If the patron is because of hard luck inclined to lean towards the dead beat class they do not want you to get in touch with the references, and satisfactory arrangements are generally made for payment because of this sheet. In the event of using a reference sheet for this purpose I am at all times watchful and have it thoroughly understood that in interviewing references they (the customer) are being served, and there is no thought of broadcasting their affairs.

The above may be somewhat foreign to the original subject, but I can hardly tell you how I take a reference sheet without first letting you know what is on my mind while doing my work.

When taking references I concentrate my thoughts on five very important features. We will, or we will not make the deal, personal closeness to the customer, credit impression, collection of the account, and the possibility of a skip.

In all cases without exceptions I first explain that the investigation we make is at the house and office, and state that we have a few questions to ask, as we must know something about the person before making a loan, assuring them that the same is held in strict confidence. I try to make the applicant feel that our office is their money home, but I also impress them with the fact that this is not a personal loan, but a matter of business from the time application is made until the deal is terminated.

I, therefore, am frank to admit that while the applicant is at all times treated with extreme courtesy I do not use any evasive methods to extract answers from them. I cannot recall a loan ever having been lost because of this open and above board treatment. This plan too usually makes a good paying customer. With this understanding at the beginning we can generally determine the manner of person we have to deal with. They may be folks who are not in the least concerned who knows they are borrowing, and make some such remark as "Fire away," or "Go as far as you like." These people we have very little trouble with.

Then again they may be skeptical and state that they desire their dealings conducted very confidential. This type as a rule uses the expressions of "We did not know there was so much red tape," Goodness! you must give your life's history," "What does he, she, or that have to do with this loan, or "Are these people interviewed?" and "Do they know of our business transactions?"

There are exceptions to all rules, but I believe the reasons for non-payment as well as objections to answering questions on a reference sheet are so common that by careful study we can train ourselves to have the remedy at hand and the answer ready immediately without the least forethought.

The first two objections in a greater number of cases are overruled by stating to them that "If you deposit your money in some banks they not only require your address, but ask you to fill out a blank which consists of references whom the bank gets in touch with in the event something happens to the depositor." I, at this time make it clear that if a good credit is established there are no questions asked on future loans, as this sheet is always kept on file. All that is necessary is their presence at our office and the desired amount is quickly loaned. I also then guarantee one hundred per cent confidence on the loan with their coöperation.

In answer to the latter questions the patron is invariably satisfied with the explanation that this reference sheet is not taken as a matter of distrust. Since they are going to get the money before leaving the office it would be useless for us to get in touch with these people at this time. After this explanation I have been asked "Then why do you take references?" They are then told that the reference sheet is used only after a customer does not value their credit, or of anything of a serious nature should happen while the loan is still unpaid. This answer generally puts all doubts at rest in the minds of the honest, but skeptical.

Then we come in contact with those who maliciously give false names and addresses. These applicants are very few comparatively, and are usually caught, although they sometimes slip by.

I always know who the outside representative interviewed at the house and in asking questions as to past residence, rent, employment, etc. I address the other party and expect them to reply. If there is a difference noted in the answers I am exceedingly careful. If my suspicions are aroused I fill out the entire sheet and afterwards check it with the applicant. This procedure in many instances prevents the placing of a bad loan on the books.

Allow me to site an illustration. An applicant recently claimed he was a member of a certain fraternal order. He gave the number and location of his lodge. In the course of conversation I indirectly passed along to him something that required a reply, but it was not forthcoming. Upon checking the sheet I watched the number of this order carefully and he gave a different number. I then became inquisitive and he was finally forced to admit that he never belonged to this particular fraternity, but stated that he made a false reply in order to make a good showing.

When asking these people the questions I many times looked up from the desk quickly and more than once detected them making eyes at one another. It is needless to say that they did not get the loan, althought the outside look up recommended them. As a matter of experiment I kept watch on these people, and in less than two months it was learned they were not married. They also separated, selling their furniture, and left a number of bad debts behind.

Finally permit me to say there is hardly enough room on an ordinary reference sheet for me to get the information I would like to. In addition to getting last place of residence, employment, fraternal organization, I ascertain the place of employment of relatives and friends, in addition to their addresses. I get insurance companies, whether industrial or ordinary policies. I also inquire as to references being home owners, bank account, and B. & L. Association shares of the applicant, and whether they own an automobile, and if so are they purchasing the same on the installment plan and the license number.

I consider any one of these good information on skips and valuable in the collection of slow accounts. In short I firmly believe a loan well made and an impressive reference sheet taken is three-quarters of the collection of any account regardless of conditions.

The major portion of this article may be antiquated information, but since I take it we are here for education an exchange of thought will probably get us further along than any one paper or address. Therefore, if my ideas of taking a reference sheet on a new application are not quite clear to you, I would be pleased to answer any questions you desire to ask, and by this method of friendly discussion it will be possible for us all to learn.

EDUCATIONAL ADVERTISING

By LESLIE WHITMER

The topic assigned is not only of state importance, but national as well.

I shall confine myself to the work which we have started and expect to continue until there is a much better understanding among the non-borrowing public in Sioux City.

Some of our leading loan men are not in favor of such a campaign, because many offices are not what they claim to be, and often the lender is not what he represents himself to be. We must educate these lenders, as Mr. Ham states to me in letter after our Sioux City meeting: "The state associations and the National Association were organized I think mainly for the purpose of focusing public attention upon work of the loan associations, advance the progress of the uniform law, protect against undue interference from the outside, and generally to advance the interests of the business, but I am inclined to think that their greatest accomplishment up to date, as you intimate, has been the education of the loan men themselves."

It must be recognized that educational publicity is more important than advertising, to obtain more business, for I am convinced that as soon as there is a better understanding among the general public as to the need of our business and the methods that are practiced, there will be a new class of borrowers that will increase our volume many times. The Uniform Law is fair to the borrower; the rate of interest and other provisions are scientific and constructive. Much work remains to be done to convince the layman and legislator of the economic value of it. We must look largely to the legal fraternities, public prosecutors, social and civic organizations for coöperation in maintaining our present law, and I do not believe there is a better way of gaining public opinion than educational advertising in our daily papers.

We have begun our campaign in a small way, by buying advertising space once each week, in our daily papers, to tell about the advantages of the Uniform Small Loan Law of Iowa, and in addition mailed nineteen hundred letters, personally signed, under a two cent stamp, to members of the Chamber of Commerce, Rotary, Kiwanis, High Twelve and Lions Clubs, also real estate association, doctors, lawyers and ministers, calling attention to our ads, and that we would feel complimented if they would read them. We had an advertising man write the ads, and began with a series of ten copies, taking two columns and ten inches of space. The cost of these ads was $560.00 and 10 per cent additional for having them prepared. Results so far have been very satisfactory. We have received some letters, all congratulating us and thinking it particularly apropos at this time. The title of all the ads are "Why the Small Loan Business," and I believe it would be good sound business if more companies would start a similar campaign, and I do not believe you would be disappointed in results.

For the purpose of obtaining business, just what kind of advertising is best adapted to our line of business, it is rather difficult to say, but generally speaking our advertising must be honest and educational in nature. The lender that does not give to borrower, honest and sincere consideration, will find his loan balance shrinking until he will have no need for license. The large body of non-borrowing citizens in any community knows nothing about the Uniform Law. As far as they are concerned, our position is exactly the same as that of the manufacturer who sets out to put a new product on the market A campaign of education must be inaugurated. The public must be familiarized with what we are trying to sell. To non-borrowers our rates often appear too high. Inasmuch as we desire the good opinion and support of this class of citizens, they must be convinced of the fairness of our charges. With borrowers, the case is somewhat different. They are usually anxious to borrow where they can borrow cheapest.

In closing, for this business to, obtain the standard of which it is justly deserving, it will be necessary that all our offices are decently run and everything in connection with the business be conducted in accordance with the Golden Rule.

Read at a meeting of the Iowa Association held in Des Moines, April 12 and 13, 1923.

Some of the Educational Publicity to which Mr. Whitmer refers is herewith reproduced. Would that more members would follow the example of the Provident Loan Association, of Sioux City, Iowa. Each message was set in display type and occupied ten inches double column and so far has been run in the Sioux City Journal, Tribune, March 24th and 31st, April 1st and 8th.—[Ed.]

WHY——
THE SMALL-LOAN BUSINESS?

"Lend and do good" is a biblical expression. The loan business is as old as organized society. It dates back beyond the time of Homer when the picture of an ox was imprinted on a piece of leather and called "Money."

Money lenders have ever drawn the barbed shafts of wit and ridicule from the time of the Greek philosophers to the present-day pungent paragraphers.

The province of the small money lender is certain and established. His business is essential to the community. He is a necessary element in our financial system.

Sixteen years ago Mrs. Russel Sage established a philanthropic endowment of Ten Million Dollars, the income from which was to be used for the betterment of social and living conditions in the United States. A survey was made by the Sage Foundation of the small-loan business. It was found that a considerable proportion of borrowers were being exploited rather than relieved.

There was organized as part of the Sage Foundation the Division of Remedial Loans, whose mission was to conduct a campaign of public education with regard to the necessity of the small-loan business as a part of our fiscal machinery —to point out the evil operations of the prevailing commercial agencies; to procure intelligent, reasonable legislation, based on a desire to regulate rather than annihilate to oppose passage of impractical laws; to encourage the organization of remedial loan societies that would make loans at the lowest rate consistent with sound business principles and a reasonable but definitely limited return upon capital.

Out of this came the "Uniform Small Loan Law," now adopted by Iowa and 19 other states. This law permitted a flat interest rate of 3½% per month, without fees or other charges. A lower rate had proved insufficient to provide capital needed to meet the demand for loans; a combination of lower rate with additional fees had proved too susceptible of abuse. The new rate was based on definite information concerning the necessary cost of operation and was keyed to the business of the lender of average capital in the moderate-sized cities.

WHY——

THE SMALL-LOAN BUSINESS?

Regulated by Law.

When a large part of the income of the Sage Foundation of $10,000,000 was devoted to investigation of the small-loan business and in securing Uniform Small-Loan Laws in twenty states and in encouraging the organization of Remedial Societies, it must be admitted that the small-loan business is an important branch and a necessary element in our financial system.

The uniform Small-Loan Law reflects a desire to do justice to both borrower and lender. It recognizes the fact that small-loan agencies, unlike banks, have no deposits and must do business on their own capital. It recognizes that their security is not substantial or fluid—that small-loans on chattels or wages require more investigation than bank loans. It recognizes that installment repayments necessitate a larger bookkeeping and collecting system.

The Uniform Small Loan Law also protects the borrower—it demands that he understands the terms of the loan and of his contract, that he shall receive a receipt for all payments—it provides a means of recovery in case of overcharge. And this law gives the supervising power of the state free access to all necessary data that he may determine whether the law is being religiously observed.

The law has reduced unnecessary borrowing and lightened the burden of the deserving borrower. It has reduced the losses of the lender, legitimatized the business and those engaged in it. It has substituted respect for disrepute. It has saved the borrowing public from the payment of excess interest running into many millions of dollars.

The constitutionality of the Loan Law has been definitely established. It is being ably administered by state officials who have come to have an appreciation of the importance of the small-loan business and respect for the licensed lender.

In Iowa the small-loan business is regulated by law and the lender is under the supervision of the State Banking Department. The law requires the lender to furnish a bond of one thousand dollars for every office he operates. The lender becomes responsible to the State and to the borrower. The Banking Department of the State becames responsible in supervising the business.

Further information on the small-loan business will be published in this space next Sunday.

WHY——

THE SMALL-LOAN BUSINESS?

The Industrial Borrowers.

Fifteen per cent of the population of America have access to the financial and borrowing facilities of the Banks and Banking Institutions.

The remaining 85% are without financial provision in their time of need. Forty million of this group are Grade A borrowers, possessing character, honesty and earning power, the three essentials for a loan, yet no provision is made for them in time of need.

The industrial borrowers, forty million and rapidly increasing, are the borrowers without banking connections, unable to secure acceptable endorsements, entirely outside the province of a bank, for they are without acceptable security for a loan.

Remedial Loan Associations were organized for this vast army of industrial workers and the Uniform Small Loan Law was drafted for their protection.

On their needs in periods of emergency, greed has built what is known as the "Loan Shark's Evil," charging exorbitant rates of interest. The Uniform Small-Loan Law in twenty states has eliminated this evil and met the need.

In Iowa alone, during the year 1921 small loans were made to 18,824 persons by the forty or more companies forming the Iowa Industrial Lenders Association. These loans aggregated $1,436,278.

Legalized, licensed loan companies have come to be recognized as the industrial workers' banks. They have just as an important mission in the financial field, are just as essential in banking service to the small borrower as the bank is to the man with acceptable security.

The making of small loans should be dealt with only by loan associations, is the opinion of the leading bankers—it is a legitimate business and occupies a right and just province.

Because of the large risk involved in making small loans on chattel or wage securities the interest rate must be higher than that which the banks charge.

Loan Associations do not receive deposits, hence, they loan their own money on securities the banks refuse to accept, involving greater risk, greater investigating expense and greater collection cost.

A rightfully conducted Loan Association that conscientiously and squarely serves the small borrowers is a legitimate business, most worthy of commendation, and surely is a part of our commercial machine.

Further information on the small-loan business will be published in this space next Sunday.

Here is a copy of the letter sent out April 6, to the members of the business men's organizations, to which Mr. Whitmer refers:

Dear Sirs:

Owing to criticism of the Uniform Small Loan Law, made by several honest, sincere and fair-thinking people at the open forum meeting Sunday, March 18; and in order that the general public may know more about the necessity of our business and the number of people we serve, we have decided upon an educational advertising campaign in the interest of the Uniform Small Loan Law, which was drafted by the Russell Sage Foundation, after a survey of many years, by capable men who were not engaged in the business of making small loans.

This association was organized under the Russell Sage Foundation plan, and we are members of the National Federation of Remedial Loan Associations.

The second one of a series of ads covering a ten inch space, two columns, appeared in Saturday's Tribune, March 31, and Sunday's Journal, April 1, and will appear in each paper on Saturday and Sunday for several weeks, and we will feel complimented if you will read these ads. They are not for the purpose of obtaining business, but to educate the non-borrowing public of the necessity of our business and the fairness of the Uniform Small Loan Law.

Yours truly,
PROVIDENT LOAN ASSOCIATION.

LOAN BILL GIVEN STRONG APPROVAL.

Majority of Speakers at House Judiciary Hearing Advocate Passage of Measure.

OPPOSITION ALSO VOICED.

Most of Opponents Object Only to Certain Sections of Act.—Many Representatives of Societies Urge Favorable Action.

Most of the 16 persons who spoke before the House judiciary committee yesterday afternoon at the hearing on the Andrews Small Loan bill favored the measure. Objections voiced by the opponents of the measure were directed mostly at individual sections, and not against the bill as a whole. They also declared they were satisfied with the Cutler law now in force.

The spokesman of the opposition forces was former General Treasurer Richard W. Jennings, who said the present law was, in the main, adequate. He specifically objected to several provisions of the Andrews bill, including supervision of the lending business by the Bank Commissioner and the amount of the license fee, which he held was too large. Objections were also voiced by Thomas F. O'Reilly of the People's Loan Association, Frank H. Wildes, attorney for a loan company, J. C. Semonoff, attorney of the Guaranty Loan Company; Antonio Marcaccio and two other persons.

Passage of the bill was advocated by Bank Commissioner George H. Newhall, General Secretary Richard B. Watrous and former General Secretary Clarence B. Cotton of the Chamber of Commerce, Henry F. Burt, general secretary of the Society for Organizing Charities; William B. Greenough, representing the same society and the Legal Aid Society; LeRoy Pilling, counsel for the Legal Aid Society; Walter S. Hilborn of New York, director of the Remedial Loans Division of the Russell Sage Foundation; Joseph J. Genthner, director of the Legal Reform Bureau, to eliminate the loan shark evil, and Frank Hinckley, attorney for the Reform Bureau.

Mr. Hilborn explained that the bill was modelled on the Sage Foundation uniform small loans law, but modified to conform with local conditions. He described the successful operation of the law in a score of states which had adopted it, and said the maximum rate had been arrived at as a figure fair to both parties in a small local transaction, and calculated to attract capital adequate to supply the credit requirements of needy borrowers.

The proposed law was contrasted by Bank Commissioner Newhall with the present one under which the business of making small loans is conducted. Secretary Watrous said that the Chamber of Commerce had indorsed the act only after careful deliberation and investigation. The man, who has character and earning ability, but is without either collateral or guarantors, is discriminated against under present conditions, Mr. Genthner said, in the concluding argument for the bill. The Andrews law, he believed would protect that type of person against unjust interest rates.

During the hearing, Mr. Genthner received a telegram stating that the uniform small loan lay had been passed unanimously by the lower house of the Delaware Legislature. Objections to the local measure were based in the main on the proposed interest rate as being too low and on supervision of the lending business by the State.

One objector, Mr.Marcaccio, declared, however, that the rate provided in the new bill was too high, and characterized the limiting of loans to $300 as the "joker in the woodpile." He said there was nothing in the bill to protect the lender against a man who borrows and does not intend to repay.

Providence Journal, March 17, 1923.

Friends of the movement to improve national small loan conditions will be pleased to learn the Uniform Small-Loan Bill passed both Houses of the Rhode Island Legislature unanimously and became a law Saturday, April 14th, when the Governor signed it.

NEW JERSEY.

Assembly bill No. 154 was introduced by Howe, January 29, which permits provident loan associations to make loans up to $300 and to declare dividends up to 8% per annum. This amends the law increasing the maximum dividend from 6% to 8% per annum.

In New Jersey the Act of 1908 authorized provident loan associations to be incorporated and originally permitted them to make industrial loans only up to $200. A year ago the law was amended increasing the maximum loans to $300, and the associations were authorized to conduct a pawnbroking business as well as an industrial business, in that respect following the New York Personal Loan Company Law.

Provident loan associations are subject to the supervision by the Department of Banking and Insurance but are exempt from the payment of annual license fee. There are but two associations in the state operating under this law, and they are located at Newark and Patterson.

The annual report of the New Jersey Banking Department includes statistics on the industrial loan companies but does not include statistics on the two provident loan associations. It has been suggested to the Department that the statistics of the provident loan associations be also included, and it is likely that this data will appear hereafter.

INDIANA.

This letter is for you.

Will you kindly read it and reply quickly.

You know that the regular annual convention of the Indiana Industrial Lenders Association will be held in Indianapolis Wednesday and Thursday, May 16th-17th.

I have letters from Mr. Aufderheide, Broughman, Teel, Woll, Harbison, Zumpte, Mueller, Hodson, Blumberg promising to send all of their managers to this convention.

We want every member of the Association to be present, the election of officers will be held. It is your Association and it is your duty to elect the ones who will preside over the Association for another year. The delegates to the National Convention will be elected also.

Some change in the By-Laws in reference to the suspension of members for non-payment of dues will be made.

We are planning on at least two hundred for the banquet which will be held on Wednesday evening and is open for the wives and sweethearts. We are going to make this banquet a real pleasure event, full of fun, no long drawn out speakers, but a general good time. If you miss it, you will miss a real treat. It will be strictly informal.

You will find enclosed a postcard to be filled out and returned at once in order that preparations can be made for the banquet and program. Will you kindly do this to-day.

Put this date on your calendar with a notation that you will be in Indianapolis Wednesday May 16th-17th.

Yours for a rip-roaring convention,
Indiana Industrial Lenders Association.

P. S. Arrangements will be made to entertain the ladies.

Will you kindly send me latest copy of newspaper ad and circular letter.

LENDERS' SOCIETY RE-ELECTS VOGEL.

Sol H. Vogel, Trenton, will head the New Jersey Industrial Lenders' Association for the second time.

Mr. Vogel was elected yesterday at the annual meeting of the association at the Robert Treat Hotel. Other officers elected are: Albert Meighan Paterson, vice-chairman; Peter Alberse, Paterson, secretary; John V. Long, Jersey City, treasurer.

Mayor Breidenbach spoke at the morning session. In the afternoon the members listened to F. B. Cutter, of Marietta, O.; C. H. Chaney, Elmhurst, N. Y.; Nelson Matthews, of Elizabeth; John Bain, of Newark; Mr. Meighan and Mr. Alberse. Senator Parry was to have been the principal speaker at the night session, but was unable to appear. John Whitestone, of Plainfield, was toastmaster at a banquet and Judge Stickel spoke. Other speakers were Colonel Clarence Hodson and Joseph J. Guenther. —Newark Star Eagle, Friday, March 16, 1923.

MARYLAND.

The regular meeting of the Maryland Industrial Lenders Association was held in the Board Room of the M. & M. Building, No. 22 Light Street, Baltimore, Md., on Tuesday evening, April 10th, at 8 o'clock.

The meeting was called to order by Chairman Gardner.

The following members were present: E. E. Hougham, Coöperative Loan & Investment Co.; F. M. Ebert, C. R. Hathaway and W. F. Oliver, Jr., Household Loan Co.; E. S. Armstrong, Natl. Equitable and Investment Co.; Roy T. Baseman, Louis F. Eckhart, F. L. Brust, People's Loan Society; C. S. Thompson, F. W. Ferri, Beneficial Loan Society; F. C. Arzt, G .W. Stancill, Jr., H. C. Moore, Chesapeake Loan Co.; J. E. Turner and Herman Lappe, Community Finance Service, Inc.; Edward Richardson, Earl Fuggett and C. A. Gardner, United Finance & Security Corp.; E. F. Moore of Philadelphia being our only visitor.

Report of Committee.

Mr. Hougham of the Executive Committee reports progress relative to investigations Attorney Bryant is making in connection with the loan companies who are buying salaries instead of making straight loans. A detailed report covering the entire matter will be submitted in time.

There being no report from Mr. Wood, Chairman of the Membership Committee, owing to his inability to be with us.

Chairman Mattingly of the Entertainment Committee being absent, the secretary reported no member was assigned to prepare a paper to be read at this meeting, as we desired to have as much time as possible to discuss plans for the annual meeting and the exchange bureau.

New Business.

The annual banquet was discussed in detail and it was decided to hold the meeting in connection with our regular meeting on June 12th. The business and educational program to be held in the afternoon and banquet in the evening followed by a dance. It was suggested that the managers bring their wives, office assistants and all ladies who are interested in the business, in other words this is to be a social evening especially for the ladies.

Chairman Gardner appointed Messrs. Hougham and Oliver to assist the Entertainment Committee in preparing the educational program, providing speakers for the banquet, etc.

Exchange Meeting.

Mr. Hougham of the Exchange Committee reports as to what has been accomplished to date in the way of obtaining a bureau of credit information for the loan men in Baltimore.

Mr. Mahling, Manager of the Retail Credit Men's Asso., has agreed to operate the exchange, and in order that he may have a little more light on the subject, he is at present in Philadelphia investigating the workings of that successful exchange with the thought of operating the exchange in Baltimore on a similar plan. Mr. Mahling has agreed to give the exchange committee a definite reply as to the efficient service and cost of operating the exchange, no later than Thursday, 12th. Immediately thereafter the exchange committee will call a special meeting of the members and form rules to govern the exchange. We hope to have the exchange operating by May 1st, in order that the members may enjoy the benefits of an exchange service at the earliest possible date.

The remainder of the evening was spent in open discussion among all present as to the entertainment and educational benefit they hope to derive from the annual meeting.

There being no further business to transact, upon order of the Chair, the meeting adjourned until Tuesday evening, 8 o'clock, May 8th.

H. C. Moore, Secretary.

MARYLAND.

The special March meeting of the Maryland Industrial Lenders Association was held in the Board Room of the Merchants and Manufacturers Association Building, Baltimore, on Tuesday evening, March 13th, at 8 o'clock.

The meeting was promptly called to order by Secretary Moore.

The secretary called the members' attention to the necessity of the association having a live, wide awake, energetic member to act as chairman, pro tem, for the remainder of the year. Inasmuch as our chairman and vice-chairman have removed to other states, and are unable to take an active part. Upon motion of Mr. Armstrong, seconded by Mr. Wood, Mr. C. A. Gardner was nominated and elected to serve in this capacity. Mr. Gardner responded to the honor conferred upon him in accepting the chair, by giving the members a short peppy talk upon the duties of the chairmanship, and assured each member present, he would live and breathe a spirit worthy of the honor and dignity of active chairman.

The following members were present: Messrs. J. Edward Richardson, Earl Fugget and C. A. Gardner of the United Finance and Security Coöperation; A. Lee Pumphrey and Louis Neimeyer, Commercial Guarantee Company; J. E. Turner, Herman Lappe and J. J. Wood, Community Finance Service Coöperation; E. E. Hougham, Coöperative Loan and Investment Company; F. M. Ebert, C. R. Hathaway and W. F. Oliver, Jr., Household Loan Company; E. S. Armstrong, National Equitable and Investment Company of Baltimore and Cumberland; Roy T. Baseman and Louis F. Eckhart, Peoples Loan Society; R. L. Smith, Reliance Guarantee Company; H. T. Mattingly, Security Guarantee Company; J. Beale Helm and H. C. Moore, Chesapeake Loan Company.

On order of the chair the reports of the officers were dispensed with.

Report of Committees.

Mr. J. J. Wood, chairman of the Membership Committee, reports he has several prospects which he hopes to submit for membership at our April meeting.

Mr. Oliver, who has been assisting the Executive Committee with their investigations relative to the companies who are trading under the pretext of buying salaries, reports that Attorney Bryant has been very active with the matter, and the Banking Department is at present checking up the work of these companies. A detail report will be submitted tn due time.

New Business.

Mr. Lee H. Pumphrey read an interesting paper on "Advertising" as follows:

The word advertising may be explained as a process to obtain publicity. Publicity dispensed with care and precision is the life of any institution. All business depends entirely on its efficient advertising.

To make our advertising not only produce, but increase business we must be prepared to give service as we advertise at all times.

Since the rates of interest charged in our business have become standardized, we cannot compete with each other by advertising (cut rates). This places us in a class almost to ourselves, as nearly every other business can stimulate sales by underselling their competitors. Our rates being the same, our methods of loaning and collecting so nearly alike, that we are confined to advertising almost exclusively our beneficial service.

Companies advertising in the newspapers, by circulars and in other various channels usually attempt through questioning the applicant, to ascertain how much business is secured through each form of advertising to get an idea of which medium gives the best results for the least expense. In this way wasteful and inefficient advertisements are gradually eliminated, and other methods sought to replace them.

Encouraging customers to solicit amongst their friends usually get results. This form of advertising proves to be the least expensive. Most companies pay $1.00 or $2.00 per customer. That fee which is trivial satisfies to such an extent that the customer feels obligated to assist in collection of account if necessary. The popularity of the manager with his customers may be gauged by the volume of referred business in his office.

Advertising by circulars is an inexpensive method. Our business was practically founded on their success. The history of our past business proves what wonderful results were obtained from circulars compared to expensive newspaper ads. Through this same channel it is possible to broadcast a message to convince the public that our business is essential and to-day is being patronized by people of our best communities.

In our business an elaborate and expensive advertising campaign proves fruitless. In the daily papers our ads are confined to a special column not in a conspicuous part of the paper, where we are forbidden to use large heavy type for our headlines. There our ads are not prominent enough for us to believe that they will demand notice and we have very little opportunity to attract the readers' attention. Such applications as are received through this form of advertising are from those readers who seek the advertiser. They are prospective customers who make application to the company whose ad they admire. This business can be attracted by ads of uniform size, by using only space sufficient to call attention to the kind of service rendered, without using unnecessary space to make the ad attractive.

When we realize that our newspaper ads only reach that class of the public intent of borrowing, we shall be conservative in the space used and spend more freely on a campaign for educative purposes. Our antiquated system of advertising seems inadequate to educate. More thought should be given to the personal attention of the individual customer, who may endeavor to convert those prejudiced against our business.

It is the patron who does not seek the advertiser we desire, if not his patronage at least his goodwill. For that purpose we must employ means to educate such people about our rates and the necessity of that rate.

Public opinion must be in our favor. The public should be taught that we charge 3 1-2 per cent a month, because our expenses and losses demand that sum in order that we may make the same margin of profit as would any mercantile house with merchandise equivalent to our cash. We must in order to keep our rates from being reduced, convince the business people that our rate of interest is not excessive, considering the security offered, the risk we are forced to take and the protection we receive.

Quite often the filing of salary assignments, hastily, without first paving the way by informing the employer, either by mail or a personal interview explaining our rights and the cause of us desiring to assert them, antagonizes the employer. This one important method of collecting when properly presented should prove conclusively to the employer, the fairness of our rate and why such a rate is justified. The salary assignment gives us the opportunity to educate the employer, consequently the business in general shall be judged according to the manner in which each individual company approaches him.

LEE H. PUMPHREY.

A lively discussion took place by all managers present upon the subject of advertising. Special stress being laid upon the exorbitant rate we are required to pay for newspaper advertising in Baltimore. It was suggested that the members use less space in the Baltimore papers. The consensus of opinion was that our results would be better providing the members advertised in a group under the association heading in the Baltimore papers. This matter not being acted upon was referred to the Executive Committee to outline a plan, size of the advertisement, costs, etc., to be submitted at our next meeting. Several members called attention to the pleasing results they were receiving from their advertising in the telephone directory. Street distribution finds favor with several members, others claim that the cost is too great and the class of business a street circular brings is not attractive.

Salary assignments were discussed in detail by each manager present. It is pleasing to know that the managers are being successful in collecting their accounts without resorting to this weapon. Few assignments are being filed. Usually an employer will talk with the employee and urge upon him the necessity of paying the account, provided the loan man thoroughly explains the transaction to the employer. Captains of industry are kind, considerate and reasonable with the loan men when a salary assignment is filed in the right manner.

The questions and talk Mr. Moore had prepared for the outside boys furnished much food for thought. The outside man of to-day is hungry for new and better ways to improve his methods of looking up a loan or handling a delinquent, knowing when he proves efficient an executive position is awaiting.

The remainder of the evening was spent in discussing improved methods in taking care of the outside work from an educational point of view.

No further business to be transacted, upon motion by Mr. Pumphrey, seconded by Mr. Wood, the meeting was adjourned until Tuesday evening, April 10th.

This meeting has been the best, from a social and educational point of view, the writer has ever attended in Maryland.

CHICAGO TRUST COMPANY PRIZES.

The Chicago Trust Company has just announced a prize competition which is notable in character, and which may be expected to produce important results, in stimulating study and research in the field of business finance. For the best contribution on any subject relating to business development and the modern trust company an award of twenty-five hundred dollars will be made in the year 1925 and every three years thereafter. The competition is open to all interested persons, without restriction. For briefer studies by students of economics, business, finance or law, prizes of three hundred dollars will be given annually, beginning in the summer of 1923.

The members of the Committee of Award, in addition to the undersigned, are Fred I. Kent, vice-president of the Bankers Trust Company, New York City; Ralph Van Vechten, vice-president of the Continental and Commercial National Bank, Chicago; Francis E. Baker, Judge of the United States Circuit Court of Appeals, Chicago; Henry H. Hilton, of Ginn & Company, Chicago, and Harold G. Moulton, director of the Institute of Economics, Washington, D. C. The secretary, to whom all inquiries should be addressed is Professor Leverett S. Lyon, University of Chicago.

A brief examination of some of the subjects suggested by the Committee of Award will serve to indicate the possibilities of this prize competition. Financing Installment Sales, for example, is one of the questions in the list. This harks back to the time a few years ago when only a few merchandising concerns followed the practice of selling goods as was said by their competitors. "For a dollar down and a dollar a month for the rest of your life." A large proportion of automobile sales at present are made on the installment plan. Some banks are known to be organized largely for the financing of automobile purchases. This is characteristic of the change that has come about relative to many other articles and commodities. People are in growing numbers coming to think of their opportunities and obligations not so much in terms of lump sums as of expenditures spread over an extended period. Small dealers ordinarly are not equipped to finance installment sales. Hence special organizations are being formed to provide the required extension of credit. A study of this whole field is much to be desired.

Suggested for study also is the question of relations of trust companies to the reorganization of jeopardized business concerns. During the last twenty-five years, for example railroad corporations, owning about one-half of the total mileage of the United States have been subjected to the process of reorganization or readjustment. Judge Hough of the Southern District of New York has estimated that 50% of the corporations of to-day have gone through some form of reorganization. Trust Companies are coming to play a large part in the business of readjusting corporate financing to the changing cycles of prosperity and depression. They frequently represent the more important groups of investors and aggregations of capital. They possess a large personnel experienced in handling business in trust for others and acquainted with the technical requirements of corporations. A study of the functions performed by them in such activities will surely prove helpful.

Another subject suggested for study is "No-Par-Value-Stock." Already sixteen of the leading states have amended their corporation laws in such a way as to make the use of such stock possible. Its use offers certain advantages in that it does away with the discrepancy between par value and market value, and conveys to the investor definitely the idea that what he acquires is simply a fractional ownership in the holdings of the corporation. The use of this stock is likely to be widespread among public utilities, since in many states they are prohibited from selling their stock at less than par, and frequently the conditions on the money market are such that their stock will not bring par. However, with the use of "No-Par-Value-Stock" this difficulty is solved. A prominent public service corporation in Illinois recently issued a large block of "no-par" stock to met a situation of this kind. But it is to be noticed that the use of no-par stock creates some important and difficult new problems, legal, accounting, and financial, and, therefore, a thorough study of this problem should be particularly valuable at this time.

A fourth subject suggested for study is "Blue Sky" legislation. Most of the states have, in recent years, passed laws of this kind. But there is little uniformity in the laws, and in many cases the powers vested in the Secretary of State, the State Treasurer, or Banking Commissioner, who is entrusted with the enforcement of the law, are wide and might be arbitrarily used. It is an open question, to what extent these laws have protected investors, prevented fraud, and diverted the flow of new capital, or discouraged the undertaking of new enterprises. A careful study and investigation of this whole problem, such as these Prize Awards should stimulate, ought to prove very valuable.

Many other subjects are suggested as constituting promising and fruitful fields for research by competitors for these prizes. Among these may be mentioned the following:

The Reduction of Litigation Relating to Wills.

The Development and Control of Outlying Banks in Large Cities.

The Controversy over Stock Dividends.

All in all, this competition bids fair to attract widespread attention. The Chicago Trust Company is to be congratulated upon its vision in the establishment of these prizes it is to be hoped that its action will lead to the establishment of similar prizes by other leading corporations, for there are to-day many fields of business activity regarding which our information and data are scant and meager. It is the desire and expectation of the donors that the net result will prove to be a real contribution to the literature of economic science and of business.

RALPH E. HEILMAN,
Chairman, Committee of Award.

MEMORIAL DAY.

The scarlet poppy has been adopted by the American Legion for use on Memorial Day in honor of the men who fell in France. It will be worn by all members of the Legion.

The Legion suggests a similar use of the poppy on Memorial Day by all members of the public, and asks that we place this suggestion before the organizations in our membership. With this request we very gladly and sympathetically comply. It is our hope that organizations of business men will promote the wearing of poppies on May 30.

From local posts of the American Legion and from units of the American Legion Auxiliary poppies may be obtained during the week preceding Memorial Day.

Elliot H. Goodwin, Resident Vice-President.

FEDERAL EMPLOYEES—GARNISHMENT.

"Resolved, We endorse the principle of 'Garnishment and levy of execution on wages and salary of Civil Employees of the United States,' as contemplated in H. R. Bill No. 8570, presented to the 67th Congress of the United States by Hon. Leonidas C. Dyer."

This is one of the questions to receive consideration at the Eleventh Annual Meeting of the Chamber of Commerce, U. S. A., New York City, May 8, 9, 10.

DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE, WASHINGTON, D. C.

April 11, 1923.

To the Secretary:

Due to the war and the long continued impossibility on the part of the railways to finance the necessary betterments, both our production capacity and consuming demands have now advanced beyond our transportation facilities. The railway managers under the recent improved conditions are making great effort in finance and expansion of facilities to meet our necessities, but full recovery of lost ground must be slow and, if we are to maintain our present rate of productivity and employment, it is vital that there be coöperation with the railway management from both producing and consuming industries to secure the most efficient operation of the railroads.

The railways have asked for this coöperation, and the trades can make a tremendous contribution to the orderly march of our prosperity if they will undertake it seriously and in an organized fashion.

The principal directions in which such coöperation can be extended by the trades are:

1. The advance storage of their winter coal during the light consuming season—that is, from now until September 1, including the early movement of Lake traffic.

2. The loading of all cars to full capacity, their prompt loading and discharge.

3. Reduction of reconsignment shipments and restrictions of to order bills of lading.

4. Demands for no more cars from the railways than can be promptly used.

If we could secure the maximum efficiency in these directions we will have added more effective commodity movement than would be brought about by the addition of approximately 300,000 cars and 3,000 locomotives, and the addition of at least 10% to our track mileage and terminal facilities.

The importance of this lies in more than simply the maintenance of continuity of production and full supply of consumption, because any strangulation in movement of commodities through car shortages affects the profits of every individual manufacturer by interruption in his production, and furthermore, such strangulation affects price levels in the most definite fashion.

The full and smooth movement of all of the productivity of the country would be the greatest contribution that could be made at the present time in checking inflation or increase in price levels.

Therefore, I earnestly hope that you will undertake to definitely organize your association, to bring about this coöperation through your district or trade, and to establish coöperative contact with the railway executives concerned.

If we could secure unity of action on these questions between the shippers and the railways we would have made a greater contribution to continued prosperity and full employment than any direction I know of.

I would be glad to know your views as to organization that can be effected to this end in order that the Department may act as a clearing house of helpful dissemination of ideas in the matter.

Yours faithfully,
Herbert Hoover.

SUPERVISION AND CONTROL OF THE SMALL LOAN BUSINESS.

By Dr. Louis N. Robinson.

I feel that I have been roped into this investigation on false pretences. Mr. Watts was one of the men who roped me into it. He and his friends took me out and told me about some of the rough and ready loan men, and said, "Now, see here, you ought to look this business over, it needs investigation, a survey of existing conditions, people ought to know what the whole thing is." He didn't take the pains to tell me about any here present; if he had, I am inclined to think I would not have undertaken the task, because when I look at you and see how honest and sincere you are, it seems to me the chances are there is nothing to it. While I am digging into this problem, trying to find some justification for the loan business, you people here are going to justify its existence without me.

I used to read the Bible in the days when it was more or less fashionable, and I recall that passage that refers to the man with his hand to the plough who should not turn back. I am not going to turn back, for a little while anyhow. The survey is going forward as I was reminded by the remarks which one or two of you made to me when you came into this room, over the now famous questionnaire, wondering how on earth it was ever conceived, how difficult it was to fill out, the great number of questions asked and what was the point of it all. Well, just a word on that.

Several of you are helping to gather together, and perhaps to your sorrow, some information concerning the borrower, something that will tell who he is and what he is, and why he has to borrow, and other things that ought to be known. No doubt in every individual transaction you find out these facts when you are making the loan, but you ought to have this information about the whole group of borrowers so you can tell the general public what kind of a business you are doing, and why it is a vitally necessary business.

This phase of the investigation has already been started. I think there are probably 100 to 150, and I would like to have that many more, loan offices that are coöperating with me now in filling out the questionnaires. These went out the first of August, and I am getting returns now every day. The idea is to have the offices fill out these papers every two months for an entire year. We want to get a sample of the year's grist, that will include strikes, vacations, and all the multiplicity of things that affect the borrower. We are making an honest attempt to find out something about the borrower and the problems he has to face, but it will take some months yet before we have what we want in the way of material.

It seemed to me at the beginning that before I could be of any service to anyone, to you or to those whom you serve, that I ought to know something about the business, and I tried to find some account that would tell me about it and what has happened in the last eight or nine years. I have run across all kinds of scattered accounts but none that satisfied me, and so I decided to write one myself. I, at least, will be satisfied, whether you are or not! (Laughter.)

I have visited and have written to many of the old loan men, those old "loan sharks" you hear so much about, and I have found out some very interesting facts relating to the early history of the loan business. The story, as a whole, is one of the most inspiring tales of business I have ever run across, and I have taught economics for ten years. Here was a business run for years under cover, the real purpose of it misunderstood, full of evils, partly because it was misunderstood, suddenly brought out into the open and now progressed to the point where such a gathering as this is typical of its professional ethics and public standing. I doubt if any business can boast of a finer history.

I have tried my hand at writing this history. A rough outline is now in the hands of the chairman of a little committee of lenders, that is going over it, and another also in the hands of Mr. Ham. I hope in a few months to get these copies back and revise them on the basis of the criticisms I am sure will be made. I shall need your further help in completing it.

This summer two friends of mine, interested in economics, went to Europe, and I arranged to have them look into the loan business over there and to pick up some material for me. They have now returned, and they tell me the loan business flourishes over there as it does here. They found loan men in every country that they visited. One of these friends is now engaged in writing an account of the loan business in England, with some references to France, Germany and Italy.

In the last three or four weeks I have been visiting the different supervisors in the middle West, in New England and in New Jersey, and I expect ultimately to see them all. I want to learn their attitude, to find out what they think of the loan business, and to get their point of view as officials who are called upon to supervise this business. I have found one very interesting thing: Supervision varies from the most exacting kind in some States to practically nothing in other States where supervision is really only a name.

I would like to say a word now on the work of such an Association as yours. I realize that it may be perhaps in bad taste to talk about an Association to members of it. There is always the possibility one may unconsciously say something that will offend. I recall a story that illustrates this. A man who became disgusted with this life thought he would try another, so he went up to the attic of his home and hanged himself. The wife of an intimate friend of his decided to call on the bereaved widow. Before she left to pay her call of condolence, her husband said to her, "Now, Mary, be careful and don't say anything about her husband's death." So the neighbor went to cheer up the widow, and the two talked of everything under the sun except about the death of the husband. Finally they got to discussing the problem of laundry work, and the widow said, "I always have the greatest trouble in getting my clothes dried, the yard is so small." "Is that so?" said the visitor, "but look what a lovely attic you have for hanging things in!" (Laughter.)

I feel that such an Association as this can be of the greatest service to the loan business. There are many reasons why it can, but I shall mention only three. I once asked a man who had been in the loan business years ago about competition in the old days and he said, "Well, we didn't have any competition. As the business was then conducted, there was plenty of it for everyone and we didn't compete to any extent." Now I have studied very carefully the provisions of the Uniform Law, and as I understand it, the thought of those who formulated it was to bring the loan business out in the open by legalizing it, and to fix a rate that would make it possible for loan men to do business, trusting if the rate was too high, that competition would set in and reduce it. Now, I am not a prophet nor the son of a prophet, but sooner or later you are going to have competition. New concerns are now going into the small loan business every day. They may be conducting the business in a different fashion, but their competition is real and it is going to be greater, though I don't want to scare you. The minute you made this business a decent, respectable one, you invited other people to go into it. In the neighboring State of New Jersey there has been a tremendous increase in the volume of business.

Now what can a State Association do under such circumstances? It seems to me its purpose is not to kill competition. That is not what you want to do; it is a thing, I am sure, you will not try to do. What you can do is to see that this competition is carried on on a high plane, and that your competitors and the members of your own organization do not sink to the tooth and claw struggle for existence. It seems to me that you can build up a technique of business and a professional standing, that will prevent the lowering of standards in the loan business when strenuous competition does appear.

The uniform law provides for a State Supervisor of the loan business. In those States where there is little or no supervision lenders say: "We wish we had supervision." Why? It is the thing that helps the good lender; he is not afraid of it; he wants it. It holds up his hands. I can't say that I believe in all of the rules and regulations that I have seen in some States. Such complete regulation, such minute reporting, may constitute something of a check on the business. Initiative and the opportunity to change and to grow ought not to be taken away. Too much regulation and too much red tape may produce a condition of mind resembling that of the Philadelphia policeman. A taxicab driver in Philadelphia had as his fares a woman with a baby. They were held up in a traffic jam and the woman got out and left the baby in the cab. After some little time the taxicab driver stopped and found that he was taking along the baby but no mother or caretaker. He hailed a policeman and said to him, "What am I going to do with this baby?" For a long time the policeman couldn't decide what was to be done under the circumstances. Finally he took out his book of rules and thumbed the pages for a while, and then said, "I have it, it comes under the lost and found column." The driver said, "Well, what does it say?" The policeman, consulting the book again, replied, "You take the baby to the central police station, and if nobody calls for it in twenty-four hours, it is yours." (Laughter.)

Now, any kind of regulation which would compel a loan manager to consult his book of rules every time he made a loan would surely be ridiculous. On the other hand, it is just as ridiculous to find as I have found, such loose supervision in a State that from the published report it would appear that the lenders had been allowed to deduct their profits in order to get at their expenses.

I, too, have been a public official. I know what public officials can do if they have a chance, but they seldom have the chance. I don't believe that you are going to get any public official who is going to tell you how to run your business. How could they—put in office one year, and put out the next? They don't know what you know about the business, they don't know the good in it, and they don't know the evil in it. Who is going to tell them? Ultimately I think you will have to do it. I think it is your duty to think out how the State can best serve you and the public and then to ask it to do its duty. The simple truth of the matter is that you can do much to help the State Supervisors collect proper data that would be useful to the State, useful to the public, and useful to the business. Some of their reports are a joke. I don't mind saying that to you, though I wouldn't want to say it to them.

The third reason, and a valuable reason it is, why an Association such as yours should be formed and should go on, strengthening your contacts and working to make the business the finest kind of a business that it is possible to make of it is because the public does not yet understand it.

Mr. Wood and I were just now discussing some problems of the small loan business. Mr. Wood remarked that it ought to be under the supervision of the banking department in every State, as it was a real financial business. There is not a thing that I have found that does not justify this point of view, but what does the public think? The truth is that it doesn't think. It generally acts from impulse, condemning or praising what it does not understand.

I wonder if you ever thought what the economic condition of your clients is. You loan to the great working class of America. What do these people have as security? They have a little furniture and a little jewelry, perhaps furs. They have also their own good name and that of their friends. They have their future wages. Not one of these things can be utilized in obtaining a loan from an ordinary commercial bank. Our banks are for the business men, not for the wage-earning class of our population. And why should it be disreputable to lend to this class of persons? It shouldn't be. The whole thing simmers down to this: that in this country, where there has been such great opportunity in the past for everyone to get on in the world, we as a nation have not considered the necessity of supplying this great class of people with proper credit facilities. They have been supplied, but how? By people who saw an opportunity to make money. These have supplied the working class in spite of the law. Can they be blamed? It is not the gentle types of people who do the pioneer work of the world. It seems to be that if we had had a little public interest in the welfare of the common working man, you men wouldn't now have to justify your position in the business world. But the fact is that it is still necessary to do this, and a State Association can be one of the most valuable agents in this work.

I think it may interest some of you to know that the Russell Sage Foundation is considering taking over this survey. For many reasons it would be a fine thing to have them take it over and to go on with the work because of the fact that if the work is done by such an organization this of itself would give it a standing not to be denied by any who were inclined to doubt the good motives behind anything which the lenders themselves might do. Nevertheless, if the Foundation does not take over the task, those now in charge have decided to go on with it themselves because they believe, as I am sure you believe, that any task or any work which is honestly done, scientifically done, without fear or favor, but entirely in the service of truth, will bear on its face sufficient evidence to convince any one of its reliability. It is only those articles which are half truth and half propaganda, that sooner or later fall into bad repute, and we hope that we can turn out something that will bear on its face the evidence of its reliability.

To-night I have made a report of progress. There are several other phases of this survey which will, if all goes well, be undertaken. Those of you who were at New York at the National Convention, may remember the outlines of the survey that I thought ought to be undertaken. But I will not discuss the subject further to-night, but will tell you more one year from to-day, if this supper doesn't ruin my digestion.

CREDIT UNIONS AND LICENSED INDUSTRIAL LENDERS.

By Reginald Heber Smith.

Each year the necessity for providing legitimate banking facilities for the average man becomes clearer. The increasing number of persons who have given their attention to this economic problem know that the regular commercial banks do not afford, and do not pretend to afford, borrowing facilities to the man who wants a hundred or two hundred dollars and who has no stock to pledge as collateral.

The licensed industrial lenders do make it possible for the average man to borrow when the need or emergency arises.

It is no longer denied by well-informed persons that the licensed industrial lender performs this necessary service and performs it well.

From time to time it is stated that some other type of agency might perform this service better. Three such other agencies have been discussed.

First, it was thought that semi-philanthropic agencies would fill the need. It soon appeared that it was not feasible to secure enough capital because these semi-philanthropic agencies were organized with the understanding that those who invested their money would receive only nominal or limited dividends on their investment. As Walter Hilborn, Esq., has stated, "these semi-philanthropic agencies, while they have rendered an important service, have not been adequate to cover the needs of all small borrowers."

Second, the Morris Plan companies came into prominence. Year by year these companies have tended very largely to drift out of the small loan field into an intermediate field, making loans somewhat larger than "small loans" and yet smaller than the average bank commercial loans. They have performed a service and filled a need but they have not met this particular need; that is, the demand for small loans, which are loans of $300 or less and which average around one hundred dollars.

Most recently, the credit unions have announced themselves as the panacea for this ancient problem. An association that issues propaganda in behalf of credit unions has made wide claims as to their success and it has been difficult to check up and ascertain how far these claims were supported by facts.

The United States Bureau of Labor Statistics in its Bulletin No. 314 gives interesting facts about Credit Unions in America.

It seems reasonably clear that the credit unions may become a useful adjunct to our machinery for providing adequate small loan service but it is equally clear that their field is restricted and that taking the country as a whole they are to-day affording an extremely limited service to necessitous borrowers. It is entirely consistent to wish the credit union movement well and to express the hope that it may develop to its maximum usefulness and at the same time to insist that the credit unions are not now, and probably never will be, a satisfactory or complete substitute for the industrial licensed lender.

The following facts are taken from the United States Bureau of Labor Bulletin above referred to.

Of the forty-eight states in the Union only eleven have enacted legislation authorizing the formation of credit unions. These eleven states are Massachusetts, New York, Texas, New Hampshire, Wisconsin, Rhode Island, Oregon, North Carolina, South Carolina, Utah and Nebraska.

In Texas two rural credit unions have been formed; one dissolved before doing any business and the other has never done any business.

In Oregon, two credit unions were organized, both in Portland. The first was suspended, before it had operated a month, by the banking department and was later dissolved by the courts. The second has never transacted any business.

In New Hampshire there are two credit unions. One is successful. The second was organized in 1921 and no report of its work was available when the U. S. Bureau of Labor published its Bulletin in November, 1922.

In Rhode Island there are two credit unions and both appear successful.

In Massachusetts, New York, and North Carolina the credit unions movement has obtained more substantial growth. But aside from these three states it would appear that in all the remaining forty-five states there are only four legally-authorized active credit unions.

In North Carolina the credit unions are composed almost entirely of farmers. To learn of the credit union as a solution for the problem in industrial communities it is necessary to look at Massachusetts and New York.

It may be only a coincidence but it strikes the mind of any student of small loans conditions that in both these states the licensed lenders are not allowed to charge the scientific rate of interest of 3½% per month provided by the Uniform Small Loans Act. The industrial licensed lender is thus discouraged or prevented from doing business in these states. It is an interesting question what would happen if the licensed lender were permitted to operate under the provisions of the Uniform Small Loans Act so that there would be really free competition. The rate in Massachusetts to-day is 3% and when the proposal has been made to adopt the Uniform Small Loans Act rate of 3½%, the credit unions have been vigorous in their opposition.

Credit unions differ from licensed industrial lenders in three ways: (1) They may receive deposits; (2) they loan only to members, and (3) they may make large as well as small loans.

In 1921 there were 81 credit unions in Massachusetts. Their aggregate capital was $2,133,000 and their deposits were $1,587,000.

During 1921 they loaned $3,003,765 to 12,180 borrowers. The average loan was $272.12. From this fact it is apparent if they make many of the smaller $50, $75, and $100 loans they must also be making loans that are over $300; that is, out of the small loan class altogether. No figures classifying the loans as to size are given in the Bulletin.

What is at once the strength and the limitation of the credit unions is the fact that they lend only to members. In the United States, so far as I can learn, there is only one small credit union that attempts to make loans to the public generally.

A credit union is dependent on a homogeneous membership.

It can operate easily only in a small town or community where people know each other or among the people of one race who know each other or among the employees of one company who know each other. Thus it will be difficult, if not impossible, for the credit union to be developed into a general small loans agency that, like a bank, can serve all the public and not merely its own members.

This requisite that the members should know each other, involves the fact that it should be known when a member borrows, how much he borrows, and why he borrows. These conditions have struck a snag in the American temperament. The American normally considers his borrowing to be purely a private business matter of his own, no one's affair but his own.

As the Bulletin states:

"Loans are made for productive purposes alone and as emergency arises, and never for frivolous or extravagant purposes. Therefore, a borrower must disclose the purpose for which the loan is desired, and this is probably the principal reason why credit unions are not more popular in this country. The average American objects to having others interfere with his private affairs, and if he wants a certain thing he feels capable of deciding for himself whether it is a luxury or a necessity, and he objects to laying his personal matters before intermeddling outsiders in order to borrow a little money. On the other hand, it is essential for the safety of the society that such facts be disclosed, that a severe penalty follow deceptions on the part of the borrower, and that the committee be held to strict accountability for their actions in loaning money contrary to the by-laws."

Finally it appears that both in New York and Massachusetts it has been very difficult to find efficient persons who are willing to serve as officers. This is inevitable in view of the fact that officers are paid little, if anything, for their work.

Inefficiency leads any organization into difficulties and in the case of Great Eastern Credit Union vs. Cooper, the New York Supreme Court, Appellate Division, ruled that the credit union had violated the usury law.

The need for small loans is a public need. The industrial licensed lenders are filling that need wherever the law permits them to operate under suitable conditions. The credit unions within their own sphere are likewise filling a part of that need. Both are attacking the same problem from different, but not inconsistent, points of view. A proper sense of public spirit should bring the two together, to work in harmony against their common enemy, and the public enemy—the high-rate lender, the extortioner, the loan shark.

It is a demonstrated fact that the industrial licensed lenders are ready and willing to coöperate with any proper agency for the solution of this problem. It must be a matter for regret if the credit unions place their personal interest before the public interest, hold themselves aloof, and refuse to join in the campaign to secure adequate small loans facilities —whether through industrial lender, credit union, or other lawful agency— for all people throughout the United States.

INDIANA.

The Eighth Annual Convention of the Indiana Association was held at the Lincoln Hotel, Indianapolis, May 16 and 17. The program for Wednesday, May 16, included: Address of Welcome; Roll Call, Reading of Minutes, Unfinished Business, Committees' Reports, Treasurer's Report, Secretary's Report, Adoption of Uniform Blanks by the Association; "How Can a $100.000.00 Office be established in Fifteen Months?" Clarence E. Clift, Beneficial Loan Society, Indianapolis; "Is Getting the Wife's Signature at Home a Good Policy on New Loans?" Sydney F. Smith, American Loan Company, Evansville; "Possibilities of Group Advertising." George W. Farrington, Commonwealth Loan Co., Indianapolis; "Advertising."

On the evening of May 16 a banquet was held, followed by a dance and other entertainment.

On Thursday, May 17, H. E. Arnett, Legal Loan Company, Marion, read a paper on "New Types of Competition," and Aruthur R. Dana, Chicago, told about Dr. Louis N. Robinson's Investigation of the Small Loan Business. Maurice S. Kent, of the Security Mortgage Loan Company, Indianapolis, discussed the mighty interesting subject, "How to Decrease Your Losses on Account of Skips." Then Elmer Johnson, Clerk of the Credit & Loan Department, Bank Commissioner's Office, Indianapolis, gave his view of "What Number of Days Constitutes a Month?"

Some of the subjects taken up in general discussion include the following: "Can an attorney collect his fee for collecting an account from the borrower without obtaining a foreclosure judgment? Is it advisable to loan a wife without the husband's signature? Some plan where all companies figure interest the same. Elevating the business. Enlightening the public that the loan business is a commercial institution operating at a nominal profit. How long should a loan be permitted to run before requiring principle payment? The advantage of belonging to the State and American Association. Will a small ad bring the same results as large ads if all are uniform? How to close a loan? Would it be better for the loan business to limit loans to $200 00? Bankruptcy."

The Committees which handled the Convention were as follows: Ladies Reception Committee: Mrs. J. H. Aufderheide, Mrs. W. G. Chandler, Mrs. George C. Grinsteiner. Reception Committee: Fred J. Schurmann, Lee L. Bishop, William R. Hancock. Publicity Committee: Austin C. Broughman, George W. Farrington, Clarence E. Clift, Maurice S. Kent.

LEGAL SURVEY.

Dr. Louis N. Robinson, who is making the Survey of the Small Loan Business for the Russell Sage Foundation, has informed us that arrangements have just been made for the legal part of this Survey. Mr. Walter S. Hilborn has agreed to undertake the study of the chattel and salary loan businesses. Mr. Frank R. Hubachek will collaborate with him in preparing the final report. The two attorneys of the Provident Loan Society of New York, Mr. Raby and Mr. Reif, will make the legal survey of pawnbroking. The Provident Loan Society of New York, it will be recalled, is the concern with which Mr. Aruthur H. Ham is connected. All of these men are well known to lenders. Their high professional standing and familiarity with the work constitute an excellent guarantee of the quality of the work. When completed, the whole Survey will be a mine of information to the lenders and ought to do much to give the small loan business a firm standing in the financial world.

MARYLAND.

In the Board Room of the M & M Building, on the 8th at 8 o'clock, Chairman C. A. Gardner promptly called the May business and educational meeting to order.

Among those present, were, J. Edward Richardson, and C. A. Gardner, United Finance and Security Corp.; J. E. Turner and Herman Lappe, Community Finance Service, Inc.; H. C. Moore, G. W. Stancill, and Wm. J. Delcher, Jr., Peoples Finance Service Co., successors to Chesapeake Loan Co.; F. W. Ferry, C. S. Thompson and Wm. M. Keller, Beneficial Loan Society; Lewis F. Eckhart, L. F. Brust and Roy T. Baseman, Peoples Loan Society; W. F. Oliver, Jr., F. M. Ebert and C. R. Hathaway, Household Finance Service Co., successors to Household Loan Co.; E. E. Hougham, Coöperative Loan & Investment Co.; H. T. Mattingly, Reliance Guarantee Co.; Lee H. Pumphrey, Commercial Guarantee Co.; Thos. B. O'Connell, R. A. Long, Surety Guarantee Co.; V. D. Moss and A. L. Wick, Philadelphia, Pa., and Dr. L. A. Robinson, Swarthmore, Penna., being our only visitors.

E. S. Armstrong, Industrial Loan Society, successors to Nat'l Equitable Investment Co., and J. D. Goldrick, Union Loan Co.; R. L. Smith, Reliance Guarantee Co., and C. Harry King, Mrs. M. A. Stevenson of Clarke & Co., were reported absent.

W. F. Oliver, Jr., of the Membership Committee submitted the Standard Finance Co., 110 Equitable Building, Baltimore, Md., for membership. This being seconded by Mr. E. E. Hougham and unanimously carried, the Secretary was ordered to secure the dues from this company and present them with a Membership Certificate, copy of the by-laws and any literature that we have that may be of material help to them.

Before writing the minutes of this meeting, the Secretary transacted this business, securing the check for $20 covering dues for a period of one year from the Standard Finance Co., as stated.

Dr. L. A. Robinson who is making a survey of the small loan business being called upon by Chairman C. A. Gardner, gave the members a most interesting talk on money lending conditions covering many sections of our country. He also impressed on the members minds that they must coöperate most closely with the Banking Department in order to help police the business. At present over 200 offices are coöperating with him in taking questionnaires of loans. It was received with considerable surprise when Dr. Robinson informed us that there was no fixed rate of interest covering loans in England, no usury laws. Dr. Robinson spoke about the inefficiency of any one attempting to enter the small loan business without having a little education on the matter, for instance, he recited a condition in a Middle Western State where one lender made a $70,000 loan to a manufacturing concern at 3% per month. The manufacturer through some unforseen means of financing had been able to return all of the money but $3000 to date. The consensus of opinion among the far sighted licensees in that particular state was that it was not healthy business to loan over $300 to any one individual. At present he understands that they are few brokers who are making loans over and above $300 at this rate of interest.

He also informed the members that he received a very pleasing report from the Banking Commissioner as to how we are conducting our business. It is evident the Maryland Asso. is mentally awake every minute in coöperating with the Banking Department, in helping to police the business in order to keep the small loan business on the high plane that it belongs.

Lewis F. Eckhart, of the Peoples Loan Society, in all of his magnanimity of mind delivered to us a wonderful message in his paper as follows:

"How I Feel We are Going to Benefit by a Central Exchange Bureau."

The goodness of any exchange bureau can be approached from many angles. I will attempt only to touch on some of the high spots, namely lessening our risks, and improving our accounts from the point of decreasing slows, and looking toward the perpetuation of the industrial loan business.

Through the operation of an exchange bureau, where all or a large majority of the licensees in any one town are members, enables the manager of an office to be decidedly more sure of the business put on from day to day in that it is done with the positive knowledge that no additional loans are being carried by the borrower. When this is the case it enables the office to render a better service to the borrower in that other obligations such as store accounts, doctor bills and so forth in many cases can be centralized by a loan of a sufficient amount being made to pay off such obligations.

It is a known fact that many of us must be "saved from ourselves." It therefore follows that if the average borrower with whom we come in contact is allowed to continue to have at his disposal the avenue through which a number of loans can be secured that in a great number of cases borrowers will take advantage of this, and obligate themselves for a number of loans and where the total amount is wholly out of proportion to their income. And as all of us know it is merely a matter of a few months before such a man meets financial disaster. Had it been impossible, and such would be the case with a properly conducted exchange bureau, for such a borrower to obtain this multitude of loans, then such a man would continue to be a desirable credit risk and would have continued as a profitable borrower to some one licensee instead of a loss to a number of them.

When a loan is made with the positive knowledge that there are no other outstanding one, after the transaction is closed such a loan is conducive to a serenity of temper and a pleasant disposition. The contrary is the case when loans are made where there is a doubt in the mind of the lender as to the obligations of such a borrower to other offices.

From the standpoint of perpetuating the business and building up good will in the community, it can be seen that the many methods and devices used in collecting hard and undesirable accounts made so by a borrower attempting to carry several loans at the same time, when the total indebtednes is out of proportion to income reacts against creditors separate and apart from the monetary loss when the critical public sees only the side of the borrower. The public believes that the borrower is paying interest at the rate of 3½% a month on the total of the loans he may have. The public does not realize that in a great majority of such cases that no interest is being paid and no principal is being returned to the lender. In my opinion from the angle of taking away from the public and those who mold the opinion of the man you meet in the street, this weapon with which they are ever ready to flay the loan man claiming it is the borrower who is being down-trodden without any thought of the loss the loan man must take.

Another class familiar to all of us is the man who can pay but will not do so without considerable trouble and expense to the office, if he pays at all. For the reason that he knows he can go elsewhere and borrow money in an emergency, he therefore has no regard for his credit with the office with which he is dealing. If this avenue was closed, and undoubtedly many of us have slow paying accounts now of this variety, they would take care of their obligations with a reasonable degree of promptness if upon making application to another office they found it would be impossible to secure other loans unless the one was paid off either by the borrower himself or out of the proceeds of the loan he is seeking.

The doubling up evil in Baltimore is a grave one. This is known to all of us We have it within our power to alleviate this condition entirely. A central exchange bureau undoubtedly will make history of this unhealthy condition, if we will but look to the future of the business. In conducting our offices it is our desire to do so with a minimum of expense. If our several investments can be bettered this means that risks we assume in making loans will be lessened. When we lessen the risk we reduce the expense in handling the business in any one office.

All of us maintain a collection department and the expense incident thereto is heavy and eats into the profits to an extent that is sometimes alarming. An exchange bureau undoubtedly will lessen this collection expense for the reason that we will have fewer "Slows."

All of us have made loans when we felt there was a question about the risk being too great particularly as to the indebtedness of such borrowers with other offices. If we could by the simple operation of submitting such names to a central exchange bureau ascertaining whether or not such borrowers were indebted to other offices, it can be seen that there would be no question in the minds of the men as to the risks attached to such loans, and in addition know that not a single one of our accounts could go to other offices and "load up."

This paper being written upon one of the foremost problems of our business of to-day, the Chairman ordered the Secretary to spread it upon the minutes of this meeting.

The Union Credit Reporting Co. affiliated with the Merchants bureau of the M & M Asso. has agreed to run the exchange for our association for a period of one year for $2000. The Exchange Committee have decided, provided at least 12 offices will join. The charge will be $2.00 per 1000 based on the average loan balance for the past 6 months covering each office. This plan being looked upon with favor by a majority of the members. Mr. Moss offered a motion that a committee be chosen to draw up the rules and by-laws covering the exchange and have authority to act for the entire body by signing a contract with the Union Credit Reporting Co. commencing the exchange at an early date. This motion being seconded by Mr. Wick, and carried by every man on the floor the Chairman named the following Committee, to immediately get action on this important matter. Messrs. Hougham, Mattingly, Oliver and Gardner.

Owing to the lateness of the hour and there appearing no further business to transact, on motion of Mr. Mattingly, seconded by Mr. Pumphrey the members adjourned. In closing the minutes for this meeting, your Chairman wishes to impress it upon your minds that the association at our monthly meetings is called to order promptly at 8 o'clock.

H. C. Moore,
Secretary.

WHY LOUISVILLE'S LOCATION GUARANTEES A MAXIMUM CONVENTION ATTENDANCE.

Here is the reason:—

If eight men started from their respective homes in New Orleans, Dallas, Omaha, Minneapolis, Toronto, New York City, Charlestown and Jacksonville, and traveled by the shortest and quickest routes until they met, they would shake hands three yards north of the Custom House on Fourth Street, Louisville, Ky., near a fire plug and a few feet from the Seelbach Hotel, the Headquarters of the next National Convention of the American Industrial Lenders Association.

ILLINOIS.

The regular quarterly meeting of the Illinois Industrial Lenders Association, was held at the Morrison Hotel, on the afternoon and evening of April 27, 1923.

The afternoon session was called to order by Chairman Woll about 4 o'clock, there being about thirty members present.

Roll Call was dispensed with and minutes of the last previous meeting were approved as published.

Under call for report by Committee Chairman, Treasurer Lynch gave a detailed itemization of the Association expenses from January 1, 1922 to date, which shows a balance of $1,600.00 with some heavy expenses to be incurred during the next several months and very little money due the Association from its members until July 1924, as a great many of the 1923 dues have been paid in advance, in compliance with a recent request of the Executive Committee.

The Grievance Committee reported on their meeting with Mr. Blazer and Mr. Miller, representing Mr. Blumberg of Terre Haute, Indiana, and the matter seems to have been settled very satisfactorily.

Membership Committee reported the resignation of Mr. Philip L. Blazer, of Lincoln, Ill., on account of his having sold his business, and the taking on of a new member, Mr. C. J. Schroder of the Illinois Loan Company, Rock Island.

The members of the Legislative Committee made a very interesting report which leaves no doubt of the great activity and tireless efforts this Committee is putting forth in behalf of the Licensees of this State.

To assist Attorney Napier in his ever-increasing activities in our behalf in connection with business and social organizations, legislative and remedial bodies, it was thought best after considerable discussion and was unanimously carried by proper motion, that the Association supply him with stationery for correpondence, an index system and a library cabinet to build up a reference library consisting of all the literature obtainable which is relevant to the Industrial Loan business.

The matter of buying salaries, which promises to become quite an Institution all over the country, was discussed and the general opinion is that the various offices are being opened by the same firm which is a Southern concern. Any information in relation to this new business should be communicated to either Attorney Napier or Mr. Turgrimson.

Mr. Robinson of Galesburg, was at the meeting and took up with Attorney Napier, in open meeting, the matter of notes being endorsed for borrowers at the Bank by non-licensees.

After some further general discussion, the meeting was adjourned until after dinner which was served in the Rose Room and the evening session was opened by a talk from Mr. Napier regarding the membership drive of the Chicago Association of Commerce. Every one was urged to speak well for that organization and refer any potential members to membership workers on the drive which is being conducted this week.

Mr. Rolfes of the Commercial Guaranty made a brief talk on advertising which opened a very interesting discussion lasting until adjournment at 9:30.

There were sixty-seven present at the evening session.

L. T. Baker,
Secretary.

IOWA.

At a recent meeting of the Iowa Association in Des Moines, the following persons were elected officers for the ensuing year: T. J. Harrison, Waterloo, President; M. J. Collins, Fort Madison, Vice-President; Charles Dehnert, Des Moines, Secretary; and William De Beaulieu, Des Moines, Treasurer.

OFFICE OF THE ATTORNEY GENERAL.

Harrisburg, Pa., May 4, 1923.

Mr. G. H. Orth,
Chief, Bureau of Private Banks,
Banking Department,
Harrisburg, Pa.

Sir:

This Department has your request for an opinion as to whether or not the Financial Assistance Union, Incorporated, of Pittsburgh, is such a corporation as would come within the provisions of the Act of 1907, P. L. 446, or the Act of 1921, P. L. 374, or either of them.

I have considered the purchase agreement which the Financial Assistance Union has submitted to you, together with the statement of conditions which they propose to impose upon the purchasers of their "One Thousand Dollar Gold Debenture Bond." These papers show that the Company proposes to issue a One Thousand Dollar Gold Debenture Bond, for which the purchaser agrees to pay $910.00 in weekly payments. The agreement to purchase does not contain the conditions under which the purchase is to be completed. The bonds are not sold for the purpose of financing any person or corporation engaged in a manufacturing, mercantile or other business dealing in tangible assets.

I am satisfied that the Financial Assistance Union comes within the corporations intended to be licensed under the Act of 1907. The Section of this Act applying to this corporation is as follows:

"That any and every * investment company, loan company, * security company, or any other similiar company, * organized under the laws of any other State * who shall engage within this Commonwealth, either directly or indirectly, in the negotiation, offering for sale, or sale of any bond or bonds, debentures, certificate or certificates, scrip, mortgage or mortgages; or of receiving single payments, regular installment payments, or contributions to be held or used in accordance with any plan of accumulation or investment; or corporations or associations who assume the payment of fixed obligations, and issue in connection therewith a contract based upon payments being made upon installments or single payment plan, under which all or any part of the total amount received is to be prepaid at some future time upon contract issued, either with or without profit, shall be deemed a foreign corporation, under the meaning of this act: ****."

The Act thereupon proceeds to require that all such corporations shall be licensed, with which procedure you are entirely familiar.

To sum up, therefore, I am of the opinion that the Financial Assistance Union, Incorporated, may not lawfully carry on a business such as it proposes without being licensed by your Department under the aforesaid Act of 1907, P.L. 446.

Yours very truly,
(Signed) STERLING G. MCNEES,
Special Deputy Attorney General.

EDUCATIONAL ADVERTISING SAMPLES.

WHY——
THE SMALL-LOAN BUSINESS?
What is the Rate Allowed?

The scientific or fair rate allowed under the Uniform Small-Loan Law, on small loans is 3½% per month on the unpaid balance.

In the instance of a $100 loan, the borrower receives $100. He pays no fees, no commissions nor are there any deductions made. Such a loan costs as follows:

$100 for one month		Interest $3.50
88 " " "	$12 paid on principal	" 3.08
80 " " "	8 " " "	" 2.80
72 " " "	8 " " "	" 2.52
64 " " "	8 " " "	" 2.24
56 " " "	8 " " "	" 1.96
48 " " "	8 " " "	" 1.68
40 " " "	8 " " "	" 1.40
32 " " "	8 " " "	" 1.12
24 " " "	8 " " "	" .84
16 " " "	8 " " "	" .56
8 " " "	8 " " "	" .28

Total cost of $100 loan for 12 months $21.98
Total cost of loan if paid within thirty days .... $ 3.50

This rate is fair to the borrower. It assures him the highest type of service and careful, courteous supervision of all financial transactions. It provides for his needs, provides state supervision and renders a needed service on a protected and business basis.

This rate is fair to the lender. It affords him an adequate return for his capital invested. It gives him ample reward for the risk involved. It renders sufficient return to cover the heavy overhead, due to investigation, organization and administration. It returns a fair and reasonable margin of profit.

This rate is fair to both borrower and lender. It eliminates all fees, fines and charges. It puts the loaning business on a stable legalized basis and under State supervision.

"Of course this 3½% seems a tremendous rate of interest for money, but we are dealing with a very practical question. The loans are small in amount and extend for a short period of time in view of which it is my judgment that a 3½% per month rate is a just one."

To them do not analyze the small-loan business, 3½% per month may sound usurious. But we must remember that we are confronted with a condition, not a theory. Loaning on wages is a precarious occupation and high rates of interest are necessary.

Further information on the small-loan business will be published in this space next Sunday.

WHY——
THE SMALL-LOAN BUSINESS?
The Mission of the Money Lender.

Let the people who have cast reflections on the loan business follow us one day and they will be surprised when they see the tragedies that have been averted by the loan association.

The first stop is a small house on the outskirts. The man has just returned to work after several months of unemployment. He owes back rent. The landlord has served notice to vacate. There is no money to pay the rent he owes and not any to pay down on another house. One hundred dollars retains the house and prevents his furniture from being thrown into the street. He is enabled to work more efficiently because his mind is relieved of financial troubles.

Then we drive to a better neighborhood. This man wants to lay in his winter's coal, by paying cash, gives more business to the coal man, who always needs more money in the summer.

The next place is a man with a large family, barred from flats on account of children, is compelled to buy a small home, but needs another hundred dollars to complete the first payment.

Next is a widow who is paying for her home by keeping roomers. Her roomers are out of work and can't pay, her payments on the home are in arrears, she has to pay up at once or lose her home.

Next is a small business man who borrowed money several years ago to go into business, bought heavily, and needs money immediately to tide him over and keep his credit good.

These cases and many others are only proof that the loan Associations extend credit to people when they need it most and by so doing have kept many a home fire burning and inmates contented.

The legalized, sound, square-dealing, loan association has not only kept the industrial workers pacified while business and national conditions were being adjusted but it has helped to stimulate business just enough to make the readjustment plans carry with the smallest amount of trouble and suffering. It has kept a certain amount of money in circulation that is beneficial to all kinds of business.

Further information on the small-loan business will be published in this space next Saturday.

WHY——
THE SMALL-LOAN BUSINESS?
Here In Sioux City.

The Provident Loan Association, located in the Iowa Building, was incorporated in 1912. It has an authorized capital of $200,000.00. This Association made 2,397 separate loans during the year 1922 aggregating an amount in excess of $250,000.00. The size of these loans ranged from $10 to $300. The state law forbids a larger loan than $300. Sixty-four per cent. of the total loans made by the Provident last year were in amounts of $26 to $150. This company makes no charge for revenue stamps and collects no filing or recording fees. All loans of over $200 are made at 3% per month, thus saving the borrowers several thousand dollars.

On loans of less than $200, the Provident charges 3½% interest per month, but only on the unpaid balance; no compounding.

Without full knowledge of the business, its risk and expense, 3½% interest per month may sound excessive. Especially if a thousand dollars were loaned on good security at 42% we would think it rank extortion. But if we judge fairly, it is shown that a thousand dollars loaned at 3½% interest per month to twenty different individuals located in various parts of the city would not result in a "shylock" transaction from which enormous profits were made.

Actual experience shows that out of twenty loans of $50 each, $30 would never be repaid. The expense of investigating, collecting and administration prevent any profit to be made on the smaller loans even at the monthly rate of 3½%.

Last year the Provident made 1,000 loans of amounts of less than $50, which did not pay their cost per loan. Despite this fact, the Provident did not refuse an application that was imperative, for amounts of $10 to $50.

The profits, or dividends of the Provident are limited to 8 per cent. on common stock and 7 per cent. on preferred stock. In some years the dividends have not been earned. It is only on the larger loans that profits are made and dividends paid.

The Provident Loan Association is owned by Sioux City business men. It conducts its business on a legitimate basis under the supervision of the Iowa State Banking Department and under the provisions of the Iowa Loan Law.

The Provident has saved thousands of dollars to small borrowers. Its business is a necessity. It has a certain defined mission to fulfiill and a certain worthy constituency to serve. That it is growing is but evidence of its need in this community.

Further information on the small-loan business will be published in this space next Saturday.

WHY——
THE SMALL-LOAN BUSINESS?
Is the Rate Too High?

The oft repeated question is, "Why should small loans bear a rate of interest so much higher than that at which larger loans are customarily made" There are several valid reasons.

First—The risk on these loans is relatively greater. The duration of the loan is larger than the ordinary bank loan. The security is of a character not usually acceptable to commercial banks.

Second—Operating expense is high because the amount of each loan is small. It must be collected in monthly installments. Investigation of the reliability of borrowers must be made with greater care than in the case of bank loans.

Third—The lending capacity of a small-loan association is limited to its cash capital on which it must pay dividends. The lending capacity of a bank includes not only its capital, but the deposits of its customers on which it does not pay dividends. Consequently an interest charge of 6 per cent. on all loans made by the bank will produce a profit much larger than 6 per cent. would produce on its capital alone.

These facts show why small-loan agencies, in order to remain in business, must charge rates that will yield enough to meet inevitable losses and relatively high operating expenses as well as a fair return on invested capital.

It follows that it is essential to the life of the small-loan business that a much higher rate of interest be permitted for small loans than is prescribed for bank loans.

The small-loan business deals with a distinct kind of enterprise which requires special treatment.

Why 3½% a month instead of any other charge? The answer is not so simple, but it is satisfactory. We are seeking a rate which will interest legitimate capital to satisfy the small-loan requirements and small-loan service. It has not yet been demonstrated that commercial capital will enter the small-loan field if a lower rate is authorized.

We know that wherever the Uniform Law has been enacted the small-loan needs of the State have been more adequately met and the business placed upon a dignified plane. We know that in some States when less than 3½% is authorized, the small-loan need is not adequately met and service to the small borrower is not rendered.

Further information on the small-loan business will be published in this space next Sunday.

NEW JERSEY.

This is Secretary Alberse's account of the annual meeting of the New Jersey Association held in Trenton, March 15th.

State Chairman, S. H. Vogel; Treasurer, J. V. Long; Secretary, P. L. Alberse; Peoples Loan Co., J. C. Standard Loan Co., J. C. Peoples Finance Co., J. C. Peoples Finance Co., Newark; W. A. Dunn Co., Paterson; Protective Investment Co., Paterson; Trenton L. & R. Co., Trenton; Liberty Finance Co., Hoboken; Equitable Industrial Loan Soc., Newark; Community Finance Service, Newark; Community Finance Service, J. C., Community Finance Service, Camden; Beneficial Loan Soc., Newark; Beneficial Loan Soc., J. C., Beneficial Loan Soc., Elizabeth; Beneficial Loan Soc., Trentton; Max Knobloch Loan Co., Newark; United Finance & Security Co., J. C., American Loan Co., Newark., North Hudson Loan Co., W. Hoboken; Remedial Loan Co., Paterson; Gibraltar Loan Soc., Newark; Community Finance Service, Atlantic City; American Finance Co., Perth Amboy; Bergen County Loan Assn., Hackensack; American Equity Corp. Trenton; Beneficial Loan Soc., Camden; Past State Chairman Whitstone, Mr. Moore and John F. Scheffenig.

The meeting was called to order at 10:30 A. M. The delegates were welcomed by the Hon. Frederick C. Breidenbach, Mayor of the city of Newark.

During the morning session reports of officers were received and adopted.

Treasurer Long announced that there was a balance of approximately $900.00 on hand to date.

The following committee reports were read:—Legislative, Mr. Moore; Executive, A. J. Simonson; Entertainment, Mr. Irish; Publicity and Membership Committee reports laid over until the afternoon session. A number of valuable papers were read.

Convention luncheon was served at 12 o'clock.

During the afternoon session Mr. F. B. Cutter gave an illustrated lecture on "What Protects Your Securities." Mr. C. H. Chaney gave a demonstration on "standard partition equipment for loan offices."

Nominating committee being prepared to make their report, did so. The following were then elected members of the Executive Committee:—S. H. Vogel; P. L. Alberse; J. V. Long; C. H. Watts; J. W. Whitstone; F. X. Meegan, A. C. Christensen, Mr. Young, and A. J. Simonson.

Mr. Nelson Matthews of Elizabeth, read a paper entitled "Why Note Loans are Unfavorable." Paper entitled "The Success of an Exchange in our City," prepared by Mr. Baim was read by Mr. Markheim. Francis X. Meegan read a paper entitled "Why the Uniform Rate on Small Loans is Most Favorable;" Mr. Wells of the Legal Reform Bureau was introduced and gave an interesting discussion on the work of the bureau and some experience on the work of the same. Secretary Alberse read a paper on "The Purpose of Small Loan Legislation" after which a general discussion took place regarding the taking of endorsements on notes etc. The Executive Committee was authorized to look into the practice of some lenders conniving with straw endorsers who permit a charge for the endorsement on notes, and the Executive Committee was authorized to obtain evidence of such violations and lay the facts before the state banking department.

A resolution was introduced requiring a full investigation of candidates to membership before same are admitted as members of the association.

The newly elected Executive Committee asked permission to retire and Mr. East was called to preside during the absence of the chairman.

A committee of three was appointed to draft suitable resolutions on the loss of the association as sustained through the death of the late Commissioner of Banking and Insurance, Mr. Tuttle.

At this point the Executive Committee returned and announced that they had elected the officers and committee heads and were prepared to make their report. Mr. East called for the report which was as follows:—State Chairman, S. H. Vogel; Vice-Chairman, F. X. Meegan; Secretary, P. L. Alberse; Treasurer, J. V. Long; Chairman, Legislative Committee, C. H. Watts; Chairman, Publicity Committee, A. C. Christensen; Chairman Membership Committee, Mr. Young; Chairman Executive Committee, A. J. Simonson; Chairman, Entertainment Committee, J. W. Whitstone. At this point Mr. East relinquished the chair to Mr. Vogel the newly elected state chairman.

Mr. Young the newly elected chairman of the membership committee stated that it was his plan to appoint a member of this committee in every state where the association has members, and that he desired the coöperation of all.

The following days were designated as days on which loan offices in this state should remain closed:—New Year's day, Washington's birthday, Decoration Day, July Fourth, Labor Day, Armistice Day, Thanksgiving Day and Christmas. Individual members can use their own discretion in selecting any additional holidays they may desire.

Upon motion Trenton was selected as the next meeting place and the third week in May as to the time.

In the evening a banquet was held in the McCarter balcony of the Robert Treat hotel. Mr. Whitstone acted as toastmaster. Addresses were made by Dr. Genther, Mr. Moore, Chairman Vogel, Col. Hodson and others.

THE SMALL LOANS ACT.

With the Governor's signature the Andrews bill "to regulate the business of making small loans" will become a Rhode Island law. Measures of the same intent, substantially in the same terms, after a model act drafted by the Legal Reform Bureau and The Russell Sage Foundation, are on the statute books of a score of States; in time, no doubt, the protective legislation will be adopted by every State that knows the loan-shark evil.

In the General Assembly the bill so manifestly important in the public interests, was enacted with unanimity. Its merits were so plain that there was no provocative to partisan differences; the House having taken action, on Thursday the Senate released itself from its entangled procedure in order promptly to concur.

Seekers of small loans—described as "money, credit, goods or things in the amount or to the value of three hundred dollars or less"—will hereafter deal with persons, co-partnerships or corporations whose integrity and fairness are guaranteed, so far as can be, by a State license. The operations will be under the supervision of the Bank Commissioner, precisely as those of other banking institutions have long been. The licensee, moreover, will be bonded for the proper conduct of his business. The Commissioner or his agent may at any time make an examination to ascertain if the business is being conducted according to the stipulations of the law; and they are rigid, though not intended to be burdensome to square-dealing and capable small bankers.

Small bankers who pursue their occupations as conscientiously as large ones do will find nothing in the regulatory law to complain about. They will be benefited indeed as borrowers will be, for the loan shark may now be eliminated as a competitor before he can do much harm—licenses may be revoked at any time that the Bank Commissioner finds that the law is not being complied with. It is a first-rate law and should be welcomed by the great number of persons continually needing accommodation who are unable to furnish collateral of the kind that the large banks require.—Providence Journal. R. I.

PAWNBROKER IS LIABLE FOR HIS CLIENT'S GOODS.

Important Decision Recalls Hold-up of Sixth Street Shop.

Superior Judge Robert Marx, Friday, ruled that Samuel Savin, whose pawnshop at 36 East Sixth street was held up and robbed of $75,000 in money and jewelry on March 23, 1922, is liable for the property of his customers stolen from the store.

The suit of Joseph S. Butler, one of a number filed since the burglary, was decided, and Savin was ordered to pay Butler $236.37. Butler alleged that on April 30, 1921, he pawned a diamond ring valued at $350 for $100, and on June 21. 1921, he pawned an opal ring valued at $30 for $5. After the burglary he presented his receipts and was told that the rings had been stolen, and that the receipts specified that Savin was not responsible for property that was stolen or destroyed by fire.

Judge Marx ruled that pawnshops came under the uniform warehouseman's law, and that the statement printed on the pawn receipts is not binding. He held that a pawnbroker must exercise reasonable precautions against fire and theft, and said that the fact that Savin's safe was standing open constituted negligence on his part, and was an invitation to burglars.

Butler was represented by Attorneys Hosea, King and Thares. Savin was represented by Attorney Jacob Hermann.—Cincinnati Times Star.

VIRGINIA.

The quarterly meeting of the Virginia Industrial Lenders Association was held at the Old Colony Club, Southland Hotel, Norfolk, Virginia, April 12, 1923.

In the absence of the Chairman, the Business Meeting was called to order at 3 P. M. by Vice Chairman Thompson.

UNFINISHED BUSINESS, COMMITTEE REPORTS.

Treasurer Cross reported a balance of $269.69 in the Treasury, and two bills to be paid. On motion of Mr. Seay, seconded by Mr. Bradshaw, the report was approved.

Secretary Bray reported that there were twenty-six (26) Licensees in the State, but only fifteen (15) are members of the Association, and only eleven (11) of these are in good standing, with dues paid to date. On motion of Mr. Cross, seconded by Mr. Seay, the report was approved.

Chairman Bradshaw reported that he had made arrangements to have the three daily papers to report on our meeting, and he had made arrangements with other members of the committee to have a write-up on our meeting in all cities where members of the Association are operating.

NEW BUSINESS.

Considerable discussion was given to try and get every licensee to become a member of our association. We had with us, Mr. Rutherford of New York, our National Chairman, and he was given a hearty welcome by all present.

Mr. Edge reported that Mr. Burnly, Assistant State Bank Examiner, had spoken of seeing Mr. Appleby and see if he could not induce him to bring his offices (5) into the Association. Mr. Bradshaw said he thought Mr. Appleby would come in if we saw him personally.

Upon motion of Mr. Rutherford, seconded by Mr. Cross, it was agreed that Mr. Bradshaw write a personal letter to Mr. Appleby, and Mr. Edge be instructed to call on Mr. Burnly, Assistant State Bank Examiner, to induce him to go to Washington at the Association's expense. to try and get Mr. Appleby to bring all his offices into the Association.

Mr. Edge reported that we had one thousand (1000) pamphlets printed on Coöperation. Upon motion of Mr. Rutherford, seconded by Mr. Seay, the Secretary, was ordered to send these out to all members, also a supply to Mr. Kehr, our National Secretary, for him to send out to members of the Association.

Mr. Rutherford gave a brief talk about the National Convention to be held in Louisville the latter part of September, and gave a cordial invitation to all members to be present.

Different members brought up the subject of "clearing house" and every one approved the present one that we have in operation in the different cities, and agreed that it was working splendidly and had already brought good results.

UNPAID BILLS.

Mr. Edge presented a bill for fifty-two dollars and fifty cents ($52.50) for printing one thousand (1000) pamphlets on Coöperation, and the Treasurer was authorized to send a check to Andrew H. Friar Printing Company, Richmond, Virginia, for the amount.

The Treasurer reported receiving a bill from Attorney R. Carrington, of Richmond, for services, of two hundred and sixty dollars ($260.00).

NEXT MEETING.

It was unanimously voted that the next meeting to be held at Roanoke, Thursday, July 12, 1923. Time and place to be announced later by the Chairman of the Entertainment Committee, J. B. Herbert.

There being no further business to transact, upon motion of Mr. Cross, seconded by Mr. Bradshaw, the business meeting was adjourned.

The members met in the banquet hall at 6:30 P.M. and a splendid dinner was served them.

We had with us as guests, Judge W. H. Sargeant of the Corporation Court, Attorney Walter M. Grant, Attorney Claeton E. Raby, and Mr. Rutherford, our National Chairman, who acted as Toastmaster. All three gentlemen gave splendid addresses regarding our business a necessity, and what splendid work we were doing.

A rising vote of thanks was given to Judge Sargeant, Attorney Grant and Attorney Raby for their excellent addresses.

ADDRESS BY ATTORNEY WALTER M. GRANT AT THE BANQUET OF THE VIRGINIA INDUSTRIAL LENDERS ASSOCIATION HELD AT NORFOLK, VIRGINIA, APRIL 12, 1923.

Mr. Toastmaster, and Gentlemen:

As I have listened to those who have preceded me I have been reminded of an Italian maximum I once heard:

"The talker sows, the listener reaps."

And as I rise to my feet, possessing no money myself, in this gathering of money handlers, I feel almost compelled to take the German's advice:

"If you have money take a seat,
If you have none take to your feet."

Among the dealers now known as "Small Loan Bankers" I wonder, just at the present time, what may be the most difficult problem they have to solve. Of course there are many with which they stand, daily, face to face, but if, perchance, the master key were found, what door would it unlock? You will all answer quickly, a method by which the repayment of every loan is solidly secured, both as to principal and interest. While none of us may be able to master the problem, I believe a few suggestions toward "picking the lock" may be of interest.

Under our system of jurisprudence, known as the common law, during the years when its principles were being established, there was no prescribed rate of interest, and it was only as the evils attending upon excessive interest were realized that restrictions were imposed. Then the pendulum began to swing backward until the rate in modern times forced the "Small Loan Bankers" either to the shadow of the three balls, to illegal methods or out of business. Those who continued used for many years methods that brought the business into general ill repute.

For the past few years, the necessity for such a business being recognized by those properly informed, after painstaking investigation and expenditure of much treasure, in many States of the Union, the Legislatures have passed an act commonly known as "The Small Loan Act," which, under prescribed conditions, permits a rate of interest of 3½% per month.

But even though this has legalized the imposing and collection of a much greater rate of interest than is permitted in any other form of loan, and the law-making body has recognized the reasonableness and wisdom of such a law, this is not true of the general public, nor, and I now come to the point I wish to make, is it true of many judges, who necessarily have to interpet and apply the law in contested cases by the "Small Loan Bankers."

Could this condition of prejudice and doubt be overcome, especially in the minds of many jurists, I believe a great step would be taken in the right direction.

Those of us who represent you "Bankers" legally often have this prejudice of the "Bench" impressed upon us almost as strongly as the stone carver did an assault of which he complained:

"He walked right into my yard and slammed me up against one of my tobstones," the witness said.

"Did he hurt you?" inquired the court.

"Hurt me?" roared the witness. "Why, I've got 'Sacred to the Memory of' stamped all down my back."

But you naturally ask, "How may this prejudice be eliminated?"

First: By a process of enlightenment and correct information. Also by the use, in your dealings with borrowers, of full and careful instruction as to the necessary steps to take and of what you will require. Always be careful, square and honest in all dealings. When one of your number is found using other practices than these, do everything possible to persuade him to use honest, legal methods, and if this cannot be accomplished, use moral and, if necessary, other persuasion to put him out of business. If this prejudice is ever to be eliminated, it must be accomplished from within your own ranks and not by reforms forced upon you from outside. You are the ones most interested and whom the beneficial results will most affect. Therefore, watch carefully for all abuses and correct them yourselves.

Second: In Virginia you need an immediate amendment to the Indexing of the "Universal Small Loan Act." Do you know that in the Code of this State the Act is indexed, "The Loan Shark Act."

Could such a title or indexing create any impression upon minds of laymen, lawyers or judges, who may not be thoroughly familiar with the purpose and wisdom of the law, than that of prejudice? This should be remedied.

Third: All managers of your various branches, and other employees who come in touch with the public, should be thoroughly instructed themselves in the purpose and reason for the collection of increased amount of interest permitted, and be ready and willing to cheerfully explain to those who oppose. Oftentimes opposition is really only ignorance.

"Ignorance is the curse of God; knowledge the wing wherewith we fly to heaven," said Shakespeare, and certainly knowledge is the true course in this case.

Again, those who represent you legally should be thoroughly informed and on all occasions where this unjust prejudice is encountered, and especially if it be met in the courtroom, jump instantly to the breach and, if possible, dispel the bias by a full and proper explanation.

I bring to your attention this prejudice of some of the judges because, from experience during the past few years in actually representing some of you who are present to-night I have encountered it again and again.

On this point I am somewhat in the position of the accused, when asked by his lawyer:

"Well, shall we take the jury as it stands?"

The accused: "Better fire the married women, counselor. They always convict on the slightest circumstantial evidence."

I do not wish you to think for an instant that I am critising any judge because of this prejudice, for I am sure it exists because they honestly believe the principle upon which the success of your business is based is wrong and unjust. A thorough knowledge of existing conditions would, I feel sure, dispell this bias as the sun, clouds, after rain.

Let us all join hands and teach with Shakespeare, that:

"Money is a good soldier and will on."

The Chinese have a maximum that goes thus:

"Those who make money make little exertion: those who make much exertion make no money," and in closing I quote a good old American maximum:

"Put not your trust in money, but your money in trust."

FLAPPER NOT BAD AS SHE IS PAINTED SARGEANT ASSERTS.

Norfolk Jurist Waxes Poetical in Ardent Defense of Girls of To-day; Takes Rap at Pessimists and Reformers.

TRIBUTE GIVEN BEFORE LENDERS' ASSOCIATION.

Judge W. H. Sergeant, of the Corporation Court, says that the wail of pessimists and reformers, that modern times are degraded and that the world must surely be destroyed soon, is bosh. The jurist expressed himself to that effect last night at a banquet of the Virginia Industrial Lenders Association.

"The only perfect woman, if evolution be true," he said, "was she who swung from her tail from bough to bough and flung cocoanuts at her admirers." The judge seemed well satisfied with the modern girl, for a rough version of his rhythmic expression of his views of a flapper is:

"The merry girls of '23.
Look very, very good to me.
I care not if their skirts hang high;
They're still quite pleasing to my eye.
Indeed, I think, they look quite nifty;
The trouble is, I'm married, fat and 50."

The jurist referred to cases—not in Blackstone but in history and literature—to support his views.

"My father used to muse over the good old times when he was a boy," Judge Sargeant said. "But the world," he added, "whirls 'round as merrily, the birds sing as sweetly, and the maidens are no whit less charming than when he was a boy.

"Burke lamented in his day," the judge said, "that Sophists and calculators had taken the age and that chivalry was dead. Cicero wailed, 'O! tempora! O! mores;' " said the jurist (Cicero's dyspeptic lament, freely translated is, "Oh, death where is thy sting? These times have got my goat") "Tutankhaman's wife was built along speedy lines, if press reports may be credited," the judge continued, referring to allegations that, in true merry widow style, Mrs. Tut sought a charming young Hittite for a second husband before old Tut was accustomed to his mummy suit.

"We are lucky to live and to enjoy this wonderful age," Judge Sargeant concluded, after calling attention to the glorious prospect before mankind and the recent progress of the human race.

Walter M. Grant, former assistant city attorney, urged the members of the association, who cater to small loans, to dissipate prejudice against their business both by education and by equitable dealings.

"This prejudice exists both in the public mind and among jurists," Mr. Grant said. He continued that the prejudice was grounded in a misconception of their business dating back to the time when it was first recognized in common law and is furthered because a somewhat higher interest charge is necessary than with longer term loans.

The banquet was given at the Southland Hotel after a business session of the association yesterday afternoon. Officers of the Virginia Industrial Lenders' Association are: L. E. Pope, of Richmond, president; F. Bray, of Norfolk, secretary and T. Clifton Cross, of Norfolk, treasurer.—Virginian Pilot, Norfolk, Va. April 13, 1923.

Dear Mr. Kehr:

Several days ago I wrote you asking the name of some concern in Nashville, Tenn. to whom we might send an account for collection and in your reply you recommended us to write to the Dixie Loan & Investment Co. We wrote as directed and received to-day a letter from Mr. V. C. Moore, Mgr., stating that he would gladly give us any assistance possible to aid in the collection of our account, therefore have forwarded our account to him for collection. From the tone of their letter I feel sure they would be glad to assist any of the other members of the American Asso. in the collection of accounts.

Thanking you very kindly for giving us this information and trusting that this will assist some other member in looking after their Nashville skips, I am,

Yours truly,
M. HARTMAN, Manager.

P. S. Am glad to say that your man Auger in San Francisco is looking after our account for us there.

EDITOR, INDUSTRIAL LENDERS NEWS,
204 Chestnut Street,
Harrisburg, Pa.

Dear Sir:

In Mr. Reginald Heber Smith's interesting article on "Credit Unions and Licensed Industrial Lenders," on the last page of the April NEWS, I find a reference to the Morris Plan as one of the three agencies, other than the licensed industrial lender, for "providing legitimate banking facilities for the average man." The other two of the three competitors of the licensed lender are the "semi-philanthropic agencies" and the credit unions. The claims of these various agencies are temperately considered, and it is conceded that the Morris Plan banks and companies have "performed a service and filled a need." But it is claimed that of late years they have tended to drift into the commercial field, and have "not met......the demand for small loans"—i. e., loans of less than $300 in amount.

In comment on this criticism, permit me to present the following statistics: Loans on The Morris Plan from March 23, 1910, to December 31, 1922, numbered 1,957,551, and amounted to $363,689,752—an average of $185.78. In the year 1922 the number was 374,152 and the amount $80,801,338—the average being $215.95. As you will see, the increase in the average amount per loan is only 16 per cent., which may fairly be accounted for by the much higher cost of living in 1922 as compared with the earlier years of Morris Plan operation.

Yours very truly,
J. B. GILDER, Secretary,
Industrial Finance Corporation.

HEBREW LOAN SOCIETY TO OPEN NEW BRANCH.

A new branch of the Hebrew Free Loan Society, one of the ninety-one units affiliated with the Federation for the support of Jewish Philanthropies, will be established in the heart of the East Side during the coming year, it is announced by Julius J. Dukas, president. This addition to the downtown headquarters at 108 Second avenue, is needed, it was said, in order to reach the small borrower, thousands of whom live below this region.

The Hebrew Free Loan Society was founded in 1892 for the purpose of lending money without interest to persons whose character and past standing would not permit them to accept charity. It lends approximately a million dollars a year without interest, in sums of from five to five hundred dollars. The average loss incurred has been less than one-half of one percent.—Brooklyn Standard Union, April 3, 1923.

JERSEY LENDERS IN SESSION HERE.

State Association Discusses Legislation for Stamping Out of "Note Shaver."

Conditions under which small loans are made and suggestions for still further elevation of the business, with a view of having the "note shaver" give bond and make reports to the proper authorities under the Small Borrowers' Act, and other matters were discussed at to-day's meeting of the New Jersey Industrial Lenders' Association at the Hotel Sterling. Approximately 60 members of the organization partook of luncheon at the Sterling and then took up various matters of business. Incidentally it is the first time the association has met in Trenton. Sol H. Vogel, of the Trenton Loan and Realty Company, this city, president of the body, is presiding.

Arthur H. Wood, president of First National Bank and of the Chamber of Commerce, welcomed the lenders. He gave expression to his pleasure in having the association members select Trenton as their place of meeting and stressed the fact that the business of the lenders is a dignified one and a help to the community and especially to a class of small borrowers formerly unfairly dealt with when seeking accomodations of this kind. President Wood added that the Chamber of Commerce desires to foster any business conducted on ethical lines and asked the lenders to give assistance to keep out of the field the evil practices that tend to creep into the business, particularly the tricks of the loan shark.

It was further explained by President Wood that the law protects the members of the Lenders' Association and that they in turn should help stamp out the "note shaver." The "note shavers" trade as free lances, it was stated, but ought to be compelled to make reports under the Small Borrowers' Act and pay the regular license fee and keep books for inspection by the State Department of Banking and Insurance.

President Vogel responded to the address of welcome and remarks were made by several of the officials of the organization, including P. X. Meegan, Paterson, vice-president; J. V. Long, Jersey City, treasurer; P. L. Alberse, Paterson, secretary; William Young, Atlantic City, who reported on growth of membership; A. C. Christensen, Jersey City, head of the publicity department, who spoke in favor of advertising and general publicity; C. H. Watts, Philadelphia, who discussed legislative matters; A. J. Simonson, Newark, chairman of the Executive Committee, who discussed the policing of the business and J. W. Whitstone, Plainfield, who took up the matter of the time and place for the annual meeting.

This gathering is held each year and while Newark is making a strong bid for the meeting, it may be that sufficient influence will be brought to bear to have Trenton selected.

WHY—— THE SMALL-LOAN BUSINESS?

3½% Is Proved by Practical Experience.

Practical experience in a score of States is this—when the rate is 3½% the small-loan business is done by licensed lenders who employ clean methods only. There are no loan sharks. There are no complaints of oppression and licensed lenders coöperate with the officials in policing the business.

When the rate is substantially lower than 3½%, the licensed lender cannot enter or stay in business, so the loan shark takes the licensed lender's legitimate place. Exorbitant interest and fees are charged. The loan business is done secretly. The provisions of the loan law are generally violated. There is inadequate capital available for loan service.

In Alabama the legal rate is ½% per month. The license fee is $2,000 per year. No licensed lender could do business under these conditions. The loan sharks do all the business and charge 30% per month.

In Colorado the legal rate is 1% per month, but the law cannot be enforced. There is no licensed lender in the state. The loan sharks charge what they please, which includes recompense for their risk of violating the criminal sections of the law. Therefore, the legal rate of 1% makes a bad condition worse.

In Illinois, before the 3½% law was adopted, the legal rate was 7% and the result was that only loan sharks did the business. It was in support of the 3½% law that Judge Landis gave his opinion that the 3½% rate was fair and just.

In Kentucky the legal rate is 6% and the loan sharks thrive. An investigating committee in its endeavor to have the law changed to the 3½% rate, found that the rates charged in that state for small loans were 15 to 50% a month and 185 to 600% a year.

The scientific rate is 3½% per month. That this is a fair and equitable rate is decisively shown by the fact that two national remedial organizations interested in improving the small-loan business have adopted the 3½% rate.

The Division of Remedial Laws of the Russell Sage Foundation in its "Uniform Law" fixes the rate at 3½% per month.

The Legal Reform Bureau to Eliminate the Loan Shark Evil has also fixed the rate at 3½% per month.

The 3½% rate is endorsed by unimpeachable and unbiased sources.

Further information on the small-loan business will be published in this space next Sunday.

CONVENTION NEWS.

Not many more issues of the NEWS will be published before the big Ninth Annual National Convention, which will be held at the Seelbach Hotel, Louisville, Kentucky, September 19th, 20th, 21st, 22d. From the plans so far made, the forthcoming National Convention promises to be a record breaker from more than one standpoint. The location selected is central, accommodations will be fine, and there will be just enough amusement and entertainment to break the monotony of the business sessions.

At a recent meeting of the National Executive Committee the following committee chairmen who will have charge of the various arrangements were selected: Finance, W. P. Woll, Chicago; Speakers, C. H. Watts, Philadelphia; Entertainment, C. E. Reed, Louisville; Registration, R. C. Aufderheide, Indianapolis; Banquet, Badges, etc., R. M. Rutherford, New York; Program and Publicity, G. W. Kehr, Harrisburg.

The Program Committee is pleased to announce that it has the promise of Will Pente, a constructive publicity expert of Chicago, that he will give us a worth while talk on "Advertising the Small Loan Business." From what the committee knows of Mr. Pente and the study he is making of advertising the small loan business, we are certain that our membership have in store for them, a fine treat. Selling the small loan business and justifying the uniform rate has many advocates but none, in the opinion of the writer, who can match Mr. Pente's convincing methods.

An account of the successful legislative campaign in Rhode Island this year will be told by one of our members who was close to the scene of activity. None of the campaigns for the enactment of the Uniform Law in recent years, was better handled than this one. There seemed to be perfect coöperation between all the agencies in favor of this legislation. If the same plan as was adopted in Rhode Island is adopted elsewhere opposition can be nullified.

The above is only a small part of the program and the balance of it is in the hands of our members. What do you want it to be? If past programs have not met with your approval, what have you to offer in place of former efforts? One member has already decided that he will not attend the Louisville Convention and the reason he gives that he does not feel the programs are of sufficient interest to "men in actual charge of offices." He states further the subjects discussed are too general and of interest to the group interested in the general policies of the business. That criticism may be justified but what has this member done to suggest other subjects which would be of interest to the men in actual charge of offices, and has he taken any time or interest in the matter of selecting men who are competent to handle subjects which ought to have attention? Anybody can stay at home or go to a convention and criticise the efforts of others. This criticism does not help in making future conventions and programs better unless something constructive is suggested to improve the programs. The chairman of the Program Committee will be delighted to receive suggestions from anyone interested in the small loan business whether members or not, and if they seem practicable, they will be adopted.

There is some thought of devoting the whole day of Friday, September 21, for a Managers' Meeting. If enough interest is taken in the suggestion by the managers and subjects are suggested and competent persons to lead the discussions, it is probable that this suggestion will be adopted.

Any members who have in mind suggesting any changes in the Constitution and By-laws should refer to this document in their Year Book and be sure that they comply with all the requirements in this respect so that any changes may be considered at the National Convention. We do not want any experience such as we had last year when several suggested amendments to the Constitution and By-laws were ruled out on the grounds of unconstitutionality. Article XIX of the Constitution says:

"Amendments. This Constitution shall not be amended, unless such amendment shall be recommended by five members of the National Council, and until it is approved by a two-thirds vote of members in attendance in convention or in writing. Notice of such proposed amendment shall be given each member either by publication in the official organ or in writing at least ten days prior to being acted upon."

PUBLICITY.

No doubt our subscribers have been reading with interest the copies of the ads, run in the Sioux City, Iowa papers by the Provident Loan Association and have wondered about the results. To an inquiry directed along that line Leslie Whitmer, president replied:

"We gave our educational campaign of advertising a good deal of consideration before it was launched, and for the reason that the 3½ per cent rate sounds exorbitant by many people who are not familiar with the loan business, we decided to put all of our cards on the table, stating the actual and true facts of the business, with the object of soliciting business from borrowers, as well as educating the public along the correct lines of the small loan business.

"Results of this campaign are decidedly satisfactory. Our loan balance on June 1st will show approximately an increase of $10,000.00 from the time the campaign was started on March 31st. The number of loans have increased, as also has the average loan.

"Our experience shows that by mentioning in our advertising the 3½ per cent rate, the small borrower knows precisely what is expected of him when he applies for a loan.

"From our experience we feel that any publicity campaign you inaugurate anywhere, will have best results, by stating full and complete facts concerning the small loan business.

"The local comments which we have received have all been in our favor with one exception; that one happened to be an attorney that had dealings with us and it was necessary to press collection before having our money repaid. Our leading banker regards it as the best step taken in explaining to the public the need of our business and the necessity of charging the rate which we do. We have started a new series of advertising, requiring one column, ten inches, or one-half the space formerly used, and I am enclosing the first one of these ads."

THE PROVIDENT LOAN ASSOCIATION.

—is a licensed money lender operating under Iowa State Banking laws, and charging the legal rate of interest on small amounts and less than the legal rate on large amounts.

There's the whole thing in a nutshell, we've told it all, nothing is held back—and the object in buying this space is to get more business—to loan more money to worthy people—to increase our list of satisfied customers.

Borrowing money is as old as the world itself—there is no shame or disgrace about it. The man of limited means who comes to us has the same right to be proud of his ability to utilize his credit as the bsuiness man who is accommodated by the bank.

We loan money in amounts of $10 to $300. We accept various chattels as securities, which are not acceptable to banks. We charge the legal rate of interest of 3½% per month on unpaid balances on small amounts up to $200, and less than the legal rate on large amounts.

While making only a fair and reasonable profit, we are doing everything we

WHY—
THE SMALL-LOAN BUSINESS?
Is It Necessary?

There have been many and still are some people who do not acknowledge the necessity for loan companies at all. They believe that if the loans could not be obtained the borrowers could get along and thrift would be encouraged and that the proper solution of the "small-loan problem" is to drive the usurer out of existence by drastic laws, without providing a substitute.

We admit that present borrowers could get along, they could call on their friends and relatives, they could owe their landlord and grocer and their long suffering physician. They could be humiliated at every turn, and if all else fails, there is still left our charitable institutions.

But history shows that before submitting to these distressing circumstances, self-respecting people will borrow money, if money is to be had, and also, that there will always be those to lend money if the price offered is sufficiently large.

The fact that the high-rate money-lender does exist is in itself the best evidence of the necessity of the licensed loan association. While we might think that the "Loan Shark" makes his money by extortion from the ignorant and helpless, it is a fact that his large profits come from them who borrow time and again with full knowledge of the excessive charges and because they feel that if unable to get the money for less it is worth the amount charged. Because of these conditions it has been and always will be impossible to drive the money shark out of existence by repressive laws. The small-loan business is now and always will be necessary.

It has been proven and is acknowledged by all who have investigated the situation that the only solution is competition with the "loan shark" by legalized and properly managed loan associations, run on a business basis, operating on a scientific, equitable and lawful rate of interest, under a State license and under direct supervision of the State Banking Department.

Such an organization in Sioux City, is the Provident Loan Association. Its record of eleven years of fair and square dealings with the thousands of borrowers it has served is one that could only be attained by right principles and just methods founded on a business basis that is sound, legitimate and essential to this community.

Further information on the small-loan business will be published in this space next Sunday.

WHY—
THE SMALL-LOAN BUSINESS?
Whom Does It Serve?

Careful investigation has shown that only about 15% of the American population have access to banks and trust companies leaving 85% of the people without financial accommodations in the time of need, except in the States where the necessity for the small-loan business has been recognized and where practical loan laws have been enacted.

The clientele of the small loan association is not the 15% who can borrow from the banks nor the 15% of poor and needy who are best assisted by charitable institutions.

The remaining 70% of the American population known as the middle class—clerks, mechanics, electric and steam railway operators, industrial workers, public employes, some professional people, housekeepers and small business men, in fact all those who have good character, steady jobs, a reputation for paying their bills and an income sufficient to live and to pay monthly installments on small loans—these are the people served by the small loan association. Their right to borrow cannot be denied.

Personal property, mainly household furniture, forms the basis of security upon which small loans are made, although the borrowers expected salary income and ability to meet the payments has much to do with the lender's decision in granting the loan.

The workingman, however frugal, worthy and honest, owns little besides his current weekly wage and most of this is consumed for house rent, groceries, clothing and incidental costs of living. Even though he may have a savings deposit account, unemployment, sickness, death or marriage or any of many other causes, which arise from time to time, give him legitimate need to borrow money quickly, in anticipation of his future earnings. Such demands are best taken care of by the licensed loan association.

Business experience furnishes innumerable illustrations of financial ruin because of inability to secure short time loans.

It is not contended that borrowing should be encouraged, nor that the secret of success is found in the ability to secure a loan in time of need but it is a fact that judicious borrowing is frequently an absolute necessity.

A small loan quickly obtained, is often of the greatest possible advantage. A vast number of people live close to the verge of pecuniary collapse. A death in the home, sickness, or even the loss of a few days' work may place the whole family in extreme distress. In hundreds of cases of this character, the Provident Loan Association has been of inestimable value and it is constantly alert to enlarge its useful mission and helpful service.

INDIANA.

The Annual Meeting of Indiana Industrial Lenders Association was held at Indianapolis, May 16th-17th,

The meeting called to order by Fred Davies, first vice-president in the absence of W. R. Teel, who was called out of the city.

The following companies were represented:

Commonwealth Loan Companies of Anderson, Brazil, Elwood, Fort Wayne, Indianapolis, Richmond, Terre Haute, Brazil Loan Co., Legal Company's Offices of the following cities—Connersville, Frankfort, Kokomo, Lafayette, Logansport, Marion, Peru, Fort Wayne, Crawfordsville, Huntington; W. A. Swank, Crawfordsville; Provident Loan Association of Elkhart, Southbend, Michigan City, Hammond, American Loan Co., Evansville, Beneficial Loan Society of Terre Haute, Gray, Fort Wayne, Indianapolis, Evansville, South Bend, Indiana Loan Co., Fort Wayne, National Loan Co., Fort Wayne, Muncie, Terre Haute, Capital Loan Co., Frankfort, Indianapolis, Shelbyville, Franklin, American Loan Co., Community Finance Corp., Fidelity Loan Company, Indiana Collateral Loan Co., Indianapolis Finance Co., Model Loan Co., Security Mortgage Loan Co., Sterling Loan Co. of Indianapolis, Central Loan Co., Kokomo, State Loan Co., Laporte and South Bend, Green Co., Loan Co., Linton, Central Loan Co., Logansport, Clupper Loan Co., Marion, Hoosier Loan Co., Martinsville, Citizens Finance Co., Mishawaka, American Loan Co., Princeton, American Security Co., Shelbyville, Indiana Finance Co., South Bend, Security Loan Co., South Bend, Fidelity Loan Co., Sullivan, Indiana Loan Co., Terre Haute, Security Loan Co., Terre Haute, Knox Co. Real Estate & Loan Co., Vincennes including several executives of the various offices, and Mr. Elmer Johnson of the Banking department, E. H. Wolcott, Banking Commissioner.

Membership committee reported present membership 111, delinquents more than 1 year, 23, new members during year 17, resignations 2, net membership paid to date 88.

Treasurer reports as follows.

Mr. Crunk moves that the report be received and an auditing committee be appointed, carried, committee, Mr. Grinsteiner, Mr. Naultner, Mr. Arnett.

The subject of Uniform Blanks was taken up and after a full discussion a motion that this be referred to the law committee was made and carried.

C. E. Clift gave an address on how a $100,000 00 office could be established in fifteen months. The main points brought out in his address were: confidence in yourself, Sincerity to your customer, Practice Humane treatment, Courtesy and Goodwill, Coöperation between loan men and Putting your Heart into the business, circularizing with letters and carrying large ads.

Mr. President and Gentlemen of our Association:

Is getting the wife's signature at home a good policy on new loans? This question, I think should be answered in the affirmative, and should also include rechecks where necessary. As far as the legal part is concerned, our papers may be signed either at a customer's or prospective customer's home, business address or temporary residence; however, the representative should first see that the person to sign has read over the instrument and feel satisfied that they understand what they are going to sign, then fill out the note in full if possible, or for at least the amount which is to be written in space provided for this in the upper left-hand corner. He then can go over the list of security to be sure that the prospective customer knows what is being mortgaged and that it is clear of all liens, mortgages and etc.

After this is finished it only takes a few minutes further to explain the importance of meeting the notes promptly and that we do not employ collectors, that payments may be mailed either by check or money or registered letter, if impossible to call at the office. On rechecks of course, there is not so much for the representative to go through unless the past account was not taken care of according to their contract. He then has a very good opportunity to go into the matter with the wife or husband whichever it happens to be and he might discover the party he is talking with is led to believe their loan has been taken care of according to contract. In this way he might save himself some extra work that would fall upon him later on.

You will also find among our members many instances where they will not only have the wife to sign at the house but the husband as well, thereby completing the loan at the home and in some instances this has been done of an evening after office hours. Of course, you might not discover this unless you have your representative call back on an application which has been approved when they did not come for the money, and be informed then that they had made other arrangements for the money and upon further investigation you might discover that after being informed that both parties must call for the money, they had called your competitor that is glad to have the parties sign at the house as well as bring the money when he calls.

I have been informed by some of our members that their organization will not allow a paper to be signed only at their office, this is hardly fair to the great public that we are doing business among for we are being paid for a service and it cannot better be given than in this branch of our business.

Many cases I am sure you gentlemen have seen where a family has three and four small children, none old enough to take care of the smaller ones while the mother and father are at the Loan office arranging a loan. What a service we are giving when we allow this busy mother to sign for her part and be relieved of dressing herself and all the children just to come to our office. Her husband may then stop by on his way to or from work or at noon and get the money. The world is crying for service, give service and you cannot fail.

I do not believe there is any branch of our business where the great public can be helped more than to get the wife's signature at home on new as well as old loans provided conditions justify same.

A difference of opinion was large, Chandler, Kent, Baum, Moss, Hartz, Broughman, Hancock, Stratton, all expressed opinions both for and against, but the prevailing opinion was to render service regardless of where the signature was taken.

George W. Farrington gave an address on Possibilities of Group advertising and quoted the successes and failures of group advertising and his point was well taken that the business needed advertising in order to tell the public our story. Mr. Clark, a guest of Mr. Farrington, explained how an educational campaign covering a period of one year could be carried on and about the cost.

A. C. Broughman suggested that a committee be appointed to look into this subject and report at the morning session. Mr. Rose moved that a committee be appointed, motion carried. R. C. Aufderheide, A. Broughman, H. H. Burrell were appointed.

C. H. Stratton expressed an opinion that this was one of the most important subjects that could be or would be taken up during the convention, and that no other subject was as important as Educational Publicity.

Can attorney fees be collected by an attorney unless suit is entered against the borrower and a judgment taken.

Elmer Johnson of the banking commissioner's office obtained an oral report from the Attorney General of the State, that a reasonable attorney fee could be collected and if the attorney's fee was not considered a reasonable one, the court would have to decide what was a reasonable fee; the question was also referred to the law committee.

The executive committee was called to order by Fred Davies at 9 A. M., May 17th. It was decided to have a roster published of all members.

It was also voted to appropriate $250 to $500, to assist the American Assn., in the convention to be held at Louisville, Ky., in September.

They recommended an amendment to the by-laws that would automatically suspend a member for non-payment of dues.

The resignation of two members accepted.

The banquet Wednesday evening was attended by 146 members and guests. After the banquet, dancing and stunts were the features of entertainment, and everyone apparently enjoyed the evening. Mr. A. C. Broughman acted as toastmaster.

The convention was called to order Thursday morning by Fred Davies.

A paper was read by H. E. Arnett of Marion on "New Types of Competition."

To limit the discussion of the subject, "New types of competition" to anything but a talk on the loan business in general, it should have been qualified. Both as to what is meant by "new," and if the chattel loan business was to be taken as a unit, or as competition in the business effects each individual office.

Competition that is new to me, might not be new to you, and competition that would be new to the loan companies in Fort Wayne, might not be new in Indianapolis. When our company opens a new office, we are probably a new type of competition to the old lenders in that city, and in many cases we find new types of competition that we have never run into before. In one town one of the old companies seem to regard us as intruders, and intimate that we should not have come into competition with them, just as much as saying that they owned that whole territory and it was their own private possession. Clean competition won't hurt their office one bit.

However, although you may think you discover something new, you will later find that it was really something quite old, that you chanced to look at in a different light, or that was presented to you in a little different way.

Competition doesn't change much, and this applies to the loan business. It is either good or bad, clean or underhanded, or of such a character to show that the individual does not care anything about the character, standing or continuance of the business he is in, but that he only wants to get all he can out of the business and he don't care how he does it.

I don't like to take up too much of your time telling you something that you already know, but it seems to me almost necessary to try to enumerate the different kinds of loan companies that are making small loans.

LICENSED CHATTEL LOAN COMPANIES.

I mean the old established offices in Indiana, represented by you men here, and members of the State and National Associations. I think each one of you can expect to receive from each other, just as fair competition as you give.

Sometimes trouble breaks out in an individual office, and an employee starts a new office for himself. Where this has happened in Indiana in the past it has generally resulted in a lot of cut-rate loans. Between the parties involved this was not competition, but a sort of guerilla war-fare; but to the other loan companies it was competition of the worst kind, and which, I imagine, did neither the offices or their customers anything but harm, and cast a shadow over the loan business in general.

Some regular chattel loan companies have recently adopted the trading stamp or premium plan of running a loan office, and say that it gets them business. They give a dollar or two to their old customers, who run a new account into their office, or give them a certain rebate on their loan. This is bad competition for the companies that are trying to do a straight chattel loan business. I contend that if a loan company is run in a proper manner, and the customers are treated courteously and in an intelligent way, that it will not be necessary to pay them to send in their friends and relatives, or to recommend the company in every way possible. The company that has to pay in actual dollars for "good will" never had and never will have any real friends.

PROMOTED COMPANIES.

In Indiana, it seems that the epidemic of promoted companies, primarily in the business to sell stock, secondarily to make loans, is about over. These companies are bad competition for the regular old established loan companies, because they adopt the policy of cutting the rate in order to get a large volumn of business quickly, so that they can make their stock selling proposition look good. Also, which can hardly be called competition, more like piracy, they hire the employees of the established loan companies with the understanding that they steal a list of customers and make as many of them as they can. This is old stuff to many of you who are here, who can testify that if it is competition it can best be described by the Sherman of history and not of Indianapolis, although I believe that the latter could do a fairly good job of telling you about them in forceful and well chosen language.

INDIRECT COMPETITION.

I feel that the Automobile Funding Co., the Commercial Discount Cos., the Morris Plan, and similar institutions, that loan on notes, contracts, automobiles, etc, all get some of the customers that the chattle loan companies have been serving, but they seldom compete with us by attacking our business any more which was their policy in the past. In Indianapolis the Morris Plan would be a new type of competition, but I do not think they would effect the old established offices here in any noticeable way.

BANKS.

In several counties and communities banks are making chattel loans and plenty of them, which is but a recent development. They were forced into the business because of the fact that farm owners are becoming more and more backward about signing notes for their tenants. It was necessary that the banks either finance the tenant farmer by accepting his chattels as security on loans or see the land go untilled. I do not think that this situation will continue, because most of the banks that are doing it, do not care to make it a general practice, but some of the small country banks are coming to regard it as an important part of their business. Banks in towns and cities are more liberal in making small loans to their regular customers than they have been in the past.

CREDIT COMPANIES.

Probably not all of you have run across the new sort of credit company, which loans money to make certain purchases from furniture, clothing, or grocery stores. The credit company gives the borrower an order on a certain store, instead of giving the actual cash. In this way they get a prearranged discount from the merchant, besides collecting the maximum rate of interest. Most of these deals are made with people whose credit reputation is very bad, but the credit companies can afford to take the extra risk, because of the additional profit they receive. A similar plan is being used in the purchase of automobile tires.

In the communities with which I am acquainted the number of small loan companies is increasing. I know of an eye doctor who is making small loans on real estate and chattels as a side issue, one automobile salesman, and any number of real estate agents, two tailors. These people have all taken out licenses, and in most cases make loans at the maximum rate, and are becoming quite a bit of competition in the aggregate. They know but little about the loan business, and in most cases were not successful in their other business, so need not be taken too seriously as competition—in fact, they are more of an aggravation than competition.

CREDIT UNION.

It appears that the credit Union may be a new type of corporation in Indiana, but after reading all that I can find regarding them, and having the system explained to me several times, I must confess that I cannot tell you or know what it is all about. The law passed by the last legislature was changed considerably from the bill offered. However, I cannot see where a Credit Union is empowered to do much that cannot be done by any corporation. I know of several credit unions, so-called, that have been in operation for a number of years, and I can see but little difference between their system, and the savings department of a bank. With the elimination of the "non-member" feature it looks to me as if the credit-union is almost a useless bit of machinery for most borrowers, and something with which get-rich-quick promoters will hardly waste their time. With your continued kind indulgence I will read a few excerpts from the bill, and from the law as passed.

That's about all I know about the different kind of loan companies, and how they effect the chattel loan business.

Certainly, there is plenty of competition in the business and for the making of small loans in general—and I think there will be a continued increase instead of an increase in the number of companies and new types of loaning.

But among ourselves, the new type of competition that is developing is one of coöperation—of treating your competitor as you would be treated. This was unknown before the formation of the state and national association and the direct results of just such get together meetings as these.

Fair competition does not hurt our business. It is the life of any business. It is up to us to see that those who have entered the loan business without thought of what their methods may mean to its future, be shown up in their true light.

DR. LOUIS ROBINSON'S INVESTIGATION.

A few days ago I received a letter from your genial secretary, Mr. Hartz, requesting that I prepare something for your meeting on the subject of the survey which is being made of the Small Loan Business by Dr. Louis N. Robinson.

Having resided in Indianapolis for something like three years, I am quite familiar with the Indiana spirit of "help the other fellow," and it is on account of this spirit that I was prompted to accept Mr. Hartz's assignment, rather than because of any particular knowledge I have of the work Dr. Robinson is doing.

To begin with, it seems to me that to present anything like the true picture of events leading up to the time when the Survey was proposed and to get at a reason why it appeared a feasible thing to do, we must go back several years.

In his address before the Convention in New York last September, Dr. Robinson said in part: "Among loan men who are familiar with the history of the business it is not out of place to mention Ham as one of those who saw further into the future than most of his contemporaries. I do not refer to Ham of the Old Testament. The only thing with which history credits him is being the founder of the Negro race, an accomplishment of great magnitude, but one somewhat off color. I refer here to Arthur H. Ham, formerly director of the Division of Remedial Loans of the Russell Sage Foundation. Speaking before the Third Annual Convention of the American Association of Small Loan Brokers, in 1917, Mr. L. C. Harbison said: 'Although the question of interest for the use of money is almost as old as Creation itself, little of a constructive nature was accomplished toward eliminating the evils surrounding the Small Loan Business as carried on in modern times, until in 1909 the Division of Remedial Loans of the Russell Sage Foundation was organized. All here know something of its activities and the results of them. Giving the movement due credit, we must admit that indirectly, at least, all modern small loan legislation is the result!"

Continuing, Dr. Robinson said: "It is not necessary for me to tell you, gentlemen, that Mr. Ham was the man in charge of this work carried on by the Russell Sage Foundation. Mr. Ham resigned in the early part of 1919. His resignation was a great blow to the loan business, but there are, fortunately, plenty of men of vision in the business itself who are determined that progress shall not stop and that the momentum already gained shall not be lost."

I should like to repeat a part of the last paragraph of Dr. Robinson's speech, for if we are looking for a reason to justify the survey, it seems to me we have it in these lines, "There are, fortunately, plenty of men of vision in the business itself who are determined that progress shall not stop and that the momentum already gained shall not be lost."

Progress is rather a difficult word to define. It is largely a matter of degree and in its relation to any movement its limitation is determined to a great extent by the efforts those interested put forth. No report of progress in connection with any movement is complete that does not reckon with the study which intelligent, capable men have given the subject.

You are all familiar with the fact that Dr. Robinson was engaged originally by a group of lenders, however, after several months the Russell Sage Foundation, impressed with the sincerity of the men behind the movement, and believing that it would accomplish a great deal of good, was prompted to take over the survey January first, and Dr. Robinson is going on with his work under their supervision.

This, of itself, must be very gratifying to everyone in the loan business. It speaks well of the work and the man who is doing it, and it also removes any doubt which might exist in the minds of any who were inclined to question the good motives behind anything the lenders themselves might do.

Many of you have filled out questionnaires gotten up by Dr. Robinson to be used in his study of the borrower. The information contained on these questionnaires is to be transcribed to punch cards, and later the punch cards will be run through tabulating machines that count them automatically. A set of questionnaires is being collected from all over the country, and at various seasons so that the information will amount to a census that will be typical of the entire year.

A Legal Survey is also under way, the scope of which is as follows:

1. A statement of and reference to the statutes regulating the rate of interest chargeable in the states and territories of the United States including (a) general legislation, (b) pawnbrokers, (c) small loans, (d) investment companies, etc.

2. An analysis of the principal details of existing small loan legislation and statutes under which small loans are made.

3. An examination of the earlier statutes governing the rates of interest to be charged on small loans.

4. A study of the decisions construing the Uniform Small Loan Law and similar legislation.

5. The constitutionality of small loan legislation, without special reference to the particular constitutions of the various states.

6. What is the business regulated: to wit, what is the business of loaning money and what is the loan use, or forbearance of money?

7. A general statement of the main legal principles, methods and devices used by lenders, with a reference to decide cases.

The work in connection with the Legal Research above referred to is being handled by Messrs. Hilborn and Hubachek under the direction of Dr. Robinson

It may be of interest to you to know that a study of the small loan business in Europe, by some people working over there under Dr. Robinson's direction, is nearly completed and will be included in the history which Dr. Robinson proposes to write.

It is becoming increasingly difficult to impress legislators in legal rate states with the necessity for the three and one-half per cent rate. This is due somewhat to the fact that since the Uniform Law has been in effect for several years in most states where it operates, the days when people paid 10% to 20% per month are practically forgotten and there is more tendency now to compare the 3½% rate with the interest rates charged by banks. Little progress is being made toward getting the uniform law enacted in states where there is no law effecting the small loan business, notwithstanding the efforts which have been put forth. Legislators are hard to convince that 3½% per month is a fair and just rate. To this some of you, who have had a part in legislative work, will agree, and we have nothing to prove our case except our own argument, that a lesser rate would not permit those engaged in the money lending business to make a fair return on their money.

We can refer to a mass of printed matter such as speeches made before conventions, indorsements of various civic and welfare organizations, and the like, but with the exception of what has been written by Mr. Ham and that deals with conditions as they existed eight or ten years ago, we have absolutely nothing which represents an up-to-date, thoroughly honest, scientific study of the business from every angle.

The business of making small loans is a very necessary one and is as reputable as any other business when it is properly conducted, but we need the facts to show the public, not merely the facts as we know them, but the whole truth that a survey conducted by a man of Dr. Robinson's caliber and under the auspices of the Sage Foundation will bring out.

I believe, most lenders want only a square deal. I feel absolutely certain they will get that and that ultimately this survey will have proven its value by bringing about a better understanding between lenders and the public, by further justifying a greater interest rate than that charged by banks, and by adding respectability to a business that has been abused and misunderstood for many, many years, but which is making great strides forward and which will finally be classed with other forms of banking, where it rightfully belongs.

Maurice S. Kent of Indianapolis gave a talk on "How to Decrease Your Losses on Account of Skips."

"How to reduce your losses on account of skips," is a very embarrassing subject for me to speak on. You will realize why when you stop to consider that there are men present here who were able and very successful loan men long before my birth.

Anyway we younger managers to-day take too much credit for being able to conduct a successful office. We are really profiting by the mistakes and experiences of the older men. The pioneers deserve most of the credit as it is largely through their untiring efforts that we are in a position to operate to-day and have a nice clean legitimate business.

Getting a good application is the most important part of the deal in regard to reducing skips according to my views. If this large or reference application is taken properly you will lose no business over it. Just explain to the customer that it is not used as reference that as soon as he signs the papers he will get the money. Tell him it would be very foolish for you to give him your money and investigate afterwards. This is usually sufficient and no further explanation is necessary. When you get this application get everything possible on it and write it down, don't trust to memory. Be sure to have the husband's and wife's father's and mother's name and address, also the names of the children and the school they attend or their places of employment. You cannot get too much on this application. The more you get the better the loan and the less the chance of having a skip on your hands.

Next explain the deal thoroughly, let the customer know just what you expect of him. Be sure to make it clear that it is not in accordance with the State Laws to move mortgaged property and that they must be sure to notify you before they move if they ever have to.

If the customer is a renewal check over the security with him verbally and ask him if he still has every piece listed. Check over the large reference application also and make the necessary changes on it if there are any. After a renewal is made more especially if the man is a renter, put the application in the route and let the outside man verify the address and security if you think that necessary.

When a customer makes a payment be sure to ask him his address. This not only keeps you in close touch with your man but also prevents the error of getting the payment credited to the wrong card.

If a customer is out of town, write him a letter every two days no matter how far he has skipped. Keep on writing and don't give up. This usually gets something out of him if its only a protest against your methods.

If you can't get a payment out of him by mail here's where your association comes in. Send it to a brother member with every possible bit of information you can think of right down to the smallest detail. It might help to collect your account.

Some of you may not agree with me but please be charitable as I gave my opinions with nothing but a helpful motive in view. When Mr. Hartz asked me to speak I wasn't going to make it possible for him to say that Kent is the kind of a fellow who always wants George to do it. I thank you.

H. H. Burrell of the committee appointed on educational publicity reported committee favored an educational campaign and recommended that $1,000.00 be appropriated for this purpose.

It was moved and carried that an appropriation be made not to exceed $1,000 for an educational campaign and that the same committee be empowered to take charge and employ some agency to prepare the copy, etc.

A resolution was offered as follows: Any member who is more than six months delinquent in dues, and a registered letter has been sent demanding payment by the secretary, will be automatically suspended after thirty days from date of letter from membership in the association, but may be re-instated within six months by paying dues due to date. Carried.

The Auditing Committee, reported as follows: This is to certify that we have audited the books of W. R. Hancock, Treasurer of the Indiana Industrial Lenders Association and find them all right. The balance three thousand, one hundred and sixty dollars and sixty cents ($3,160.60) is correct per statement of Bankers Trust Company attached.

Election of Officers.

Paid delegates to American Association Convention: F. L. Thompson, H. H. Burrell; alternates, C. E. Clift, C. E. Durnell.

Fred Davies, president has appointed J. H. Aufderheide, chairman of Law Committee; W. A. Zumpfe, chairman of Membership Committee and A. C. Broughman, chairman of Publicity Committee.

It was unquestionably decided that it was not good policy to loan a wife without husband's signature.

Some plan where companies figure interest the same. This was discussed at some length and a motion was made and carried "that the law committee get a report from the state department which shall be sent to all companies setting forth how interest should be computed. Carried.

How long should a loan run before principle payments are required. It was unquestionably decided that the best policy was to secure principle payments each month.

Will small ads bring the same results if all ads are uniform. This question was discussed at some length and might be classed as being an economical question, rather than a business getter; opinions differed. Some agreed to try it, others thought best not.

Would it be better to limit loans to $200.00.

There was no special opinion on this as this subject has been discussed for the past three years and it was suggested that there was as many opinions on this as there were people. However, it was decided by the convention that we should at all times take care of ten dollar loans as well as the larger ones. A call for how many companies made ten dollar loans resulted in every company raising their hands, which proves that Indiana companies are rendering a real service to their customers.

Bankruptcy. What effect has bankruptcy proceedings on a chattel mortgage. If recorded, it is a preferred claim, if not recorded it takes its place along with open accounts, except that it is necessary for the mortgagee to prove that money was actually loaned where the loan was made shortly before the bankruptcy proceedings were filed.

A report was made on the 2% law which was introduced in the last legislature and there is no question if the public were enlightened on how the business is conducted, how the rate applies that there would not be legislation introduced which only proves that no owner, employee should ever overlook an opportunity of telling the public their story.

W. B. Crunk offered a resolution that a rising vote of thanks be given to the Indianapolis members for the hospitality extended during the convention and the excellent convention.

CURRENT LEGISLATION.

The Uniform Small Loan Law.—From earliest times the business of lending money for a profit has been regarded with disfavor, and, as a result, has always been subject to drastic legislation.[1] This legislation has been, for the greater part, restrictive in character and generally in the form of prohibiting the charging of more than the statutory rate of interest under penalty of forfeiture or punishment.[2] General usury legislation has been criticized as ineffective,[3] and opposed to economic theory,[4] and its abolition urged.[5] But, whatever may be the wisdom of regulating interest charges in general, there is practically unanimity of opinion in favor of regulating the small loan business. The almost invariable disparity in position of the parties to small loan transaction renders legislative protection to borrowers a necessary safeguard. Most usury legislation has taken no cognizance of the fundamental differences between ordinary commercial loans and small loans for consumptive purposes,[6] grouping the two together and failing to realize that a situation exists in the small loan field which cannot be remedied by legislative fiat, but requires constructive remedial legislation. Under this restrictive legislation business capital has found lawful lending in small amounts to be unprofitable, and has abandoned this business to the so-called loan shark whose charges are exorbitant and demoralizing.[7] Since restrictive legislation leads to greater risks to the lender it merely results in higher charges. So long as a need exists for small loans,[8] it will be met, and if the need cannot be met lawfully, the law will be evaded.[9]

The chief remedies proposed in order to end the loan shark evil have been restrictive legislation, philanthropic lending institutions, coöperative lending associations, governmental lending and legislative encouragement to the introduction of commercial capital into the small loan field. Restrictive legislation has failed to remedy the situation.[10] Philanthropic lending institutions may meet the need of a small number of needy borrowers,[11] but the need for small loans is too great to be adequately met in this way, even if charity be considered an effective cure for an economic evil. Coöperative lending associations[12] meet the needs of their members only. Government lending has as yet met with little serious consideration and its adoption in the near future seems improbable. The most feasible and desirable method seems to be the introduction of commercial capital into the small loan field in sufficient quantities to satisfy the need for small loans at a rate of interest fair to both borrower and lender, and to eliminate the loan shark evil by competition rather than by restriction.

The Uniform Small Loan Law, drafted by a joint committee of the Russell Sage Foundation and the American Association of Small-Loan Brokers, is an attempt to accomplish this result by providing legislation which will protect the honest money lender, secure to him a fair return, and also protect the borrower against exorbitant charges. This law has been enacted with slight variations in eleven states,[13] and with substantial changes in the rate of interest in eight others.[14] It has been held constitutional wherever attacked,[15] the regulation of the money lending business coming under the police power of the states and the classification feature of section 1 of the Act being held reasonable.

[6] The chief differences are: (1) There is a greater risk in lending money for consumptive purposes than for commercial purposes, since the commercial loan is used in ways which will provide means for repayment. The needy circumstances of the average borrower of a small loan increases the risk. (2) There is a greater operating expense in making small loans. More investigation is required to make a small loan than is usually required in the case of a large commercial loan, due to the greater risk entailed. In addition payments are usually made in small amounts, necessitating more bookkeeping and general overhead expenditure. (3) The consumption loan uses capital; the commercial loan uses credit. As a result the commercial bank may lend to amounts exceeding its capital; the amount which the money lender can loan is limited to his capital.

The Act consists of two main parts, a substantive part and a procedural part designed to enforce the substantive provisions. The salient substantive features of the Act are the provisions allowing any person who has secured a license from the state licensing official to charge an interest of three and one-half per cent a month[16] on unpaid balances in amounts not exceeding three hundred dollars[17] and forbidding unlicensed persons from charging more than the legal rate. The three hundred dollar maximum was made as it was felt that loans of more than that amount were more properly the subject of commercial banking. The chief point of controversy, and the point in which states adopting the Uniform Act in substance have departed from it,[18] has been in regard to the rate of interest of three and one-half per cent per month.[19]

Only those who obtain a license may charge the rate of interest provided for by the Uniform Act,[20] and the power to grant such license is given to the state official in charge of banks who is to grant such license on the payment of a fee of one hundred dollars and the giving of a bond of one thousand dollars conditioned on conforming with the provisions of the Act.[21] The licensing official is given the power to revoke such license for violation of the provisions of the Act upon notice to the licensee and reasonable opportunity for a hearing.[22] For the purpose of enforcing the law, section 10 gives the licensing official or his agents free access to the books and records of all licensed lenders, and the authority to examine under oath all persons whose testimony may be relevant. To further facilitate such investigations, the licensee is required by section 11 to keep his books, papers and records in accordance with rules promulgated by the licensing officials. Furthermore, misleading advertising is prohibited by section 12.

For the purpose of enabling the borrower to know exactly under what conditions he is borrowing the lender is required by section 14 to give him a written statement of the amount, date of the loan, date of the maturity of the loan, nature of the security, if any, the name and address of the lender, and the rate of interest charged. In addition the lender must print beneath this information a copy of Section 13 of the Uniform Act. Plain and complete receipts of all payments must be given, and all written evidence of paid loans must be marked "paid" or "cancelled" and any security for such paid loans must be returned to the borrower.[23] The taking of confessions of judgments or powers of attorney from the borrower is prohibited.[24] Recognition of the interest of the family in assignments of wages or chattel mortgages on household furniture is found in the provision of the Act requiring such assignments or mortgages to be signed by both husband and wife if the borrower be married.[25] Under such assignment the lender may collect a maximum of ten per cent of each payment of wages. Section 16 provides that such assignment of wages must be executed simultaneously with the contracting of the loan for which it is security. In addition there are miscellaneous provisions supplementing the foregoing sections and designed to prevent evasions of the Act.[26] A further provision exempts banking companies, trust companies, building and loan associations and licensed pawn brokers from the provisions of the Act.[27]

The Act has been in operation in a number of states for a period sufficient to test its utility. A voluminous mass of material collected by the proponents of the measure [28] testify to its success. This testimony indicates that under the Act the business of money lending has been brought into the light, has changed from an underhanded, semi-legal enterprise which the world stigmatized as loan shark to that of an honorable, commercial venture, while at the same time the interest charges to the borrowing public have been lowered from the former exorbitant amounts of from one hundred per cent to one thousand per cent to a comparatively small rate of forty-two per cent per annum. Conditions under the Act are, of course, not ideal. A rate of three and one-half per cent per month is not the millennium. However, the Act undoubtedly represents an advance. Its method of approach to the problem, providing a remedy for an evil rather than attempting to surpress it, is the only one which can succeed. The experiences of the different states operating under different rates of interest will aid in the determination of the correct rate. Probably no rate will ever be found which is the "correct" rate, for a state wide act must cover territory, the sections of which differ greatly in their needs and ability to support profitably a small loan business. But, whatever be the ultimate solution of the small loan problem, and we may hope that some day improved economic conditions will solve the problem by eliminating it, there can be no doubt that the Uniform Act is an important contribution.—Columbia Law Review Vol. XXIII, No. 5, May, 1923.

PENNSYLVANIA.

The regular meeting of the Pennsylvania Industrial Lenders Association was held in Room B of the Chamber of Commerce, Pittsburgh, at 2 p. m Tuesday, May 29, 1923.

The meeting was called to order by Chairman A. V. Hart.

Twenty-one member representatives were present.

REPORT OF OFFICERS.

The Treasurer reported on hand May 29, 1923, $1,97[illegible].15. On motion of Mr. Ezekiel seconded by Mr. Wick this report was accepted.

The Secretary reported 188 licensed

Banking Law, Art. 9 (this statue has been criticized as furnishing an inadequate return on small loans—the interest allowed is two percent per month plus small fees—with the result that few licenses to operate under it have been applied for and the greater part of the small loan field has been left in the hands of the loan sharks. See Hilborn, Philosophy of the Uniform Small Loan Law (1923) 5; Hodson, The Fair Rate of Interest for Small Loans (1923) 113 et seq.; Ham, op. cit., p. 10); Ohio Laws 1915, p. 281; Ore., Laws 1915, c. 219 (this Act seems faulty in that it attempts to regulate both pawn loans and small loans in the same act, though the nature of the two types of loans is quite different); Utah Laws 1917, c. 41.

Decisions under earlier loan legislation indicate that the uniform act will be held constitutional in other states. See State v. Wickenhoefer (Del. 1906) 6 Penn. 120, 64 Atl. 273; see also infra, footnotes 21, 25, 27.

[16] § 13. A saving section in some acts permits the interest to be computed according to the system used in the Morris Plan, see Industrial Finance Corp., The Morris Plan (1915), so as to insure the legality of that method of money lending. See Ariz., Laws 1919, c. 91, § 25.

[17] § 13. This limitation is not found in the Ohio Act. Its presence was the distinguishing feature between the unconstitutional Pennsylvania Act of 1913 and the constitutional Act of 1915. See Commonwealth v. Pudor. Supra, footnote 15. The New York Act contains an additional limitation restricting the net earnings of a money lender to fifteen per cent.

[18] Colo.—1% per month; Mass.—3% per month; Mich.—3% per month on loans up to $100, 2% per month on loans over $100 and up to $300, plus fees N. H.—3% plus fees; N. Y.—2% plus fees; Ohio—3% per month plus fees: Ore.—3% per month; Utah—3% per month.

[19] As pointed out, a greater interest charge is required in the small loan business than is necessary in commercial banking. See supra, footnote 6. The rate of 3½% per month was chosen by the draftsmen of the Uniform Act as one which would be fair to both borrower and lender and as one under which small loan lending could be carried on. It represents a substantial decrease in the rates which borrowers previously had been paying for small loans See supra, footnote 7. Several states have adopted different rates (see supra, footnote 18) and to this, the failure of the Act in many of these states has been ascribed; it being found that money lenders will not apply for licenses where smaller rates are allowed, perferring rather to take their chances in evading the law. See Hodson, op. cit.; Hilborn, op. cit., p. 4; Ham, Small Loan Law (1922) 5. The fee system adopted in some states (see supra, footnote 18) has been discarded because of the possibility of abuse under such system in favor of the flat rate of 3½% per month, together with only such fees as are charged to the lender for recording any papers made in connection with the loan.

[20] § 17. This is usually considerably more than the so-called legal rate of interest. See Webb, op. cit., p. 621.

[21] § 3. A similar provision in the Ohio Small Loan Act was upheld as constitutional. Wessell v. Timberlake (1916) 95 Ohio St. 21, 116 N. E. 43. New York requires a bond proportional to the capital of the incorporated money lender.

[22] § 6. A second conviction for charging a higher rate of interest than permissible under § 13 necessitates revocation of the license.

[24] § 15. This section was inserted because of the abuses possible under such powers.

[25] § 16. This is not necessary when husband and wife have been living separate and apart for a period of five months prior to such transaction. A provision of the Massachusetts Small Loan Act similar to this was held constitutional. Mutual Loan Co. v. Martell (1911) 222 U. S. 225, 32 Sup. Ct. 74.

[26] Thus pretended sales or additional charges made to evade the Act are prohibited. Uniform Small Loan Act, § 17. Under the general usury laws the courts have been lenient in regard to the enforcement of usurious loans made in other states. See (1921) 21 Columbia Law Rev. 585. Under section 17 of the Uniform Act, no loan for which a greater rate of interest than is provided for in the Act is to be enforced.

[27] § 19. A provision similar to this in the Louisiana Small Loan Law was declared unconstitutional. State v. Jackson (1915) 137 La. 742, 69 So. 158. But a similar provision in the Massachusetts Act was declared constitutional. Mutual Loan Co. v. Martell, supra, footnote 25.

B. E. Henderson.

"Chicago Commerce" May 12th, contains an interesting article on "Aces in Campaign Tell How They Did It" in which one of our members, B. E. Henderson, comes in for the usual distinction of "Double Ace." This is another example of how our members shine in public welfare work.

Here is Mr. Henderson's own story:

In soliciting a prospect for membership I stressed the fact that The Chicago Association of Commerce is strictly a Chicago organization working all of the time for the welfare of Chicago. What helps Chicago, helps everyone in the city from both a social and business standpoint. Therefore I pointed out to the prospect, every reputable business man should be a member and booster for the association. This argument usually won my men.

lenders in Pennsylvania May 1, 1923, of which 91 are members of our association, 4 of which are delinquent in their dues since January 1, 1923. Sixty-seven of our 91 members are also members of the American I. L. Association. On motion of Mr. Young seconded by Mr. Fahringer the secretary's report was accepted.

Report of Committees.

The secretary reported for the Executive Committee Chairman Webster. The recommendations of the Executive Committee will be found under New Business in these minutes. On motion of Mr. Young seconded by Mr. Loupe, the Executive Committee's report was approved and referred to new business.

Mr. Young reported progress for Membership Committee Chairman Mueller.

The secretary reported progress for Publicity Committee Chairman Moore.

Mr. Ezekiel, chairman of the Entertainment Committee reported progress, plus an invitation to the annual meeting in November at Philadelphia, also the Reading meeting in July.

The Chair reported for Legislative Committee Chairman Kehr. Outlined the work of this committee in detail, which was received with interest.

Unfinished Business.

The following delegates were selected to represent the association at the Louisville Convention of the American Industrial Lenders Association in September. Mr. Young, of Philadelphia, chairman; Messrs. Harris, Kline, Reeves, Wick, Ezekiel, Hart, Mueller, Moss and Webster.

The Chair called attention to the distribution by one of our members of the booklets of Dr. Robinson's address at the November 1922 annual meeting and urged that others, who wish to do educational work, do likewise. This may be accomplished through the secretary's office. On motion of Mr. Young, seconded by Mr. Dunn, the chairman's recommendation was approved.

On motion of Mr. Young, seconded by Mr. Hartman, the observance of the following holidays were recommended to our members as approved by the Executive Committee:

New Year's Day, Monday, January 1st; Washington's Birthday, Thursday, February 22d; Memorial Day, Wednesday, May 30th; Independence Day, Wednesday, July 4th; Labor Day, Monday, September 3d; Armistice Day, Sunday, November 11th; Thanksgiving Day' Thursday, November 29th; Christmas Day, Tuesday, December 25th.

Also other such holidays as the members might desire to observe.

Mr. Young, of the Community Finance Service Incorporation reported having opened an office, nearly exclusively for colored borrowers in Pittsburgh, and that there was a likelihood of a similar office being opened in Philadelphia. The Chair commended Mr. Young and his concern for their endeavor and urged members in these two cities to send their prospective colored borrowers to the Community Finance Service, Incorporated. The Chair called attention, however, to the need of each concern caring for the colored borrower. It is to be supposed that our members will recognize the need of making such loans, otherwise the operation of the Small Loan Law will be ineffective. Mr. Henderson called attention to the need of making a greater number of small loans. This is the result of his legislative experience. This was supplemented by the Chair and Messrs. Ezekiel and Hartman. On motion of Mr. Wick, seconded by Mr. Fahringer the Association most heartily placed itself on record as approving of the making of small loans below $50.00 and that this practice be encouraged to not only advertise to make them, but to actuallv take care of this class of business.

New Business

On motion of Mr. Wick, seconded by Mr. Ezekiel, the Girard Investment Company, 1435 Land Title Bldg., Philadelphia; Peoples Investment Company, Thompson Bldg., Pottsville and the Atlas Loan Society, 339 Fifth Avenue, Room 501, Pittsburgh were elected to membership.

On motion of Mr. Young, seconded by Mr. Thail, the resignation of Mr. Alcott as a member of the Executive Committee was accepted.

On motion of Mr. Young, seconded by Mr. Reeves, Mr. Hess, of Philadelphia, was elected to membership on the Executive Committee.

On motion of Mr. Klein, seconded by Mr. Wick, the bills for the entertainment of today's meeting and banquet of this evening were ordered paid on proper presentation of bills.

The Chair made a further recommendation that all members be urged to eliminate from their literature and advertising matter all statements that had any bearing or were in any wise related to the use of the term "Loan Shark." On motion of Mr. Wick, seconded by Mr. Harris, this was ordered spread on the minutes.

A report by Messrs. Reeves and Watts was made on the companies who are lending money under the guise of purchasing salaries. On motion of Mr. Watts, seconded by Mr. Harris, the Executive Committee was authorized to draw on the treasury for such funds as might be required in our effort to bring the Salary Buyers under proper supervision.

The Chair announced the next meeting of the association would probably be at Reading, on July 24th or 27th, due notice of which will be given in advance. On motion of Mr. Henderson, seconded by Mr. Reeves the very able paper of Mr. Hartman's on the Conduct of the Pittsburgh Exchange Bureau was ordered sent to the editor of the Lenders News and a vote of thanks tendered Mr. Hartman for his address.

Following Mr. Hartman's paper a very general discussion was had on the merits of the Exchange Bureau in the various communities in which they are already in operation.

Mr. Thail of Pittsburgh read Mr. Moss's paper, "Proper Instruction to Borrowers When Loan Is Made." On motion of Mr. Watts, seconded by Mr. Ezekiel, this was ordered forwarded to the editor of Lenders News and a vote of thanks tendered Mr. Moss for his effort.

On motion of Mr. Ezekiel, seconded by Mr. Young, a vote of thanks was tendered the Pittsburgh lenders and their committee for entertainment of our meeting.

There appearing no further business to transact, on motion of Mr. Dunn, seconded by Mr. Harris, the meeting was adjourned.

C. H. Watts,
Secretary.

The dinner and entertainment was held in the banquet room of the Chatham Hotel, at 6:45 and enjoyed by members, friends and guests. Attorneys Levin and Grimes, of Pittsburgh, were the speakers of the evening.

CONVENTION NEWS.

Comparatively few suggestions have reached the Chairman of the Program Committee, G. W. Kehr, Harrisburg, Pa., since the date of our last issue, when an invitation was extended to everyone to send in any suggestions that they might have which would help to make the Ninth Annual National Convention at Louisville, September 19 to 22, the most interesting Convention held by the representatives of the industrial loan business. Notwithstanding this fact, we expect to have a good program and a good turn out but we would like the program to represent the wishes of the majority of the members, so suggestions will be welcome and adopted if practicable.

At this early date we have made arrangements for comfortable accommodations at the Seelbach Hotel, where the Convention will be held, but it is necessary for each member to send in his reservations direct to the Hotel on a card which will be provided for the purpose and sent out with our August issue.

The Mayor of Louisville, the Hon. Huston Quin, has consented to deliver the Address of Welcome, and Robert F. Vaughan, one of the leading members of the Louisville Bar, who has been a staunch supporter of decent small loan legislation in Kentucky, will deliver the Address of Welcome in behalf of local members of the A. I. L. A.

Among the other speaker probabilities, we have Walter S. Hilborn, acting Director of the Division of Remedial Loans of the Russell Sage Foundation, Dr. Reginald Heber Smith, Boston, Mass., Dean of E. E. Eubank, Cincinnati University. Dr. Frank L. McVey, Kentucky University, William A. Murphy, Director of the Department of Trade and Commerce of Illinois, Dr. Louis N. Robinson, who is sure to make some interesting remarks upon his study of the small loan business during the past year. Everyone of these men are of high standing and the messages which they will have to bring to our National Convention will be worth hearing.

From a practical standpoint, a few interesting subjects have been suggested but we want many more before deciding on what we shall include in the program. We want good live subjects which will provoke good discussions that will make it worth while for a man who operates an office to make the trip to Louisville.

With this paper will go a questionnaire which will enable the committee to decide from the answers to the questions submitted what the final draft of the program will be. A prompt return of these questionnaires will be greatly appreciated.

NOTICE

Notice is hereby given that the undersigned, members of the National Council of the American Industrial Lenders' Association, hereby recommend that Article 11 of the Constitution of said Association be amended so as to read as follows:

"Dues. Dues in this Association shall be $10.00 for each office for each calendar year, or fraction thereof, and shall be paid by each State Treasurer in organized territory and by the members themselves in unorganized territory, annually in advance, on January first."

The undersigned will propose such amendment for adoption and approval by the Association at its next annual meeting, to be held at Louisville, Kentucky, September 19th to 22nd, 1923.

"N. F." CONVENTION

The Fifteenth Annual Convention of the National Federation of Remedial Loan Associations was held at the Hotel Martin, Sioux City, Iowa, June 7-9. Eleven of the member societies were represented as follows:

Collateral Loan Co., Boston, Mass., Thos. J. Reid; The Provident Loan Society of New York, N. Y., Arthur H. Ham; Newark Provident Loan Ass'n., Newark, N. J., William F. Davis; Provident Loan Society of Detroit, Mich., John E. Ryan; Chattel Loan Society of New York, N. Y., George H. Loh; Provident Loan Society, St. Paul, Minn., D. S. Coffey; Provident Loan Ass'n., Sioux City, Ia., A. L. Whitmer; San Francisco Remedial Loan Ass'n., San Francisco, Ca., Albert C. Auger; Provident Loan Society, Rochester, N. Y., Fred A. Phillips; Duluth Remedial Loan Ass'n., Duluth, Minn., H. A. Berg; Provident Loan Society, Omaha, Neb., W. E. Palmatier. There were also present by invitation Dr. Louis N. Robinson, of the Russell Sage Foundation, and Nelle M. Beach, State Bank Examiner, of Iowa.

At the opening session the delegates were welcomed to Sioux City by Mr. Britton, President of the Local Chamber of Commerce.

Following the report of the Secretary-Treasurer, J. E. Ryan, of Detroit, an interesting report was made by Dr. Louis N. Robinson on the progress of the survey of the small loan business, which he is making under the auspices of the Russell Sage Foundation.

The problem of raising capital to finance the reasonable growth of remedial loan societies was ably discussed by Albert C. Auger, of San Francisco.

A. L. Whitmer, of Sioux City, presented an interesting paper on good will in the small loan business and the relations that should exist between manager and borrower.

Thos. J. Reid, of Boston, discussed the conducting of public auction sales of unredeemed loans by pawning societies, disposition of surplus, and application of federal and state tax requirements.

A paper by Samuel Wolfort, of the First State Pawners' Society, of Chicago, dealt with stolen property and the relations of the pawning society to the police department.

Albert Knight, assistant manager of the Workingmen's Loan Association, of Providence, R. I., submitted a paper dealing with some of the devices which dishonest borrowers adopt to defeat loan societies, and ways and means of guarding against such frauds.

Each manager present told briefly of his most interesting experience in connection with the small loan business. This produced a lively discussion.

On the evening of June 8, the delegates attended a banquet at the Hotel Martin as guests of Mr. Whitmer. Directors and stockholders of the Provident Loan Association of Sioux City and personal friends of Mr. Whitmer were also present, Mr. Ham acted as toastmaster. Two remarkable addresses were delivered by Rev. Dr. Dooreen, of Kansas City, and Rev. Dr. Perkins, of Council Bluffs. Both of these addresses dealt in the main with the ethics that should prevail in present day business, with special reference to the small loan business.

At a business session the officers of the Federation were re-elected as follows: Arthur H. Ham, of New York City, Chairman; D. S. Coffey, of St. Paul, Minn., Vice-Chairman; John E. Ryan, of Detroit, Mich., Secretary-Treasurer; Mr. R. C. Raby counsel, and members of the Executive Committee were reappointed for another year.

No decision was reached as to time and place of the 1924 convention. Cordial invitations were received from Portland, Me., and San Francisco, Cal.

REPORT OF OFFICERS.

Chairman Larsen's report is incorporated in the enclosed letter addressed to the secretary as follows:

PHILADELPHIA, MAY 22, 1923.

Dear Mr. Moore:

Upon my return to this city from the South, the notice of your meeting called for to-day, and also your kind letter of the 16th inst., was received too late for me to write the requested report so that same would be in your hands for the meeting.

This I regret very much and also the fact that my duties to my employer, will not permit me being present with you to-day. I fully realize that it has been my loss not to have met with you more than the meetings of July, September, October and February, since the great honor was done me by being elected chairman of this association on June 6, 1922.

Judging from the minutes so kindly sent me by you, of the meetings for the months of February, March, April and May they all have been successful and if the good work is carried on as in the past there is no doubt in my mind but that the time will come when all Industrial Lenders of the state of Maryland, will see they cannot afford not to become members and join in our activities.

I was glad to learn that another new member has been obtained and I trust this member will take an active part in all the work of the association.

It was also pleasing to note what our friend, Dr. Robinson had to tell you on May 8th, pertaining to the good report from the Banking Department on members' coöperation.

I have no suggestions to make to you that I think should be brought up at the meeting to-day as I feel none are necessary to carry on the splendid work you all have been doing.

I do look forward to the time when you will have an exchange bureau in operation in your city. One that all are members of and working in coöperation with one another to make it successful.

Trusting you will remember me to all of our members and that I may be able to meet with you in the near future, I am,

Very respectfully yours,
H. H. LARSEN.

REPORT OF SECRETARY MOORE.

To the chairman and members of the Maryland Association:

In taking over the duties of secretary of this association I found a membership of 17 companies all of which were members of the American Industrial Lenders Association with dues paid to date in the State and National Bodies.

I am happy to say we have increased our membership by two and the secretary is going to hold a good thought that i will only be a short period of time unti these members will become members in the National Association.

During the year 9 monthly meetings were held with an average of 15 members in attendance.

Our 19 members have paid in the Treasury $637.45 covering dues for the year. We have collected and turned over to our National Secretary $969.25 covering dues for the year.

All dues in the Maryland Association are paid up to August 1st of this year with the exception of one member who is six months in arrears.

Our treasurer will give you a detailed itemized report covering our expenditures, therefore, I will not dwell upon this subject.

In October of last year ninety per cent of the Baltimore members, who were members of the Merchants and Manufacturers Association contributed $10.00 per office to the Baltimore Week Fund.

It is most pleasing to our secretary to know that each member is contributing most generously to the Baltimore Alliance and other worthy charitable organizations.

At the October monthly meeting, our Association went on record as favoring the $15,000,000 School Loan and it is most gratifying to know the loan passed and our children will reap the benefit of having better school advantages.

Our association favors observing the following holidays through the year, in our offices:

New Year Day, George Washington's Birthday, Decoration Day, Independence Day, Labor Day, Armistice Day. Thanksgiving Day and Christmas Day.

The Entertainment Committee is to be congratulated upon their wisdom in selecting men who are able to prepare most wonderful papers upon real live everyday subjects that pertain to our business. Your secretary enjoys each paper from an educational point of view and he is confident every man present coined many good suggestions, that he can use in his every day business in getting the other fellow's point of view May this good work continue.

E. E. Hougham, of the Executive Committee is to be congratulated upon his ability to draw up an attractive ad I refer to the present ad in the Baltimore Magazine.

It is to be regretted that several committees were not formed earlier in the year in order that they would have had more time to function. I believe in putting every man to work, place him on some committee. It will stimulate interest and our attendance for the coming year will be better and we will have better association meetings, meetings worth while, meetings that will bring messages of cheer, thereby lifting us into a higher and better plane.

In bringing this report to a close, I wish to thank the members for the patience they had with their new secretary and I wish to especially thank Mr. Hougham for his able assistance in acquainting me with the duties.

Respectfully submitted,
H. C. MOORE, Secretary.

M. & M. ASSOCIATION ACTIVITIES REPORT.

MAY 22, 1923.

To the chairman and members of the Maryland Industrial Lenders Association:

Nothing of importance affecting our interests has come before your committee in connection with the Merchants and Manufacturers Association.

The periodical dinners and also the annual dinner of the association has each and every one had one or more of our members in attendance.

The advertising in the Baltimore magazine has been changed three times. In this connection the writer suggests that the advertizing in this magazine be turned over to the Publicity Committee as the writer has found it difficult to find an advertisement which meets the approval of the whole association.

If the proposed Information Bureau becomes a fact our present standing and friendship in the M. & M. Association will be greatly strengthened and the writer urges the prompt acceptance of the offer of the Retail Merchants Bureau to handle the Information Bureau for us.

Your committee expects to take full advantage of the splendid facilities of the M. & M. Association during the next year and our efforts have been spent adding to and cementing the friendships already formed.

Your committee therefore reports progress of the most constructive type.

E. E. HOUGHAM, Chairman.

MEMBERSHIP COMMITTEE REPORT.

To the chairman of the Maryland Industrial Lenders Association.

Owing to the absence of J. J. Wood, chairman of the Membership Committee, I have been asked by the secretary to make a report on the activities of this committee.

On February 12th, Mr. Wood and myself were appointed as members of this committee. Mr. Wood called on several prospects but who they were and what results were obtained I am unable to state at this time due to the fact that we have been unable to reach Mr. Wood.

At our last meeting, on May 8th, we reported that the Standard Finance Company were eligible for membership and they were accepted.

There is a big field here for a committee to get new members and every non-member should be a member of this association.

Respectfully submitted,
W. F. OLIVER, JR.

On motion of E. E. Hougham, seconded by Mr. E. F. Moore, all of the above reports were accepted and ordered filed.

Election of officers on motion of Wm. Young, seconded by E. E. Hougham, the following members were nominated and unanimously elected for the Executive Committee: C. A. Gardner, Claude S. Thompson, H. C. Moore, J. D. Goldrick, H. T. Mattingly, E. E. Hougham and Wm. Young.

The Executive Committee immediately went in session and elected the following association officers:

Chairman, C. A. Gardner; vice-chairman, Claude S. Thompson; secretary, H. C. Moore, treasurer, J. D. Goldrick; chairman Executive Committee, H. T. Mattingly.

Chairman Gardner thanked the members in his impressive way for the honor conferred upon him and assured the members that he would do everything in his power to make our association a larger and better association for the coming year. He also urged close coöperation and loyalty from the members.

Chairman Gardner appointed the following committee chairmen:

Legislative, E. E. Hougham; Membership, Wm. Young; Program, Lewis F. Eckhart; Publicity, L. H. Pumphrey; Reception, E. S. Armstrong; Entertainment, H. T. Mattingly, W. F. Oliver, Jr., C. A. Gardner and E. E. Hougham.

There being no further business to transact the meeting adjourned until Tuesday, June 12th, at 8:00 o'clock.

H. C. MOORE, Secretary.

MARYLAND.

The June meeting of the Maryland Industrial Lenders Association was held in the Board Room of the Merchants and Manufacturers Association Building, No. 22 Light Street, Baltimore, Md., on Tuesday, June 12th, at 8:00 o'clock.

Chairman Gardner presided.

The following members were present: C. A. Gardner, United Finance and Security Corporation; G. W. Stancill, Wm. J. Delcher, Jr. and H. C. Moore, Peoples Finance Service Co.; R. L. Smith and Clifford L. Smith, Reliance Guarantee Co. and Surety Guarantee Co.; L. F. Eckhart, F. L. Brust, Roy T. Baseman, Peoples Loan Society; Louis Neimeyer, Commercial Guarantee Co.; C. R. Hathaway, F. M. Ebert and W. F. Oliver, Jr., Household Finance Service Co.; E. E. Hougham, Howard Hood, Coöperative Loan & Investment Co.; F. W. Ferri, C. E. Clift, Beneficial Loan Society; Mr. A. L. Wick, of Philadelphia and A. G. Zimmerman, supervisor of the Beneficial Loan Society.

In the absence of Wm. Young, chairman of the Membership Committee, F. W. Oliver, Jr., reported that he contemplated calling on Mr. Lubkin, manager of Walter L. Westphal and J. J. Wood, manager Credit Service Incorporation and he hoped to report these two prospects for membership at our next meeting.

The secretary read a letter calling the members' attention to a joint meeting of the Merchants and Manufacturers Association and the Kiwanis Club to be held in the way of a business man's luncheon at the Hotel Emerson, June 14th at 12.30 p. m.

Dixon C. Williams, of Chicago, Ill., will be the principal speaker. Mr. Williams is a successful manufacturer. He has been largely and actively in public life in the national way. Mr. Williams has made many effective addresses in our large cities. His speeches are strong, pungent and animated. Mr. Williams' most effective and timely address is entitled "Which Way," this is the one we will hear.

Upon motion of Mr. Wick, seconded by Mr. Eckhart, that the chairman appointed a committee of three to interview the members and urge that they attend this luncheon in a body.

Chairman appointed Messrs. Oliver, Eckhart and Moore to serve on this committee.

The following delegates were appointed to attend the National Convention to be held in Louisville, Ky., September 19-22, 1923. Chairman C. A. Gardner to represent us in the National Council. Mr. E. E. Hougham, special delegate, and Mr. H. T. Mattingly, alternate.

Exchange Committee chairman, Hougham reports progress.

Mr. Wick gave the members a pleasant talk as to the wonderful success the Pittsburgh lenders were having with their exchange, which has been in operation for about six months. This exchange started with nine members and at present has twelve. The exchange is run by one young lady, the average cost per office being $14.00 per month and an average of 40 applications exchanged daily. The lenders are working in complete harmony and are gradually eliminating the doubling up evil.

Mr. Clift of the Beneficial Loan Society advised that the Indianapolis exchange is being run with 14 members. The exchange has been in operation for about 16 years, originally started by 3 lenders. At present there is only one company in Indianapolis who does not belong to the exchange. They have complete records on every name that has passed through the clearing house since 1908. Two girls run the exchange.

Mr. Clift laid special stress upon the wonderful coöperation he found among the managers. The average costs per office range from $13.00 to $25.00 per month. Just as soon as an application is received it is cleared through the exchange by telephone. It is most interesting to know that arrangements have been made in the city with the second hand furniture dealers, who agree to telephone the exchange before purchasing furniture from a housekeeper. The second hand dealer agreeing to take up the loan balance. In this way it is hard for a crook to dispose of his furniture and skip out. Mr. Clift informed us that the loan business in Indianapolis is exceptionally clean, owing to the close coöperation among the lenders and their wonderful exchange system.

It is hoped the Baltimore lenders will be successful in starting their exchange at an early date, incorporating a great number of the ideas that we have coined from successful exchanges in other cities.

New Business.

"The Handling of an Application That Has Been Declined by a Skeptic," by C. R. Hathaway, Household Finance Service Co.

Mr. chairman and gentlemen: The subject that I have chosen for discussion to-night is "The Handling of an Application that has been Declined by a Skeptic." I will endeavor to read you a few arguments that can be used to educate this applicant.

There are numerous reasons why applications are declined. One is that the applicant is afraid of us, he believes that our interest is such an exorbitant rate, that we are robbing him. He says he can borrow money at 6% from any Building Association and he does not hesitate to express himself in this way to our outside man on his arrival to write a loan. If our outside representative will then explain to the applicant the methods of our business and take our profits and compare them with the profits of any other business concern, he can prove to the applicant that we are not robbing him. For instance, Mr. Applicant, if you borrow $100.00 from us to buy an article from a furniture house and pay us in six months, you will have paid us $10.50 for the use of our money and surely you have saved more than this amount by buying your article for cash. Another comparison, Mr. Applicant, you say you can borrow money from Building Associations at 6%, now the interest they charge is 6% on the running loan but they also charge a 5% bonus on the first mortgage, and 10 to 25% on the second mortgage, and 25 to 40% on the third mortgage. You, Mr. Applicant, would ninety-nine times out of a hundred be the man that would have to take the second mortgage paying the 10 to 25 bonus, so you see that the charge would be something like 22% interest. Now if you get $100.00 from us at the end of ten months you would have paid us $19.50 for the use of our money, while our interest figures 42% per annum on the volume of our business but is never collected. I would say that it only figures about 22% interest to the individual on the face for one year.

The Morris Plan Loan advertises that they loan money at 6%. When you get your loan from them of $100 they only give you $94.00 taking out the $6.00 interest at once, if you are fortunate enough to pay them back in one month, you will probably pay them $6.00 for the use of their money, while on the other hand a loan of $100.00 for one month from our concern would only cost you $3.50.

I also understand that they loan only on gilt edge security. I mean by this, that it is necessary for the borrower to have two property owners to sign on the note with him. By using this method they secure themselves so they cannot lose. On the other hand we give confidential service and we take a risk that the others do not.

A good many times we make a loan on security on which its value is barely enough to cover the amount of money obtained in cash.

All building financing concerns only loan from one to two thirds of the value of their security. All this proves to you, Mr. Applicant, that all of these financing concerns appear to be only hiding behind that so called 6% rate. Did you ever stop to think that if they only charged you 6% they could not pay you 6% on your savings as most of them do?

If this skeptic is handled in this way or with arguments along this line, you surely will convince him that he is wrong.

Our outside man has an opportunity there to sow seed that will bloom to good will toward our business and surely, gentlemen, he should take advantage of that opportunity, where, on the other hand, if our man leaves just saying "Very well sir, good-day" that man has not the interest of the business at heart and he will absolutely get no where. He has lost sight of the fact that we are bound together as an association. We have our National Convention, our State Convention and our meetings to advertise our business. We try in every way within our power to educate the public to the fairness and justice of our interest rate.

We will all agree that every man has a right to his own opinion but if by holding that opinion he is doing an injustice to another man's business then it is up to us to change it, if we can. It is said that to convince a fool against his will, he will remain of the same opinion still, but this applicant is not a fool, if he was he would have accepted that loan no matter how high the interest might be.

So you see, gentlemen, that we have an intelligent man to deal with and while his opinion is now a small obstacle in our way, if he was ever to hold a public office and be in authority over us, his opinion would prove to be a great obstruction to our business and as I have stated above, if our representative will plant seed that will bloom into good will toward us, even though he does not land the deal, he has made one more friend, that in the future, will not be skeptical to our business.

H. C. Hathaway.

In the absence of Claude Thompson, C. E. Clift read the following paper which was written by Mr. Thompson.

Character and Ability.

By Claude S. Thompson, Beneficial Loan Society.

Analysis of Character.

Character is a matter of honor, both business and personal. From the credit man's point of view, character measures a man's intention or inclination to pay his bills. An investigation should cover an applicant's past history, and must determine whether it has always been an honorable one. An applicant's personal action and deportment serve as a reliable index to his character. If the applicant has a good reputation and high personal honor, or his or her history shows that he or she has never been engaged in any shady transactions, and if they keep good company, we may feel reasonably sure that their character is all it should be. The credit man's eyes are open to many things that influence his estimates negatively, trifles perhaps, yet indications of business irresponsibility, a chance remark, an approval of some flagrant swindle, an exhibition of interest in municipal graft, or an expressed willingness to profit by it, a relish for newspaper scandal, the interlading of conversation with vulgarity—these are among the irrelevant things on which the credit man sometimes bases his refusal of credit.

Many of the best credit men, bankers and financiers, regard character as the most important element of credit factors.

Analysis of Ability.

When the credit man has estimated accurately as he can the character of his customer, he must then consider his ability. A man may be brilliant along technical lines and still fail in financial matters.

In a general way we measure a man's ability through his personal income gained through his own activities. The way in which he was educated, and the kind of experience he has had, throw interesting light on the subject. These things, however, are not definite enough. The manager must be able to form his judgment on facts rather than upon vague impressions and opinions. In order to do this, he must have knowledge in many lines of business in which his customers are engaged so that he can study their ability through their accomplishments. A survey of an applicant's position and a glance through his home will show whether a man is able and efficient or the opposite.

The manager tries to ascertain whether the applicant shows good sense in his relations with the stores that he deals with. Whether he ever buys his wants for the size of his family. If he is extravagant to any means, and what debts he has outstanding that will compare to the salary made. The salary is of most vital importance in the case of making loans. A man may work for a house for ten or twelve years and on the face of the application may be termed as a good man. If investigation is made through the people he works for it is ofttimes found that although he has been employed for a long time with a good reputation, later years have turned his character and destroyed his ability. He may be on the verge of being discharged, forced out or resigning on his own accord. What is his standing? Is it good?

Claude S. Thompson.

E. E. Hougham advised that he had arranged through R. A. Long for a suitable floral design.

Upon motion being made by Mr. Wick, seconded by Mr. Oliver the association commended Mr. Houghman for his thoughtfulness, and the Chair ordered the Treasurer to pay the bill.

Upon due motion the Secretary was instructed to write the family of Mr. Ryan a letter of sympathy.

Upon motion being made by Mr. Oliver, seconded and carried, the association is not to hold monthly meetings during July and August.

It was brought most forcibly to the association by Mr. Oliver citing an incident of where a client of his had applied to another member of the Maryland Association and she declined the loan owing to this member in question, charging a $5 look up fee in taking the application.

Mr. Hougham made a motion that a delegation be appointed to call on this member and get the facts covering this situation.

Chairman Gardner instructed Mr. Oliver to get an affidavit from his client covering this matter. Messrs. Hougham, Oliver and Gardner agreed to sift this matter to the bottom and report the result of their efforts at our next meeting.

No further business to transact, upon motion by Mr. Eckhart, seconded by Mr. Hood, the meeting adjourned until September 11, at 8 p. m. H. C. MOORE. Secretary.

RHODE ISLAND.

The regular meeting of the Rhode Island Industrial Lenders was held June 8, at 5:30 p. m. at the Providence Biltmore Hotel, where an appetizing luncheon was served.

The meeting was called to order by chairman Wood and those present were: A. L. Wick, Philadelphia, representing the American Industrial Lenders Association; W. G. Wood, Household Loan Company, Providence; J. H. Wickstrom, People's Finance Service Co., Providence; H. Moran, Mutual Loan Association, Providence; H. T. Chase, Peoples Loan Company, Providence; J. S. Lester, Economy Loan & Investment Co., Providence; F. N. Kennon, Peoples Finance Service Co., Pawtucket; H. Neal, Chester Company, Providence.

The membership committee reported two names for membership which are pending under further advisement.

On motion of Mr. Chase, seconded by Mr. Moran, the initiation fee of $15 to join the Rhode Island Lenders was dropped.

On motion of Mr. Wickstrom, seconded by Mr. Kennon, a bill for $35.25 for printing copies of the new law was paid. Distribution among lawyers and other men interested is to be made with the compliments of the Rhode Island Lenders Association.

A committee of two was appointed to consider and furnish notes and mortgages and other incidentals to be used beginning January 1st and submitted to the banking commissioner for approval.

The advisability of having an exchange bureau came up for a good deal of discussion and while several of the members cannot see the goodness of this arrangement due to complexities, Mr. Wick was promised that at least four members would start the thing going and could expect the others to follow in short order.

THE LOAN BUSINESS FROM A WOMAN'S POINT OF VIEW.

By ELLA A. TRAPP.

Up until June 16, 1913, I had no idea that such a business as the "Loan Business" existed. But the "Loan Business" of to-day is quite superior to that of 1913.

The high rate of interest at that time earned for us the name of "Loan Sharks," which poisoned the minds of the public in general. But to-day, this organization is one of the most promising I know of, for the day has come when the small loan business is considered a necessity.

A short time ago while away on my vacation I met a gentleman and in the course of a conversation, he asked me the nature of my business, and I told him it was the "Loan Business." He then said.

"Quite a few years ago while stopping in Pittsburgh a fellow roomer negotiated a loan of $25.00. Not that he was greatly in need, but he put the money in a bank and paid the loan back in small payments at a high rate of interest. By the time he had the loan paid back, he had formed a habit of laying aside those few dollars each pay and continued the practice by placing that amount in the bank each pay-day. The next time I saw my friend, he had quite a large bank account."

A time comes to each and everyone of us when we find ourselves not exactly broke, but as the saying goes, "very badly bent." Perhaps you and I may have a friend or relative who will tide us over our difficulty, but how about the fellow whose friends and relatives are as bad off as he? He's the fellow who appreciates our service and who is going to be our best advertisement.

The "Loan Business" has improved wonderfully in the past eight or ten years and the day will come when all class of people will look upon it in the same light. And what must we do to realize that condition? There is but one answer to this question. We must all coöperate in giving the borrowing public the best we have. And what is the best we have? Our money? No. It is "service." "Service" is a word with a great meaning, if we but understand. Each letter has a meaning of its own.

S.—Stands for sincerity. Unless we are sincere in our work, it will not be a success.

E.—for efficiency, which is also a great element to make business successful.

R.—Stands for readiness. We must always be ready and willing to serve our customers.

V.—for valid. A lawful business is the most promising.

I.—Stands for improve, which we should try to do each day.

C.—Stands for cash, the very foundation of our business.

E.—Stands for emotion, which is the most important of the seven, for without that great feeling which makes our work a pleasure to us, there is no interest for anything else pertaining to the business. And if we just work for the dollars we get on pay-day, life will be one long grind.

We spend the best hours of each day at work, then why not make that our greatest pleasure instead of the few hours we have for pleasure each evening.

I sincerely hope that every one who has chosen the loan business as their occupation, will take a great interest in it and will help those who are already interested, in making this one of the greatest organizations ever organized.

PROPER INSTRUCTIONS TO BORROWER WHEN LOAN IS MADE.

By V. D. MOSS.

We ask the borrowers to read all papers in connection with the loan. Frequently they will not do this. In such cases we explain in detail just what they are, their provisions and so forth, and in addition thereto, call especial attention to the note, and its provisions, and in a state where a Chattel Mortgage is used, attention is also drawn to this paper and its provisions.

At the time of paying the proceeds of a loan to the borrower, the manner in which the loan is made must be explained in detail, as to the size and number of the monthly payments on principal, the rate of interest, and what this will amount to each month, if the several installments on the loan are paid promptly. It is assumed that all of this was explained at the time the application was left, but as is frequently the case, the application is left by one person, whereas the loan is usually made to man and wife, and when these two are seated in the closing room and have signed the necessary papers incident to the transaction, all of the conditions under which the transaction is made must be explained to both of them. We have found it desirable to place in the hands of the customer, a small interest table, with the use of which they can figure the interest quickly. This table plus your explanation as to the number and size of the payments and rate of interest, along with detailed information as to the proper use of the interest table, will enable the borrower to know quite definitely what he is expected to do.

It is highly important to see that the borrowers understand clearly that prompt payment is necessary and more to their advantage than the lender, in that if they find it necessary to borrow money any time in the future the promptness with which the several installments are paid, will to a large extent be the deciding factor in granting further loan accomodations at some time in the future.

It has been found that a great number of accounts become delinquent as a result of carelessness, rather than inability to pay promptly. Here again must an attempt be made to show the borrowers that they are assuming an obligation that must be handled in a business-like way; that the monthly installments must be paid promptly as they become due, and the fact that the loan is granted them, shows that the office has confidence in their honesty and ability to pay, and that any delinquency will be the result of carelessness. A transaction of this nature involving the handling of money, cannot be looked on with indifference and carelessness. It is further pointed out that the loan accommodation is granted them without any undue delay, and that all details have been carefully considered, such as setting the date due on a convenient date; the amount of monthly payments arranged to suit the borrower's income and that all matters pertaining to the loan are agreed upon on a mutual basis, however, with due regard for the underlying principle of service and assisting all in a practical way to straighten out their finances, and in return for this service, we expect the borrowers to handle their end of the transaction with the same regard as we the (lenders) have for the borrower.

The pass book or payment card is handed the borrowers. A detailed explanation is made of it. The interest rate is again pointed out. The non-appearance of interest opposite each of the monthly installments of principle is explained—the borrower is shown that these several amounts cannot be shown, because interest is figured for the exact number of days between payments, on balance of principle, and if any monthly instalment is not paid on the exact due date, the amount of interest (not rate) is automatically changed.

The borrowers are requested to notify the office in advance in the event of them moving. If such removal is out of the city, the account must be paid in full or adjusted in a way that is satisfactory to the manager before they can remove the security given for the loan from the city.

It is further pointed out that in the event of the household goods being stored, that the lender must be notified in advance of such intention, and some arrangements satisfactory to all parties will be worked out by the manager. Before the borrowers leave the office, we explain our willingness to serve them in matters, other than the lending of money. We have found that frequently where the borrowers thought it necessary to employ counsel at a cost to them, to adjust or defend them in legal matters, we have been able to straighten out many such cases without cost to the borrower, when all of the facts are laid before us.

This service we explain to the borrower is in line with our desire to be helpful to them, apart from the lending of money, and we want them to feel at liberty to call on us for such advice as our experience will enable us to give. This service we have found has been helpful to many of our clients and in many cases has saved them money.

PITTSBURG EXCHANGE.

By Martin Hartman.

After months of discussion the loan offices of this city got together and formed the Pittsburgh Industrial Lenders Association for the purpose of establishing an exchange. This was necessary because there was no agency or person outside our business we cared to take a chance on to do this work for us. We thought by doing this through an association of all the members we would make our exchange permanent and we could develop it in any way agreed upon. A committee of three was elected for one year with authority to do all the necessary things to equip an exchange office and get it running. The committee got together at once and all the preliminaries were taken care of and we started to file cards November 1, 1922. It was agreed by each office to have all cards or rather a card for each open account on their books in the exchange within sixty days after November 1st. This was accomplished in scheduled time so January 1, 1923, each office was receiving complete reports on all applications. Considering all the details we had to decide our inexperience and the amount of work dumped into the exchange in so short a time with scarcely a complaint from the members and very few errors on the part of the operator, the committee feels that they engineered a very successful enterprise which has been the means of doing great good in more ways than one. After the cards were in the file we saw just what had been going on here and realized fully that we had a job on our hands to straighten out. All the double, triple and quadruple loans we had made, were discovered. Judging from the number of clips used to fasten like cards together we had about 650 duplicates to settle. This does not mean that we had 650 individual accounts to settle but loans made to 650 persons which would total nearly 2,000 separate accounts. Checking up the offices to date we find that the accounts of 450 persons have been settled so we have remaining about 200. We hope to get the file cleaned of all doubles within the next three months and be relieved of a very unhealthy condition in our business .

The cost of establishing our exchange was $30.00 per member and we started out with a service fee of $20.00 per month per office. The service fee has been reduced twice, first to $18.00 then to $15.00 the amount it now is. The committee can even see another reduction in a short time. When we organized we had nine members, now we have twelve. What the future of our exchange will be is what we make it and if we coöperate in the future as we have thus far there is no doubt but that it will grow and broaden its scope and be of greater service. One feature of the exchange I want to mention in particular and that is the effect it is having on our patrons. It is surprising how our customers have found out about it and it is helping collections considerably. Another result of the exchange is the fellowship it has engendered among the managers. That old suspicion has died out. Each fellow is working to correct his own mistakes and not shift them onto someone else, in fact, there is better feeling in regard to all phases of our business.

When we place the cost of the exchange beside the good it has done, we are compelled to say it is cheap and is one case where our business is getting value received.

IOWA.

A meeting of the Iowa Association was held Thursday, April the 12, at Fort Des Moines Hotel. The address of welcome was given by T. J. Harrison. As there were matters of more importance, all unfinished business was held over until the next meeting.

T. J. Harrison gave a short but very interesting talk on the subject "National Convention" urging all members to be present at our next National Convention, which is to be held at Louisville Kentucky, so that they might learn the importance of their business.

There being no new business the following papers were read:
Why Small Loans Should be Made, C. M. Dehnert; How to Close a Loan, D. L. Esmond; How Can We Better Our Organization, S. Gottlieb; Advertising, H. Hulling; Three and One Half Per Cent, V. Boehm; Educational Advertising Publicity, L. Whitmer; What the Organization Stands For, J. Cherinack; Remarks: Banking Department, Miss N. Beach.

Miss N. Beach's remarks were in the order of a general discussion, this to enable the licensees and the Banking Department to continue the pleasant coöperation which has been experienced in the past.

Thursday evening, April the 12th, the local members invited all the out of town boys to a dinner at the Elks Club, an evening of entertainment followed.

Friday April the 13th, Hon. Arch McFarland spoke on Legislation.

Election of officers: T. J. Harrison, re-elected chairman, Waterloo, Iowa; M. Collins, vice chairman, Ft. Madison, Iowa; C. M. Dehnert, secretary, Des Moines, Iowa; Wm DeBeaulieu, treasuser, Des Moines, Iowa.

Executive Committee: T. J. Harrison, W. C. Marquis, M. Collins, W. L. Glessner,C. M. Dehnert, E. Levitt, Wm. DeBeaulieu.

Friday, April the 13th, 6:30 P. M., Banquet at Younkers Tea Room. Toastmaster T. J. Harrison. All employees of the local companies were invited. Including the speakers there were fifty-eight present. Every one enjoyed the music rendered. The speakers of the evening were: Hon. Lester Thompson, Judge of District Court; Horace S. Hollingsworth, Secretary of Associated Charities; Frank Dunshee, Attorney at Law.

The meeting was a success from every angle and the members realized that great benefit is derived where coöperation prevails.

WHY SHOULD WE MAKE SMALL LOANS?

By C. M. Dehnert.

Those of you who were present at the last state meeting held at Sioux City in January, 1922, will recall that a paper on this subejct was read at that time.

It has been the mistaken idea of some local members of our Association, that to make loans under $50.00 would mean a loss to them. In such cases the customer was informed that unless he borrowed as much as $50.00 or more the loan could not be made.

This particular idea has been in practice up until just recently. What the company expects to gain by such methods is hard to determine, the unfavorable publicity alone, not mentioning the other danger, would readily offset what might be gained in dollars and cents, where a $50.00 minimum is in effect.

We are operating under supervision of the State Banking Department and the Uniform Small Loan Bill which permits a rate of three and one-half per cent interest per month, on small loans arranging from $10 to $300 dollars. By not turning away any small deal we are inspiring confidence in the general public, and to the fullest extent living up to the law.

If we are in the loan business lets help uplift and dignify our business, there is a wide field for improvement as the new law is just in its infancy. It would be appreciated at this time if any member would care to offer suggestions or remarks in connection with this subject.

HOW WE CAN BETTER OUR ORGANIZATION.

By S. Gottlieb.

The Industrial Money Lenders Association of Iowa should theoretically be of immense benefit to every person and organization in this State, engaged in the business of lending money. This Association can have no practical value and no foundation to stand upon, unless it actually accomplishes worth-while things for the benefit of its members, and for the benefit of the general public, at least that part of the public which constitutes our customers and clients. If the members of this association do derive material and actual benefits from their membership, there is no reason why every loan office in the State should not be anxious for membership.

In any organization of this kind, the essential things for its successful and healthy growth are, strength, unity of purpose, harmony of ideas and ideals, and unstinted coöperation of every member. In fact according to the constitution adopted by this organization, the object of the association is to promote the welfare of its members, to protect the borrowing public against usury in procuring small loans to coöperate with the proper legal authorities, and with all licensed members in the proper conduct of the small loan business.

In order to bring this out a little more clearly, we will go back a little and briefly resume the history of the present 3½% loan law under which we licensees operate. The Russel Sage Foundation originally conceived the idea that the licensing of reputable loan companies to make small loans at the rate of 3½% a month, and the uniform adoption of this plan in the various states of the Union would bring about unified plan and system, which would give protection to the borrower as well as to the lender, and would do away with the great diversity of loan rates existing in the various states, and would also greatly tend to overcome the all too common practice of usury. With the moral assistance of many people, this law was passed by the Iowa Legislature.

Now we people who are operating under this law, have organized ourselves together for the purposes named in our constitution. Before we can attain any great success, our organization must be strong and complete. There is no reason why every licensee operating under the present loan law should not be active and helpful members of our association. A campaign to this end would be advisable and give us the necessary strength and enable us to proceed with absolute confidence in our own ability. We would not need to fear any unfavorable action from any non-members of the organization.

In the second place if we have attained this strength of membership we must then make an earnest effort to center our efforts and purposes to the same point. It is apparent that in the organization at the present there is considerable dissension. It may be caused by jealousy but we should all realize that our interests are the same, and the small company and the large company are both equally benefited by anything of benefit to the Association in general, or to all loan companies at large.

The third point which we have made is probably very near a repetition of the second one. If we can bind ourselves together more closely with the same interests in view, we will easily attain the harmony of ideas and ideals which is necessary. Of course we are all more or less in competition with one another, especially we who operate in Des Moines. However, this fact should in no way conflict with our working together for the best interests of the Iowa Industrial Lenders Association. As before stated, anything which is of benefit to each of us, is helpful to all of us. You all know that at this very session of the State Legislature, attempts were made to enact legislation unfavorable to us. It is in cases of this kind that the hearty coöperation of each member of the organization is needed. That is what we mean by the unstinted coöperation of every member of the organization.

It has not been long ago that the money lender was held in contempt in his own community. It is only recently that he has attained a reputable standing in his community, and he is now considered a responsible and upright business man. We believe that if this organization can bring us to religiously live up to the pledges and purposes as enumerated in our constitution, and to infallibly observe our declarations and principals, we can rise still further in the estimation of our fellow towns people. We also believe that the points which we have attempted to briefly develop are the foundations upon which we build a better organization for the benefit of us all.

WHAT IS YOUR RATE OF INTEREST?—OR, THE ESSENTIALITIES OF EXPOUNDING THE 3½% CHARGE IN THE FULL SENSE OF THE WORD.

By V. Boehm.

There was a time, and not entirely eclipsed by the past, when the majority of us who are continuing in the loan business to-day, in legal fields, can more or less recall the reluctance with which we imparted the information when asked by the customer, what is your rate of interest.

To arrive at the cost, the question is invariably asked, is in terms of interest charge, and to intelligently and satisfactorily answer the inquiry we must use this interest term as the fundamental principle.

The Uniform Law having become a reality, should once and for all time expell the propensity of any of us in adhering to anything but interest term in explanation of the cost or charge for loan procured.

It is the art of simplicity that excells in any case, so why should we then when making answer to the customer's inquiry, retard rather than enlighten this form of knowledge by rendering a substitute explanation, or hedging in any other way.

Interest tabulations have always been of a discordant nature, traceable back to the days of Shylock, and just as much in evidence at the present time. As well as we might think our work has been done in making clear the cost, we always experience some difficulties during the life of some deals, inasmuch as the customer being in a quandry or confused as to the why for this and that interest. It is true, and quite fortunately too, that those who are unable to apprehend is small, still it is a condition to be contended with, and I will say that with the minimum of concealment of the interest term at the inception the better the fortification against a future misunderstanding.

Referring now to the manner of explanation, we undoubtedly must leave with the reflection upon the situation existing at that time. In connection with this we all no doubt have our own little methods and procedures, and further development, of course, in the make up of the applicant.

Now, the average run of applicants, and eventually converted into customers, will carry their deals on the regular payment plan, although any number may at first thought put forth their imagination for larger payments or paying in full at any time with a subsequent reduction in cost. However, there actually is a class in respect to this precontract settlement, and if the question were to be asked by a like party, what will this loan cost me, would it not be pretensious to make an exact statement? We are all aware of the two vital factors entering here, unpaid balance and the actual time that the money is used, so that in my estimation to try to approach or explain a stipulated amount is erroneous.

One thing however remains a known quantity, and that is that the charge is a 3½% monthly rate and can be called the scientific rate. Having stood on its merits and possible to do likewise in the future, I would say emphatically expound the term, and with a keeping in mind of the maximum of 42 per cent interest over a period of one year never being reached, and all calculations based on unpaid balances and for the actual time used.

WHAT OUR ORGANIZATION SHOULD STAND FOR.

By Jay Cherniack.

In dealing with this topic the sane and practical, and not the lofty and theoretical ideas should be shown.

An axiom tells us that the whole is equal to the sum of all its parts. This organization can only represent the ideals that each individual member maintains. Its highest aims and purposes cannot be on a higher plane than the average set by its members. The association proper is incorporeal— it is an entente of men who mold and make the base on which the organization shall stand. Therefore it behooves every one of us to conduct our policies on the highest business code of ethics—to maintain an enviable position in our respective communities—to join and affiliate with and become a part and parcel of all civic bodies—to twine ourselves into the business and professional world, that we may enlighten them that our cause is worthy, ethical and deserves a position in the community, the same as is enjoyed by other legitimate business, and make them appreciate the fact that we are a necessity in their business life and eventually when these same business men go to the legislature, they will vindicate our service by upholding our views.

It has been proven many times over, that organizations can do 500 per cent more than individuals in proportion to membership. The association does not demand anything phenomenal from any of its members; it never demands any superhuman efforts or outlay of fabulous sums of money. It merely asks that in order that it may hold the respect of its members and outsiders and do justice to all concerned and serve the purpose for which the organization was formed, we practice just sound business principles based on the golden rule.

In my opinion our organization can be well compared to a mythical gold watch. If our members have their business based on honest principles we all become the jewels and works of the watch; the hands of the watch represent our organization. We all know that the hands will not move unless the works are in motion—even if the works are in motion but if the works do not function properly, the watch will lose time and will be looked upon as of inferior quality—but if the works function properly, the hands, which represent our organization, are always bound to keep correct time—and the public, consisting of our customers, fellow business and professional men and non-borrowers will look at the organization as always correct and they will be well satisfied, and pass the word around that the licensed loan offices are operating in a strict business-like ethical way, and the lenders organization of which you are a member is receiving and giving mutual benefit. Around all of this, our three and one-half per cent law forms a substantial case

The objects and purposes of the organization well state what the organization stands for and it would be well for us to read them occasionally.

LEGISLATION.

By Wm. DeBeaulien.

In a general way I think you are all more or less familiar with the various bills we have had to contend with during the present legislative session. However, I doubt if very many of you realize the amount of time and attention that is actually necessary to devote to a matter of this kind, not only by those engaged in the business but by others who it has been necessary to employ for this special kind of work.

No less than five different bills have been introduced in the House and Senate of this 40th General Assembly and each one has required its own peculiar kind of treatment because we here have five different minds and reasons for introducing these bills to attend to and overcome if possible.

In order to protect our present law and our investment and be assured of success we naturally had to employ men of a high type who understood the handling of this kind of work and who we could depend on.

Since early in the Session we have had three different men in our service who have been devoting their time and efforts in our behalf and they are still on the job. So far we have every reason to believe that we have received high class, intelligent service and have been successful to this date in preventing any of these bills coming to a vote on either the House or Senate floor. But, we are by no means out of the woods and I might say that the next few days, until April the 17th, adjournment day, is probably the most critical period and we must be constantly on the alert to forestall any attempt to railroad any one of these bills through, which, is very often done at the tail end of a Session, especially at a time like this when they are holding night Sessions.

We believe that we have built up a strong and dependable Legislative organization and we want to keep it and take care of it.

In fact we cannot afford to do otherwise, in only two short years we will have this same condition to face again and we must play fair or suffer and it might happen much sooner than two years as it is practically a settled fact that a Special Session will be called this fall.

The local members of this Association held a meeting a few weeks ago, and the unanimous opinion prevailed that we must organize and be prepared for these things and we might just as well face the music now and consider this a part of our business and look upon it as insurance to protect our business and investment.

We protect practically everything of value that we own or have an interest in by some form of insurance or a bond, but foolishly have anywhere from $25,000 to $125,000 invested in a hazardous business with little protection.

What would your business be worth if a law was passed making it impossible for you to continue to operate your business? You could not collect or liquidate 75 cents on the dollar and would be subjected to a heavy expense collecting even that much, and any of you here to-day who think that you cannot afford to pay something for this protection insurance or whatever term you please, would feel like kicking yourself around the block for not having ordinary foresight, if you suddenly woke up some morning and found that a law has been passed forcing you out of business, or if you had to remain in the business, forcing you to double your investment in order to make a decent profit and be able to exist.

Remember, a reduction of only ½ per cent from your present rate on a small office of only $50,000, would mean $250.00 a month and a cut of 1% would mean $500.00 per month or $6,000 a year. You can easily figure out for yourself what it will mean in dollars and cents on a larger investment. If you will give this matter the same serious thought and intelligent attention that you give to your loan applications, I am sure that you will gladly and anxiously contribute your proper share towards this work and the protection of your dollars now invested in your business, and which in many cases represents your entire holdings and on which your entire future depends.

HOW TO CLOSE A LOAN.

By D. L. Esmond.

For me to endeavor to read an article on such a subject, when no doubt every one present knows more than the writer does about the proper way to close a loan, seems a difficult task.

However, I shall tell you the best I can of how I try to do this, which strikes me as being very important in our business, because I believe a loan well closed is largely collected.

After we have the husband and wife in the private offices, the first thing I do is to endeavor to get the parties to talking, in the hope it is some evidence I have sold myself and our organization to them. I find much help in conversation—that I get many good points without the parties seemingly knowing I am so doing just in this way. I try to get a very complete application—relatives and friends names and addresses, place of employment and their total income, then frankly compare in some manner their expenses with their income. If the two nearly or quite equal each other, I sometimes frankly but tactfully question whether they can take care of this obligation, explaining that this is not an obligation, but the obligation, and that this is not an open account to be taken care of when convenient, but that it is a secured claim done on a definite date and that date I try to drive home.

I believe in absolutely no misrepresentation—no evasion of the fact of just what the loan costs. I try to show the customers that while it is the earnest hope to be very friendly, yet the best friends are those who sometimes may seem temporarily to be exacting. I read every paper to the customer. Make them know exactly what they are about to sign, and the importance of each paper.

I call especial attention to the payment book, mentioning again that these payments are due on a certain date, and also mentioning that the amount written in the book is not the total payment, but the principal amount due and that there is interest due also, and tell them the amount of at least the first payment interest included.

After everything has been explained I frankly ask them what they are going to do on the date mentioned. They of course usually state they will be in on that date or before. I then ask them that if reverses overtake them, what would they do if they find at that time they did not have the money to pay. You all know they will invariably state they will pay anyhow. This I tell them they could not do if they hadn't the money. Then I go over the matter briefly and state that while we are in business for the interest in the loan, which pays some part of our expense, etc., that it has been my experience that when people are caught without the amount to pay the loan, it is easy to say we will take care of it soon.

I then of course tell them frankly that soon is incorrect, that the day arranged for is the day they are to be in the office, and that whether they have the required amount or not, I want them to feel sure they will be in on that day, paying the interest and arranging at that time the day they know they can pay the principal.

SUGGESTIONS WANTED.

WANTED: LOAN MANAGERS.

INDUSTRIAL LENDERS NEWS

VOL. VIII. No. 2. AUGUST, 1923. Price, $1.00 a year.

CONVENTION NEWS.

The committees in charge of the big ninth annual convention of the American Industrial Lenders Association, Hotel Seelbach, Louisville, Kentucky, September 19, 20, 21, 22, have not been taking a vacation since our last issue. There is too much to do and the time is drawing very near. The return of some of the questionnaires indicate that the attendance will be good, that the chief suggestion relative to work to be done is educational publicity and include some intimate facts which will probably form the basis of the National Secretary's report at the convention.

Much interest is being manifested in the proposed change in the constitution with respect to dues. Apparently, this proposition will provoke a lively discussion before it is finally settled as it is vital to the continuance of the A. I. L. A., as a live and active organization.

During the month R. C. Aufderheide, chairman of the Registration has appointed the following persons to assist him: H. M. Hardesty, Louisville, Ky.; J. Fred Anderson, Springfield, Ohio; Roy Hartz, Indianapolis, Indiana; B. E. Henderson, Chicago, Ill.; and A. C. Broughman, Marion, Indiana.

Roy Hartz of Indianapolis has been appointed chairman of the reception committee and will in turn appoint representative men from each of the states to be represented to see that everybody is made acquainted and comfortable during the convention.

Dr. Chas. G. Mueller of Philadelphia, will act as chairman of Publicity and will endeavor to direct that work so that it will be interesting and truthful. The speakers outside of our organization will include such notables as Will Pente, the publicity expert of Chicago, Walter S. Hilborn, acting director of the Division of Remedial Loans, Russell Sage Foundation, Dr. Frank L. McVey, President Kentucky University, Earl Edward Eubank, Ph.D., Head of the Department of Social Science, University of Cincinnati, Dr. Louis N. Robinson, who has been engaged for more than a year making a careful survey of the Small Loan business, Matt. Holt, attorney for the Legal Aid Society of Louisville, and the past and present Directors of the Department of Trade and Commerce, Springfield, Illinois, Messrs. Murphy and Ireland.

Every one of these men is a good speaker and each has selected an interesting subject which is sure to contain a message of importance. The rest of the program will not disappoint anyone as it is being shaped to include reports papers and discussions of much interest to industrial lenders.

C. E. Reed has mapped out a program of entertainment and recreation which will measure up to expectations. There will be a dance and banquet as usual and there will be sight-seeing tours possibly culminating in a trip on Saturday to the Mammoth Cave, one of the wonders of the world. Now before you forget it make your reservations at the Seelbach Hotel Louisville, direct on the accompanying post card. Louisville is charming always but particularly in September. Let's all meet there next month.

W. G. WOOD IN EUROPE.

All of our members will be pleased to know that our former National Chairman, W. G. Wood, Providence, R. I., sent the editor a postal card from London, July 18, in which he said the trip was proving both pleasant and beneficial and that he was living among traditions and history. He sends his best regards to everyone and hopes to be back in the grand U. S. A. in time for the National Convention in Louisville in September.

MEMBERSHIP CAMPAIGN.

Although late getting started Tate J. Harrison, National Membership Chairman, of Waterloo, Iowa, now has his campaign for more members in the national organization well organized and well under way. Several timely letters have gone out to non-members with good results. Before the National Convention rolls around, Tate is expecting to show a substantial increase in the national organization membership. We are publishing one of his letters herewith in the hope that if any nonmember has been omitted in the circularizing which is now going on, he will see it here and get in touch with the membership chairman at once.

August 1, 1923.

DEAR LENDER:

So far, the results of my former letter have been very gratifying. I have received many inquiries and requests for further information. I was pleased to find that a great many to whom I had written have recently become members of both their state and the National Organization. Such is the result of better acquaintance.

Things are changing. The wide-awake money-lender belongs to his National association—The American Industrial Lenders Association. And why does he join? Not for the fun of it! Not because he wants to "belong" to something—but because his common sense tells him to join. Because he realizes that "united we stand and divided we fall." And because as a member he gets these benefits through the Association's efforts:

1. Fair and square legislation.
2. A better standing in the eyes of the Public.
3. The benefit of the experience of hundreds of fellow-members, in simplifying his accounting methods and reducing operating costs.
4. Free exchange of accurate credit information.
5. Assistance in collecting accounts that move out of the city or state. (These are traced and collected through fellow members of the Association.)
6. Because he gets the benefit of plans for better, more uniform, more truthful advertising methods.
7. Because the Association provides opportunities for beneficial social and business intercourse between members.
8. Because the business, as a business, is uplifted and improved in every way.
9. Because it pays in dollars and cents to be a member.

Your presence, as a member, will add to the strength of the Association—and most of all, it will help your business in many ways.

Will you fill out the membership blank and return it to me?

Yours very truly,
T. J. HARRISON,
Chairman Membership Committee.

NEW JERSEY.

A meeting was held, August 9th, at New Brunswick, an account of which will appear in our next issue.

ADVERTISING ENLISTED FOR AID OF SMALL-LOANS INSTITUTION.

Pennsylvania Organization Shows the Way to Put Newspaper Space to Use in a Manner That Is a Service to Both Lender and Borrower of Small Sums.

How advertising can be used to overcome a popular prejudice, not only as a foundation for future business but also in connection with immediate selling appeal, has been demonstrated in Philadelphia and several other Pennsylvania cities by the Guarantee Loan Company, Inc.

The firm is one of several large corporations operating under the relatively recent small-loan legislation in Pennsylvania and other States, being chartered to make loans to workmen and others without the usual commercial credit in amounts up to $300 to an individual. In common with all the others, it charges 3½ per cent a month—the rate authorized by act of legislature.

In effect, the small-loan companies have taken over the vast lending business formerly done by a type of business man or corporation known as "the loan shark." The methods of lending, and particularly of collection from persons who fail to pay on time, have been revolutionized. These facts, however, are known only to a small proportion of the reading public.

In recognition of that situation the Guarantee company decided on a program of newspaer display advertising which, as stated in the copy, will "Let light into the small-loan business."

Four advertisements were used in the first series in Philadelphia, Camden, Wilkes-Barre and elsewhere with so much success that another series is now being prepared and the campaign is to be continued. Heretofore virtually all the advertising of the loan brokers has been conventional, and even where the rates have been advertised details have not been made known.

The first advertisement of the Guarantee series carried a drawing of a lighted candle in the upper left-hand corner, and beside it the caption "Light on the Small-Loan Business." Then came the following:

> Ten years of intensive investigation have proven that the loan business meets a real, economic need. Legislatures throughout the land, recognizing the fact, have passed laws, setting a fair rate of interest, licensing the lender, requiring a bond for faithful operation and practical supervision by State Departments. Loans are made on household goods without removal, for thousands of different purposes. If you need money in an emergency, do not hesitate to borrow.

The second advertisement in the series was headed "More Light on the Small-Loan Business," and carried an illustration of two lighted candles. The third and fourth bore the caption "Bright Sunlight on the Small-Loan Business," and carried an illustration of a smiling sun. It is set forth in the copy that the bright sunlight "has proved it a necessary link in the structure of this nation. We help in this way: eliminating formality, establishing personal contact between our clients and ourselves, rendering that supreme service in lending—coöperation—based upon intimate knowledge of the borrowers problems and requirements. Loans are made requiring payment on principal and interest each month. No limit on principal payments gives borrower privilege of limiting cost."

It is quite possible that the recognition of the service to be given by advertising could not have been reached without fundamental changes in the small-loan business from what it was ten years ago.

The loan company can honestly advertise to-day that "the dominating idea of our management is that of service" because the records of the business as it is conducted to-day show a marked improvement over the methods of the loan shark. It is stated by V. D. Moss, supervisor for the Guarantee company, that foreclosure sales of household goods on which loans are made are almost unknown to-day in the large small-loan companies.

As part of its advertising campaign the company also circulates by mail and directly to customers reprints by the Russell Sage Foundation of addresses by Arthur H. Ham, second vice-president of the Provident Loan Society of New York, chairman of the National Federation of Remedial Loan Associations, and Walter S. Hilborn, acting director of the Division of Remedial Loans, Russell Sage Foundation.

It has been noted that the display advertising copy has reached a class heretofore not generally included among the customers of the small-loan brokers: men, for instance, earning relatively large salaries, but without banking credit, who have always depended on friends for emergency funds and have fought shy of the small-loan companies.

"The return from this form of advertising, which we have been able to trace, is quite satisfactory, sufficient to indicate that it is worth our while to continue it and perhaps to expand," says Mr. Moss. "But an even more compelling reason for keeping up the new advertising is this response from a wholly new field of customers—a field that should yield big returns if adequately cultivated. We are therefore convinced that to reap the greatest benefits of display educational advertising designed to show that the small-loan broker is not in any way to be compared to the loan shark, it is necessary to continue it, and on as large a scale as possible."—Printers' Ink, June 28, 1923.

SYSTEM FOR FILING PAPERS AND RECORDS.

By V. P. Allgaier.

In covering the above subject, I have included filing the following: Current and Delinquent Accounts. Contracts and Bills of Sale. Desk applications. Statements of Maker of Loan. Salary Assignments. List and Look Up Blanks. Power of Attorneys. Notes both active and Loss and Gain Accounts. Communications of all kinds. Copies of Letters. Addresses of the officials under whom we serve. Accounts of our offices in other cities in our territory. Bureau of Exchange Lists. Names of out of town Attorneys. Important Talks, Legal Decisions, etc. Out Town Accounts in Headquarters for collection. Turned downs and Pending Applications. Record of out-going Monthly Reports. Renewed, undesirable, Loss and Gain and Paidup Accounts. Rechecks. Source Sheets and Delinquent Sheet Reports.

Current and Delinquent Accounts.

This is a one card system:

Current and Delinquent Accounts on ledger cards are filed numerically in the days of the month on which they are due, carried in separate Files known as White File and Red File. Current Accounts are carried in White File, containing white markers denoting Current File and up to date accounts. Delinquent Accounts are carried in Red File containing Red Markers denoting Red File and accounts in arrears. We use five notices if necessary before placing accounts in hands of outside man for attention. Accounts requiring number one notice are drawn from the White File, notation made on the card to that effect, refiled in order in the Red File, designated by markers with the word notice placed thereon. Number two, three, four and five notices if necessary are drawn from the Red File and handled same as notice number one. Where delinquent accounts receiving notices and those filed on promise are carried in the same divisions, the accounts receiving notice are filed in front of your notice marker and those carrying promises in the back of your marker. This so when writing accounts requiring further notices, they are readily distinguished from those carrying promises. Route is drawn daily from the Red file carried in the rear of this file, filed alphabetically. When refiling your ledger cards after a days business we suggest that you do not assort them following consecutively according to the days of month in numerical order, but refile them just as they are after placing the entries of the days business thereon. Filing cards that are in consecutive order are more liable to be misfiled than cards where you are not acquainted with what is following.

Notes.

Notes of active accounts are filed numerically in divisions of fifty (50) each Loss and Gain Accounts filed alphabetically and carried in rear of active account note file.

Contracts and Bills of Sale, etc.

Filing Contracts and Bills of Sale, we use the Numerical System, filing both Active and Paidup Accounts together. We have also used this system in carrying the Active and Paidup accounts in separate files; likewise the Alphabetical System both ways as above mentioned discarding them for the reason of extra filing and more chance of misfiling compared to the one we are now using.

Argument.

Numerical System: Filing Active and Paidup Accounts together, requires less work also less chance of misfiling as compared with the other system mentioned for the reason that your contracts being consecutively numbered you can file all of them at one time. No other work necessary except occasionally rearrange them due to your files containing the low numbered contracts are being emptied through renewing accounts and your files containing your higher numbered or recent contracts are being filled by the renewals. To secure space for your future contracts you are obliged to transfer your contracts from your higher numbered files to the lower numbered files. This is only occasionally and requires very little time.

Numerical System: Filing Active and Paidup Accounts separate we figure more work and more chance of misfiling for the reason that you are obliged in addition to taking care of your files as in the Numerical System, filing Active and Paidup Accounts together, you are obliged to refile your Paidup Accounts, transferring them from the Active account file to your Paidup account file; thus causing additional filing and more chance for misfiling. Furthermore in case you do not keep your files in proper order you never know whether your Paidup Contracts are in the Active or Paidup Accounts file.

Should this occur when desiring to locate a Paidup Contract that was not transferred, you will be obliged to look in two places for it; where you expect to find it, in the Paidup Account File and where it is, out of place, in the Active Account File.

Alphabetical System Filing Active and Paidup Accounts together we like very well with the exception of the extra Filing caused by filing the Contracts according letter making it necessary to file each Contract separately. As well as you are sometimes obliged to carry a letter in two files due to not having sufficient space to carry the letter in one file, making it necessary occasionally to look in two files to locate the contract desired.

Desk Applications, List and Lookup Blanks, Salary Assignments, Power of Attorneys and Statements of Maker of Loan are also filed with the Contracts, and Bills of Sale. Placing these forms in the above order named with the Contract Bill of Sale, we consider necessary for convenient use. Your Desk Application is very essential to make up your Ledger Card that is why we have placed it first in order in filing it and to avoid disturbing your papers in their entirety had you filed it in the place of the Statement of the Maker of Loan.

Communications.

All letters received from our officials or their assistants we term Headquarter Mail. This we file in a separate file, which we call the Headquarter file, alphabetically under the letter covering the month in which it is received, except General Letters and those on Vacation Dates. These are filed under Letter covering name of Communication. General Letters under Letter G. Vacation date letters under letter V. Being obliged sometime during the year to refer to these letters, filing them in this way, they are easy to locate; likewise if necessary to refer to any of the other letters, notice is given in a form something like this. Please refer to letter under date of so and so, automatically locating the letter desired.

Copies are taken of all outgoing Headquarter mail and filed alphabetically under letter C denoting copies; except those covering reply which are filed with the letter.

Correspondence in relation to accounts are filed with the contract covering the deal.

Communications received from other sources including our own offices are filed alphabetically under letter covering city or town from which the letter came. This is done for the reason that your memory seems to be more keen in remembering cities or towns than a persons name.

Mail is assorted as received. Headquarter mail being placed on Manager's Desk. Requests for extensions are paired with the Accounts in question and placed in the foreward part of Delinquent Account filed under heading, Letters Today. This prevents cards going astray or being mislaid and keeps them in their proper place; in the file.

Addresses of Officials.

Addresses of officials we place on Ledger Cards and file in the forward part of our current account file, showing business address and telephone number as well as home address and telephone number. Thus making it possible to reach them in or out of business hours.

Names of Out Town Attorneys.

Names of out town Attorneys and collecting agencies who have collected accounts for us and other like names received through inquiry we keep record of in small index book, indexed under name of City or Town in which they are located. Keeping your information in this way, when you have an out town account to place for collection, providing you cannot get Headquarter service, if you have in your list the name of an attorney in the town where your account is by refering to your index under the letter of the name of the City in question you find the information desired. Had you indexed the attorney's name under the letter of his name you most likely would not remember it.

Accounts of Out Town Offices in our Territory.

These names are placed on Ledger Cards, filed in the forward part of our Current file, and checked with new applications received. We also carry these names in our finder index. Records of these names kept in this way keeps your exchange clear and prevents doubling in your own office.

Out Town Accounts in Headquarters for Collection.

We list these accounts on a ledger card showing name and number and file in forward part of our Current Account File, checking them up each month with our Out Town Collection reports.

Bureau of Exchange Lists.

Are filed alphabetically under letter of month in which they are sent out. On days where no lists are issued memorandum is placed in file to this effect. This to keep your record intact and avoid possible argument.

Important Talk, Etc.

Talks on the loan business, important legal decisions, Legislative talks and other papers, cards, etc., are filed in a separate file labeled Miscellaneous, noting kind of literature therein.

Monthly Headquarter Report Record.

Records of Headquarter Monthly reports sent out are placed on Ledger Card and filed in Delinquent Account File for 25th each month. This to remind you to again check your outgoing monthly Headquarter Reports.

Source Sheet, Etc.

Paid Up Accounts, Etc.

Paidup accounts are filed alphabetically. Renewals, undesirable and Loss and Gain Accounts are filed alphabetically in numerical order.

Turned Us and Pending Applications.

Turned us and Pending Applications are filed alphabetically using a card 2 inches by 4 and showing thereon the following:

Name of Applicant
Address
Amount Applied for List
Recommended for Reason for not Borrowing

This gives us a good line on the applicant if he again returns.

Rechecks

Rechecks are assorted daily by the manager from loans made placed in file on his desk and so stamped. New business is also stamped New Deal. This so outside man can readily recognize one from the other when both applications are included in the same days work. We also use file kept on the manager's desk containing the following markers, which is very helpful in caring for these records.

Miscellaneous
Bureau Exchange Lists
Route
Rechecks
Instructions from notes for Auditor
Printing—Received from Supervisor
Printing—Received from Headquarters
Multo Letters
Old Business Active Accounts
Record of Colored, Endorsed and one Signature Deals
Skips

ADVERTISING.

By Henry Hulling.

How to get business has been for ages the first thought in the minds of men. Next of importance should be how to keep your business. My thought is to start ideas that might be of help to us all.

How To Get Business By Advertising.

There are many mediums through which this can be done, but only a few are adaptable to our business, first newspapers, second direct mail advertising. In your newspaper advertising you are limited as to space and the cost is prohibitive for the industrial lender. In the small space allotted, on account of cost limitation, you must endeavor to incorporate the four essentials of a good advertisement: 1—It must attract and hold attention. Ordinarily it is put in the classified section and must compete with other advertisements, as we have no bargains to offer nor any leader to advertise as merchants rely on to attract attention. 2—It must arouse interest and create desire. 3—It must be persuasive and dignified, but not misleading. Advertising should be suggestive and skillfully lead the reader to make up his mind. Always keep in mind that your advertisement represents the personality of your business. 4—It must determine action, and as you have nothing to sell that your competitor hasn't you must sell advice. Therefore it is necessary that you show plainly the provision you have made to render a distinct service to those in need of money. Get the attention, hold it long enough to create the desire, persuading the reader to act immediately to obtain his desire. In direct mail advertising persistency is the real keynote. The first letter may arouse interest or perhaps only a mild curiosity. A subsequent message may be necessary to persuade and arouse to action. But (don't forget that the satisfied customer is the best advertisement of any business.) Those to whom you have rendered satisfactory service will recommend you to others in need of money. "Advertising is selling and selling is advertising." The permanent results of one, or both, rest upon the satisfaction of the customers.

To get and to keep business, advertise and tell the truth. Always when you have succeeded in opening an account with a customer, you have sold him. But in order that this account may be profitable you must continue selling him. Remember there is small profit in one sale "You must repeat." Quick, courteous and efficient service will get and retain your business. Especially in the large industrial centers where time taken away from ones employment must be profitably utilized. A customer is apapreciative of quick efficient service.

How to advertise resolves itself into a matter of correct, consistent and dignified advertising. To render service that satisfies, to advertise that service and live up to the advertisement. If you do this, you will surely build a business that will withstand any adverse criticism, continually increase your net profits and build for future prosperity.

Last, but not least, forget not the law, forsake not the truth.

PUBLICITY.

A

New York, July, 15.—Men who provide credit for some 2,000,000 persons who are outside the banking pale will meet in Louisville, Ky., when the American Industrial Lenders' Association holds its ninth annual convention, September 19th to 22nd. The Association membership is made up exclusively of those who lend money at the rates fixed by law and represents a combined estimated capital of about $60,000,000. The annual business done by the companies represented in the organization totals about $150,000,000.

The American Industrial Lenders' Association represents the individuals and corporations who have rescued the industrial loan business from a status which was illegal and oppressive and put it on a plane where to-day in twenty-six states these loans are made on the same business like basis that attends the distribution of commercial bank credits.

The Association was organized seven years ago by leaders among "the poor man's bankers" to abolish abuses in their business, and by eliminating the loan shark to remove the stigma from a business as necessary as commercial banking and serving a far more numerous clientele than that of the commercial banks. It has been estimated that 86 per cent of the adult population of the United States are without the credit facilities afforded by commercial banks and in any emergency requiring financing must have recourse to industrial lenders. This large class had been so long exploited by extortionate lenders who flourished in the generally unregulated state of the small loan business that an odium had come to be attached to the name of money lender regardless of the fairness and justness of the individual lender's methods and dealings with borrowers.

It has been, and still is, the consistent aim of the Association to bring the business of money lending under the strict supervision of the law and to make the lender in his relations to clients as responsible as a bank. To this end it has sponsored legislation in the various states which puts the business of making small loans under the supervision of the banking departments, fixes the rate to be charged on loans, provides for inspection of the books by the state and imposes severe penalties for violations of the law. It is only in states possessing this regulatory legislation that members are permitted to operate.

The result of the Association's work is shown in the present status of the legitimatized money lending business. There are now about 500 members of the Association, all of whom are operating under regulation of their business and at the legal interest rate, while the money lending business has been put under supervision in a majority of the states. The law, which most of the states have adopted, is that known as the Uniform Small Loan Act, drafted by the Russell Sage Foundation, the salient feature of which is a provision limiting the interest charges to not more than 3½ per cent a month on unpaid balances of loans. This rate was fixed after actuarial calculation of the elements making for a fair profit, taking into account the extraordinary risks of the business.

B

One of the most exhaustive surveys of a phase of social service ever undertaken, it was announced yesterday (Saturday) will be reported on at the forthcoming convention of the American Industrial Lenders' Association at Louisville, Kentucky, September 19th to 22nd. At that time Dr. Louis N. Robinson, of Swarthmore, Pennsylvania, formerly of the chair of economics of Swarthmore who has been engaged in an investigation of the small loan business in the United States under the auspices of the Russell Sage Foundation, will report on his study.

Dr. Robinson has been engaged in this work for more than a year during which he has visited many cities. His report will show what sort of men are engaged in the small loan business and the classes of people constituting their clientele, the capital invested in the business, the gross loans made, the various emergencies that necessitate a resort to industrial financing, the various laws governing the business, the interest rates charged and the problems peculiar to this class of financing, together with recommendations for improved methods based on his observations.

Dr. Robinson is a sociologist of note who has studied the small loan business for years both in this country and in Europe. His report is eagerly awaited by the members of the American Industrial Lenders' Association, which is an organization of those in the small loan business who operate only in states where the business has been legitimatized and who lend only at the legal rates. His report because of its constructive character is expected to have important results in the conduct of a business that has grown enormously within the last decade.

The Robinson survey was undertaken at the direction of the Division of Remedial Loans of the Russell Sage Foundation, which took the initiative about a dozen years ago in a movement to put the small loan business on a scientific basis. It was this movement that resulted in the drafting of a uniform law licensing and regulating the business and fixing a maximum interest rate to be charged on unpaid balances of loans. This law is now in operation in about a score of states and has been found effective in abating the loan shark evil in those states. The Association has received an impetus through the gradual adoption by the states of legislation designed to protect industrial workers in their credit needs and the forthcoming ninth annual convention promises to be one of the largest and most important in its history. The combined capital of companies represented in its membership is estimated at about $60,000,000 and the annual business done by them at $150,000,000 annually.

"Small loans" within the meaning of the law are loans not in excess of $300, and the average loan in this class is $75. They are made to those who lack the ordinary commercial banking credit facilities because they are unable to offer the sort of collateral which the law requires such banks to obtain for their loans. For many years the small loan business was conducted on a plane of cruel exploitation of the necessitous borrower, interest rates of from 100 per cent to 1,000 per cent a year being charged for the use of the small sums lent.

It was this abuse that led a commission of financiers, economists and social service students to study the small loan field with a view to eliminating the loan shark evil by framing legislation which would encourage respectable capital to engage in the business. The investigations of this commission resulted in the framing of the uniform small loans law, a salient feature of which is the fixing of an interest rate vastly lower than the average charged by the loan shark but at the same time sufficient to enable the lender to operate at a fair profit. This rate, of course, is higher than that permitted to be charged by the commercial banks on their secured loans, the law recognizing that theirs are extraordinary risks in the small loan business and a small ratio of profit.

The importance of the legitimized lending business is indicated by the estimate accepted by bankers that 86 per cent of the adult population are without credit facilities afforded by commercial banks. In any emergency requiring financing, such as sickness, unemployment, death in the family or the like, a large percentage of this class at some time or other must have recourse for their financing to the industrial lender.

C

New York, July 29, 1923.—A survey of the credit accommodations available to the American people, it was announced to-day by the American Industrial Lenders' Association, reveals that 86 per cent of the adult population of the United States are without the credit facilities afforded by the commercial banks. This is estimated on the basis that only seven out of every one hundred persons in this country maintain a bank account, that eighty-six in each hundred fail to attain an economic independence. It is this large class that lacks credit requiring collateral acceptable to banks. In any crises in their lives requiring financing such as sickness, death or unemployment, their only recourse must be to industrial lenders and their sole collateral in their characters, earning abilities, unsecured notes or household property.

The credit situation as it relates to industrial financing will be considered in its various phases at the forthcoming convention of the American Industrial Lenders' Association in Louisville, September 19th to 22nd, and it is expected that some constructive recommendations will result from the addresses of several economists who have studied this field and who will be present at the convention. Among them is Dr. Louis N. Robinson, of Swarthmore, Pennsylvania, formerly of the chair of economics at Swarthmore, who will report on a nation-wide survey of the small loan field which he has been conducting for the Russell Sage Foundation for more than a year.

The Association is composed of members known as the "Poor Man's Bankers," who operate only in states where the business of money lending has been legalized by licensing it under the supervision of the banking department and fixing the maximum interest rate that may be charged on unpaid balances of loans. Such states as have adopted adequate legislation protective of both borrower and lender have enacted the uniform small loans law drafted about a dozen years ago by the Russell Sage Foundation as the result of an exhaustive investigation of the small loan field and the extortionate practices then general. This law has had the effect of attracting a high class of lenders to those communities where it is operative and driving out the "loan shark."

The combined capital of loan companies represented in the Association is estimated at $60,000,000 and the annual business done by them at $150,000,000 annually. As small loans are limited to law at not to exceed $300 and as it is estimated that only about 2,000,000 people among the 86 per cent without credit are served by legitimate lenders, it is regarded as vital that additional capital be drawn into the business if any considerable number of those who require industrial financing are to obtain credit without exploitation by usurious lenders. The general extension of the uniform law is regarded as the solution of the problem, as this law sternly prohibits extortion, allowing the lender a fair profit and nothing more, and it is only under such conditions that men of character will enter the field.

D

New York, August.—Ways in which to bring about a better understanding of industrial lending by the public will be among the principal considerations of the forthcoming convention of the American Industrial Lenders' Association in Louisville, September 19th to 22nd, it was announced to-day at the headquarters of the Association here.

Leaders in the industrial lending field are convinced from their experience in states which have already adopted laws regulating their business that once the public fully understands the legislation proposed there will be an insistent demand everywhere for the enactment of such laws. In about a score of the states laws are now in effect licensing lenders, fixing a maximum interest rate that may be charged on unpaid balances, and providing penalities for violations of the law.

Industrial lenders are unique in this particular, for while the cry among most branches of trade and commerce is for less regulation by government, the men who are the sole purveyers of credit to industrial classes are urging that their business be subject to a state supervision as rigid as that exercised over the operations of commercial banks. Their contention is that this is necessary both for the protection of the borrower and for those who supply him with credit, and they contend that without this strict supervision there can be no adequate correction of the abuses that have characterized such business in the past.

Wherever regulatory laws are in effect, it is claimed, they have resulted in the correction of the "loan shark" evil, and legitimate lenders in advocating regulatory laws are merely asking that the state make extortionate interest rates impossible by fixing a legal rate fair to both borrower and lender, and punishing the lenders who charge in excess of this rate or otherwise violate the law.

The membership of the American Industrial Lenders' Association is composed exclusively of lenders who operate only under the legal interest rate. They are known as "the poor man's bankers," representing a combined capital of $60,000,000 with annual loans aggregating $150,000,000.

If your local papers have not published any of the foregoing accounts, will you please see that they do run something about the National Convention within the next month.—Ed.

Dr. C. G. Mueller, Philadelphia has accepted the Publicity Committee Chairmanship and in his characteristic energetic way has addressed the State Secretaries as follows:

"The advent of the big convention of the year which will house the American Industrial Lenders Association Convention at the Hotel Seelbach in Louisville, Ky., on September 19, 20, 21, and 22 is drawing pretty near; too near for those who are charged with responsibility in making the coming convention eclipse any previous occasion. This does not apply only to the entertainment, but principally to the invaluable good rendered the membership as a whole, the business in general and the prospect of the business in the future.

"The writer has accepted the responsibility of looking after the publicity incidental to this big affair. That means the preparation of publicity items prior to, at the time of and at the close of the convention.

"You and I and most others engaged in the Industrial Loan business know what we are. Our big problem however, is to educate others to know us as we are rather than as they would seem to think we are. This calls for heroic effort. In this your state association has a part to play.

"It will be mighty fine if you will bring this matter up before your association at their next regular meeting. It is a certainty that now is a good time to have a carefully prepared story about the National Convention and the part that your association will take in its success. Then see to it that this finds a place in some of the leading newspapers. In many instances the Convention being of national scope can be flavored with local color by mentioning the names of prominent or active lenders in their respective cities. As most of the lenders are consistent and prolific advertisers there ought to be no difficulty about getting a story in the newspapers that has to do with the proposed activities of the Convention and the participation of local lenders in connection with it.

"In some state associations they have paid publicity experts. May I not prevail on your association to approve and instruct your publicity agent to prepare and broadcast the information above referred to.

"Please be assured that the Publicity Committee invites your earnest help and urges you not to withhold your splendid ideas regarding publicity. Your every suggestion will have careful consideration; consistent with available funds, they will be carried out.

"Heretofore publicity concerning the American Association Convention activities have frequently been criticised for the failure of the articles to state the facts correctly. The present purpose of your Publicity Committee is to anticipate this situation by assembling all the finest thoughts in connection with the business and projecting them as a matter of public education through carefully prepared, advance copy. You will do your part in helping the Committee broadcast accurate, authentic, educational publicity, will you not?"

CREDIT UNIONS.

It would seem that all the pioneer work done by the Division of Remedial Loans of the Russell Sage Foundation, New York and the National Federation of Remedial Loan Associations the past fourteen years to say nothing of the part taken by the American Industrial Lenders Association since 1917 to improve small conditions in this country has apparently been completely ignored by the enthusiastic "Credit Union Propagandists."

We find newspapers and periodicals teeming with editorials and statements singing the virtues of these coöperative financial institutions which have had some local success in Massachusetts, Rhode Island, New York and North Carolina and one who does not know, think or investigate might be lead to believe that this comparatively recent form of finance in this country was a panacea for about every financial ill with which the industrial states may be afflicted. The objective of the Credit Unionists, namely, the elimination of the loan shark, is similar to that which the above mentioned remedial agencies that have been working constructively to improve small loan conditions for years but the means of bringing about the desired results are widely different. The Credit Unionists would like to put their law on the statute books of every state in the union and establish, at the expense of the public, an elaborate educational and supervisory bureau in the respective banking departments and if by the accomplishment it is necessary to pull down constructive small loan laws which are a real relief to former conditions in the states where it has taken years for their enactment and perfection that makes no difference to them. To one who is familiar with the movement to improve small loan conditions and knows something about the necessities and conditions of the business and the inability of the credit unions to meet the situation only in a very narrow and limited way we are prompted to notify the decent industrial lenders of the U. S. A. that they may as well begin now to meet this false propaganda which is being projected at their expense. Whether it be religion, politics or business, little progress is made by knocking the other fellow. For your information we are reprinting some of the clippings which have come into our possession recently. By and by we will review in these columns possibly a book recently published by Macmillan Co., New York, entitled, Coöperative Banking, by Roy T. Bergengren, the Executive Secretary of the National Credit Union Extension Bureau, Boston, Mass. Some interesting references are made to the Uniform Small Loan Law and Loan Sharks in this book comment upon which will be deferred until a later issue.

Babson Institute, Babson Park (Boston) Mass., is responsible for the circulation of the following statement under the caption "The Loan Shark."

"We are not going to tell you to keep away from the loan sharks. We realize that there are emergencies when more money is needed. Moreover, in far too many cases the loan shark is the only avenue of ready assistance.

"But did you ever hear of the Credit Union? The Credit Union idea has been active in Europe for many years. The idea is simply this: First, it is a place where people who temporarily need additional funds can turn to. The Credit Union differs from the Morris Plan Bank, which is financed by private interests, in that it is sustained by legislation from the various states and gets its resources from members or subscribers by a small initiation charge and regular dues periodically in small sums. In this respect it is similar to the operation of a coöperative bank.

"The Credit Union in this country was legalized in the state of Massachusetts some years ago. Right now there is available Credit Union legislation in seven other states; legislation is pending in eleven more states and it is soon to be introduced in five additional states.

"A few states still make it legally possible for a loan shark to secure 42% interest on a loan. Therefore, if an emergency arises, before going to a typical loan shark endeavor first to find out if there is a Credit Union in your locality. You will still have to give satisfactory proof of your ability to pay back the loan, you must still have character, you must still have some security for the loan. Moreover, you will have to pay for the accommodation because the expenses of running such an institution covering such loans as the average small borrower needs are higher than the typical banking institution, which loans, we might say, at wholesale.

"However, you will not have to pay such exorbitant rates as the loan sharks demand. And you will not put your neck in a noose, leaving the other end of the rope in the hands of unscrupulous lenders of money. If you want information as to the location of the nearest Credit Union you are entitled, by virtue of your company subscription to this service, to write in to us regarding such matters."

"Groups of people, a farm community—the wage earners of a store, office, factory, or parish—now band together, pool their credit, and make loans too small for ordinary banks to handle. As organized all over our land, these groups are known as credit unions or poor men's banks. They are coöperative thrift clubs, unions for self-protection and self-help. Their purpose is not to make a profit, but to benefit the borrower. The sock is their weapon of finance, and the loan hark knows now how deadly it is when oaded with coined metal. In our cities his community sock is weighted with imes and dollars ordinarily wasted or oarded. The credit unions thus create housands of new savers. In rural comunities they collect small savings with hich the farmer, especially the renter, an buy fertilizers, machinery, and other ecessities from 40 to 60 per cent cheaper han when he runs a bill at the store. The American credit-union sock to-day, fter about six years, has some $8,000,000 n its toe. Our economists estimate that wo to three billions of our gold, silver, nd paper money is hoarded. Think what hat may be made to mean for the finanial future of our earners.

"If any group of our readers wants to tart a credit union, Collier's will be glad o get them the needed information."

Another Editorial from Colliers Weekly August 4, "Can a Banker See a Cow?" said:

"The bank that will lend a young farmer money to buy a cow and then take ay for the loan in milk checks does not val orthodox banking, but helps it. This iniature bank usually has a desk and hair in one corner of some factory or tore. It specializes in thrift deposits of imes and quarters and dollars, providing ts shareholders with a loan fund to rotect them against usurers. All this hould be heartily encouraged by fair-inded bankers. The traders who profit y our wasteful spending, the shylocks who pinch wage earners unable to get mall loans, the sharks who fatten on nfortunates who cannot buy for cash. hese are the only interests which should ppose the rapid growth of such poor men's banks. The members of the eorgia Bankers' Association have gone n record favoring legislation for credit nions in their State. National support f the credit-union movement by all ankers would greatly encourage the most ffective agency known to protect poor eople from loan sharks. If you are interested in thus heading off usurers, Collier's will get for you the information ecessary to start the credit union you would like to have in your town or shop."

GEORGIA.

A bill to repeal the Georgia Small Loan Law has not met with favor by the Legislature now in session, but a bill to exempt real estate loans from the provisions of the act appears to have a good chance to pass.

VIRGINIA.

The Regular Quarterly Meeting of the Virginia Industrial Lenders Association was held at Hotel Roanoke Roanoke, Virginia, July 12, 1923.

The business meeting was called to order by Chairman Pope at 2:30 p. m.

The secretary called the Roll, and the following members were present: Citizens Loan Society, of Norfolk; Empire Company, of Norfolk; United Small Loan Corp., of Richmond; Universal Small Loan Corp., of Norfolk; Beneficial Loan Society, of Norfolk;; Beneficial Loan Society, of Portsmouth; Beneficial Loan Society, of Roanoke; Beneficial Loan Society, of Lynchburg.

We also had with us Mr. W. H. Appleby of Norfolk, and Mr. H. S. Northington of Suffolk, representing the Norfolk Security Co., and the Universal Small Loan Corp., respectively.

COMMITTEE REPORTS.

Secretary.

Secretary Bray reported that there was 30 licenses in the state and only 15 members, 11 in good standing with dues paid to date. He stated he had the applications from 5 offices applying for membership, which would be submitted to the members later. On motion of Mr. Cross seconded by Mr. Bradshaw the report of the Secreatry was adopted as read.

Treasurer.

Treasurer Cross reported balance brought forward from 1922 and income received from Dues for the present year $531.62. Disbursements $211.63, leaving cash on hand $289.99, with one bill to be paid. Upon motion of Mr. Bray seconded by Mr. Herbert the report was adopted as read.

Publicity.

Chairman Bradshaw reported that at our last meeting at Norfolk we had a splendid news item run in all the papers of our meeting and he urged all members present to have a report of the present meeting run in the papers of their respective cities. Upon motion of Mr. Pope the local member Mr. Herbert was instructed to get a dozen copies of the report of the meeting run in the local papers and send them to the secretary.

Executive.

In the absence of Chairman Edge, Mr. Pope reported we had had complaints from various members that certain people were charging more than the legal rate and he asked the coöperation of all members to be on the watch and get affidavits from the people who made the complaints and forward them to the secretary and he in turn would take the matter up with the State Banking Examiner. He reported the secretary had brought with him two affidavits from Norfolk, against one office (Non-member of the Association) where they had charged a bonus of $3.50, plus 3½% month interest on two $25.00 loans with endorsed notes as security. The secretary was ordered to take this matter up with the State Banking Dept. at once.

Membership.

In the absence of Chairman McMurtrie, the secretary reported that himself, Mr. Cross, Mr. Bradshaw and Mr. Thompson had been working hard around Norfolk lining up new members, and it was very gratifying to him to be able to report that he had the applications of five offices to present to the meeting at this time, and expected to get four more applications in the near future.

The applications of the Atlantic Small Loan Society Co., of Norfolk, Norfolk Security of Norfolk, Portsmouth Security Co., of Portsmouth, Universal Small Loan Corp., of Suffolk, and United Small Loan Corp. of Richmond.

Each application was voted upon separately and all five companies were unanimously elected to membership.

Owing to resignation it was necessary to elect three new members on the membership committee, and Mr. M. B. Coker, Mr. J. B. Herbert and Mr. C. E. Clift, were elected to take the places of Messrs. Heflin, Prince and Garrett.

Unpaid Bills.

The Treasurer reported that Attorney Carrington's bill of $260.00 was still unpaid, and there was not sufficient funds in the Treasury at the present time to pay it. After some discussion the Treasurer was ordered to draw a check for as much as he could spare, and turn it over to the Secretary, who would send it to Mr. Carrington and explain that we would send the balance as soon as possible.

New Business.

The Secretary stated that if any member had any suggestions to make regarding any speaker of any subject that they would like brought up at the National Convention, he would be glad to forward them on to our National Secretary, Mr. Kehr. It was decided that the members think this over and if they have any suggestions to make send them in direct to Mr. Kehr.

It was decided that we be represented at the National Convention to be held in Louisville, Sept. 19, 20, 21, 22, 1923. Mr. Bray nominated Mr. Bradshaw, of Norfolk, to be delegate from the Virginia Industrial Lenders Association. Mr. Clift seconded the nomination. Upon vote Mr. Bradshaw was unanimously elected.

Mr. Pope of Richmond was elected as Alternate Delegate.

Operation of the Clearing House came up for discussion and Mr. Clift suggested that the members of the different cities got together once a week and suggested a luncheon where the managers could talk things over. Everybody considered this a good plan, and it was left to the members of the different cities to get together themselves.

It was decided that the next meeting be held at Lynchburg, Va., Thursday, October 18, 1923. Time and place to be nnounced later by the entertainment committee, C. E. Clift and S. R. Sutton.

There being no further business to transact the business meeting adjourned.

The members met in the Banquet Hall at 6 p. m. and a splendid time was had by all. Great credit is due Mr. Herbert of Roanoke, for the splendid dinner that was served and getting good speakers to address the members.

The principal speakers were Congressman Woodrum of Roanoke. Mr. G. M. Smithdeal of Richmond, and Mr. T. B. Dickenson, Attorney-at-Law of Roanoke, Va.

A vote of thanks was given to the speakers for their splendid addresses.

FRANK BRAY, Secretary.

DOES "A. A." MEMBERSHIP PAY?

DEAR MR. KEHR:

We inquired of you in June for someone in San Francisco to take care of an account, we received very good service from Mr. Albert C. Auger of the San Francisco Remedial Loan Association. We thank you very much for this service.

We are now asking another favor, that is if you could supply us with the name of someone of Los Angeles California who might look up an account for us.

Very truly yours,
AMERICAN LOAN SOCIETY, INC.

The name of our Los Angeles correspondent was given this member.

SENATOR MOSES DEALS BLOW TO CAPITAL LOAN SHARKS.

Senator Moses, of New Hampshire, as Chairman of the Joint Committee on Printing, has dealt a crushing blow to the Washington "loan sharks." Returning from the Republican debacle in Minnesota, the Senator took time out from talking politics to wield his economy ax on the "Official Register," a large volume published by the Government every two years, containing the names, positions and salaries of all civilian employes.

While Federal officials have found the book almost useless to them, it has been invaluable to the "ten percenters," who live on impecunious and improvident Government clerks. Despite the District of Columbia loan shark law, the Shylocks flourish by the simple means of extracting their pound of flesh when the loan is made and then charge the legal rate of interest. Applicants for loans are usually out of luck unless their names are in the "blue book."

Mr. Moses found that it was costing the Government $27,000 every two years to print and bind the book, in addition to $15,000 for its compilation. In his order discontinuing the printing of the volume, he has recommended that the card index, from which it is compiled, now in the hands of the Census Bureau, be turned over to the Civil Service Commission. He says that two clerks can easily handle the index and keep it current.—Public Ledger, Philadelphia, Monday morning, July 23, 1923.

FORT WAYNE LENDERS WIDE AWAKE.

Mr. G. W. Kehr,
Harrisburg, Pa.

Dear Sir:

I know you would like to hear what Ft. Wayne is doing with the Publicity advertising that has been launched in this Sate.

We sent out the enclosed letter to about 700 manufacturers and business men, as well as the various Clubs, also enclosing the first large piece of publicity as well as the small enclosure which was copied from the "News" of April, from Mr. Whimer's article.

We start our first add (large one) next Wednesday, and send letters out Tuesday (not sent as above stated).

Very cordially yours,
Joseph Baum.

To Manufacturers and Others:

Dear Sirs:

The Indiana Industrial Lenders Association will open a campaign of general information as to the nature of the business as carried on in Indiana and nineteen other States having the Model Loan Law, and we feel sure that this will be most enlightening to you as well as your employees.

The enclosed add, which is our first piece of publicity, will appear on the classified page of the evening News-Sentinel of this Wednesday, and others on the classified page on the same day each week for fifty-two weeks.

It is our desire that you would take a few moments of your valuable time each week to read these articles. We also enclose a clipping for your perusal that is informative and worth while reading.

It would also be very much appreciated if you could see your way clear to post these enclosures on your bulletin board for the benefit of your employees (the letter also, if you deem it advisable) and bring them to the attention of the heads of each of your departments.

Respectfully yours,
Ft. Wayne Chapter,
Indiana Industrial Lenders Association.

THE CREDIT UNION.

Announcement that the first credit union charter under authority of the 1923 Indiana credit union law has been granted, and that several applications for charters are now before the board, indicates that there is likely to be some experiment with this form of bank. The law was passed by the Indiana legislature largely as an offer of opportunity to the people. It was sponsored by a national organization formed to combat the loan shark. The plan is sound, the state has thrown around credit unions all of the protection accorded savings banks and the way is open for interested citizens to make the most of the law.

Under the law, any seven persons, residents of Indiana, may apply to the secretary of state for permission to organize a credit union. The union may issue stock or shares, accepting in payment for them the savings of its members. It may make loans to its members in sums not to exceed $500, and it may invest any sums above the money needed for loans in such ways as are legal for savings banks. It has the power to borrow money within safe limits specified in the law and its interest rate on money lent to its members must be reasonable, and not to exceed 8 per cent a year, not collectible in advance. It may pay dividends out of profits, but 20 per cent of the net earnings must go into the reserve fund, which is required to meet contingencies.

The credit union idea of the United States is comparatively new, but returns this year showed $8,000,000 in credit union reserve funds in various parts of the country. In some districts, farmers have made good use of the plan. It is a natural result of the crusade against loan sharks which has resulted in much improvement in the character of people who make a business of small loans. The theory is that a group of persons can benefit by sharing their savings and credit under adequate supervision. If the plan does no more than create employment for the hoarded money in the United States estimated at $2,000,000,000, it will be well worth while.—Editorial, Indianapolis News July 20, 1923.

INTEREST ON SMALL LOANS.

A "business woman" writes concerning a lender who charges 42 per cent interest on loans of $300 or less. The lender evidently is a licensee under what is commonly called the "Uniform Small Loan Law," enacted in Illinois in 1917. Its passage was advocated by a number of commercial and philanthropic organizations, and by some of Chicago's leading newspapers on the theory that while the rate seemed high it was so much lower than the 60 to 240 per cent then being charged that there was no doubt as to the advisability of its passage.

In Illinois the business is under the supervision of our department of trade and commerce, the lender's offices are examined regularly in much the same manner as are banks; and, the law as now administered is considered beneficial to the community.

Walter S. Hilborn, acting director of the division of remedial loans, Russell Sage Foundation, New York City, is responsible for the statement that the "uniform law" has been enacted and is in force in Arizona, Connecticut, Georgia, Illinois, Indiana, Iowa, Maine, Maryland, Pennsylvania and Rhode Island; and that similar laws have been enacted and are now in force in Colorado, Massachusetts, Michigan, New Hampshire, New Jersey, New York, Ohio, Oregon, Utah and Virginia.

The maximum pawnbrokers rate as provided by law, has been 36 per cent since 1879; and the same maximum is allowed by law to wage loan corporations, which are eleemosynary in their character, the governor appointing one director and the mayor of the city where the corporation operates, appointing another.

The small loan business is of ancient origin. Some writers trace it back for nearly a thousand years. According to Kelly in his "History of Usury," London 1835, licenses were issued by the king in the 13th century, authorizing the making of small loans at rates approximating 43 per cent.

The necessity for a considerable volume of small loans is no longer questioned by those who are familiar with the subject and so far as Illinois is concerned, at least, the only problem is the rate. The rate will go lower when men are found who can and will lend for less.

"Business woman" is greatly mistaken in her estimate of the character and intelligence of the borrower. Generally speaking, they come from that very large class of our citizens who do not own property of any great value but who know what they promise to do and intend to do it and, who would rather pay for their financial accommodations than to impose upon their friends.—Charles R. Napier, in The Daily News, Chicago, August 11, 1923.

WHAT STATE WILL WIN THE ATTENDANCE TROPHY THIS YEAR?

Four states have a good chance to have their names inscribed on the attendance trophy this year because the national convention is being held in a city not far away from any of them. Who can guess whether Kentucky, Illinois, Indiana or Ohio will win the cup this year? Each state has an excellent chance to share some of the lustre enjoyed by Illinois and Pennsylvania which captured the cup in 1921 and 1922, respectively.

We have a suspicion that Indiana is planning secretly to register one hundred per cent of its members because the Hoosier boys like to spring surprises.

SPECIAL TRIP TO MAMMOTH CAVE

and Return

Saturday, September 22, 1923

For the accommodation of the ladies the officers, delegates and their friends who are attending the above convention, arrangements have been made by the Louisville & Nashville Railroad to operate a special train to leave Union Station, Tenth and Broadway, 7:30 a. m., arriving Mammoth Cave, 10:30 a. m. Returning, leave the Cave 5:30 p. m., arrive Louisville 8:30 p. m., in time for all connections.

The entire expense which will include round trip transportation, dinner and supper at the Mammoth Cave Hotel and the choice of either the Echo River or Martha Washington — Star Chamber route in Mammoth Cave.

This is an unusual opportunity to visit Mammoth Cave, inasmuch as you can make the trip in one day and return to Louisville in time for all connections. In order that the Hotel can be prepared to serve the party, railroad tickets should be purchased as early as possible and a representative of the Louisville & Nashville Railroad will sell tickets in the convention hall. They can also be purchased at the Consolidated Ticket Office, Fourth and Market Streets, or the ticket office at Union Station, Tenth and Broadway. For any further information see E. G. Jones, City Passenger Agent, L. & N. R. R., 204 Marion E. Taylor Building. Phones: Main 1585; City 197.

CONVENTION ENTERTAINMENT.

Aug. 29, 1923.

Dear Mr Kehr:

It seems that we have the entertainment solution well in hand. All arrangements have been carefully made by the writer for the entertainment of the guests attending the American Industrial Lenders' Association Convention, to be held in Louisville, September 19th, 20th, 21st and 22nd. Arrangements have been completed as follows:

Reservations at Seelbach Hotel.

Theatre party for ladies.

Automobile sight-seeing trip for entire convention.

Sight-seeing trip through the business section for ladies and gentlemen.

Trip to Mammoth Cave.

We have engaged the best orchestra obtainable.

Entertainer and story-teller — Miss Fannie May Baldridge.

Souvenir books containing history and songs of My Old Kentucky Home, Old Folks at Home, and Old Black Joe, by Stephen C. Foster.

Yours very truly,
C. E. Reed,
Chairman Local Entertainment Committee.

HERE'S HOW SECRETARY BAKER HELPED TO BOOST THE CONVENTION IN ILLINOIS.

As September draws near each year, we in the loan business, begin to think about and plan for the Annual Convention of the National Association.

You know that it will be held in Louisville, Kentucky, this year on September 19th, 20th, 21st, and 22nd, Seelbach Hotel (make your reservations now).

Those who will conduct this year's meeting are endeavoring to make it an improved convention. The effort will be toward more practical help and less social splendor. A great deal of very important business will come up and several distinct departures are being talked of.

This year, as in former years, no one in the business can afford to miss the convention.

You will find hospitality in Louisville; you will find the Old Ohio with its side wheelers interesting and Mammoth Cave (world's wonder), is close by.

Kindly help the Association Officers in their arrangement work by filling out the enclosed postal card and mailing it immediately.

PUBLICITY.

(For release Tuesday, September 4.)

New York, September 3.—The causes of borrowing, not that done from banks where giltedged collateral is offered as security for loans, but the small loan obtained by the man or woman who has no security to offer, will be one of the principal topics for discussion at the forthcoming convention of the American Industrial Lenders' Association in Louisville, September 19th to 22nd. There is a widespread belief that these small loans are due to the improvidence or unthriftiness of a class of borrowers deserving of little sympathy because their necessities are due to their own faults. To correct this impression and to set this class of borrowers right will be one of the considerations of the convention.

The impelling reasons for this class of borrowing, as shown by typical records, may be grouped under the following heads:

1. Sickness.
2. Death in the family.
3. To consolidate all small irritating debts and to liquidate the one debt by installments.
4. To buy real estate or to meet interest or principal on mortgages.
5. To advance the situation of their families.
6. To expand a small business.

A classification by occupation shows that among those who borrow from small loan companies, clerks lead, including post office and other government employees and state, city and county employees, with policemen, firemen, secretaries and stenographers, agents, salesmen, factory and other industrial workers, teachers, doctors, writers, bookkeepers and accountants also represented.

The Association convention proceedings will be concerned about equally with the broad general subject of industrial financing and with its technical aspects. The discussion of the former will be by men nationally known as educators, economists and sociologists, among them being Matthew Holt, Attorney for the Legal Aid Society, Louisville; Dr. Louis N. Robinson, of Swarthmore, Pa., who will report on the survey of the small loan business under the auspices of the Russell Sage Foundation; William A. Murphy, formerly Director of Trade and Commerce, Springfield, Ill.; Walter S. Hilborn, Acting Director of the Division of Remedial Loans of the Russell Sage Foundation, on "The Year's Progress and the Uniform Law"; Dr. Frank L. McVey, President Kentucky University, "Small Loans as an Industrial Factor"; and Dr. Earle Edward Eubank, of the University of Cincinnati, "Small Loans and Social Research." Clifford Ireland, Director of Trade and Commerce, Springfield, Ill., also will probably address the convention.

The technical discussions will be by A. L. Wick, of Philadelphia; G. W. Farrington, Indianapolis; Alan K. Dolliver, New Haven, Conn.; Charles R. Napier, Chicago; R. C. Clark, Indianapolis; P. L. Alberse, Paterson, N. J.; L. C. Harbison, Chicago; F. B. Merritt, New Brunswick, N. J.; and R. M. Rutherford, New York. Address of welcome will be made by Mayor Huston Quin and Robert F. Vaughan, of Louisville.

The membership of the Association is composed of men engaged in the business of making small loans, that is loans up to $300. So closely are they in touch with the class of small borrowers they they are known as the "poor man's bankers" and they are in exceptional position to know the reasons why clients are forced to appeal to them for their emergency financing. It is the consensus of industrial lenders that a large percentage of their clients are worthy persons who are obliged to borrow through their misfortunes rather than their faults, and that hence they are as well deserving of consideration in their necessities as the more fortunate classes of borrowers who have no difficulty in obtaining ample credit.

While the law governing the business of industrial lending limits the amount that may be so loaned to $300, the average small loan is about $75, the interest rate on which is higher than the rate permitted to be charged on commercial loans. It has been estimated that only seven out of one hundred adult persons in the United States maintain a bank account, that eighty-six men out of 100 fail in life, counting failure from the viewpoint of dollars and cents. Of the fourteen who succeed, it is estimated only two make a marked success in life, so that fourteen out of 100 adults are entitled to credit, requiring collateral accepted by banks.

The remaining 86 are without credit except such as they may obtain on their characters, earning ability, unsecured notes or personal property. They constitute the producers of wealth and the great consuming class whose reasonable prosperity is essential to the success of business which must depend on the consuming class. The banks, of course, cannot finance them in their emergency needs and this has given rise to the industrial lending banker as a necessary and important business. The extent of this business is evident from the fact that the combined capital of the firms represented in the Association membership is estimated at $60,000,000 and their combined annual loans at $150,000,000.

If your local paper has not printed similar accounts of the convention, here is a chance to do some publicity work by adding a little local color.—Ed.

HELP TO MAKE THE LOAN LIBRARY

The following letter was addressed to each state secretary but it suggests how each member may help:

"Do you know there is an International

LOAN LIBRARY in the making here in Chicago?

"Do you know that authorative history is obtainable on the Small Loan Business dating back to the thirteenth century when the king issued licenses granting approximately forty-three per cent?

"This LOAN LIBRARY, which was started by the Illinois Industrial Lenders' Association with Attorney C. R. Napier as Chief Librarian and originator of the idea, is expected to contain all literature of importance, both ancient and modern, and in time will be of inestimable value to the loan business at large.

"This letter is sent you as Secretary of your State Association in the hope that you will at your next meeting, ask your members to forward to C. R. Napier, Ashland Block, Chicago, any literature they have available to contribute to this library. Old books upon the subject which are now probably out of print are especially desired.

"Thanking you for your coöperation in promulgating this very important work, I remain,"

Respectfully,
L. T. Baker,
Secretary.

ILLINOIS.

The sixth annual meeting of the Illinois Industrial Lenders' Association was held at the Morrison Hotel, Chicago, on the afternoon of July 27th.

As President Woll was out of the city and Vice-Presidents Tyson and Harbison were not present, when the meeting was called to order, Ex-Chairman A. Snite presided. There were sixteen members including two down state men present.

The various Standing Committees reported, all of which were approved.

Attorney Napier advised that a Galesburg bank, who it seems were innocently assisting a high rate lender in Galesburg, had pledged their coöperation to our Association in the effort to eliminate the practice. Mr. Napier explained the use and purpose of the Loan Library of which he has charge and finds that this is already becoming an asset to both himself and the business. Everyone is urged to send in literature pertaining to the business, to Chas. R. Napier, Ashland Block, Chicago, Ill.

The members present voted unanimously that the Association Secretary was to act as delegate to the National Convention.

A brief discussion as to the Association's activities for the ensuing year was then entered into.

As former President Woll refused renomination, a vote of thanks for his efforts and valued service to the Association was unanimously given and the following officers elected:

The newly elected president was escorted to the chair and made a splendid speech of acceptance saying that he thought that the down state men would appreciate the appointment of a president not from Chicago.

L. T. Baker,
Secretary.

RE OHIO CONVENTION, ETC.

Judge Dyer writes:

"Answering your request received a few days ago for a report of the meeting of the Ohio Loan Association held at Cedar Point, August 8th, 9th and 10th, beg to say that Mr. Anderson promised to make a detailed report to you. Fearing his report may be delayed, I am herewith enclosing printed program which was carried out completely. Dr. Robinson read a fine paper on his subject which he is now correcting preparatory to printing it in pamphlet form for distribution. We expect to print 5,000 and keep the form set until we can learn from all the states how many of these pamphlets they desire for use.

"The old officers and executive committee were reëlected, except that W. W. Taylor, of The Security Loan Co., Sandusky, Ohio, was elected vice-president of the National Association for Ohio. The executive committee were authorized to select five delegates to attend the National Convention at Louisville, and they were also authorized to contribute $500.00 to the general expense of holding the convention, provided other continuous state associations contributed a like amount, and the same was necessary to pay the legitimate expense of holding the national convention.

"It is the desire of the Ohio members that the national organization be continued, provided some plan can be adopted whereby it will be a real force in the development of small loan affairs. If the income to the association is so reduced that it will only be a pretense in the future, I do not believe the Ohio association or members will continue. Our disposition is, however, to give any plan or suggestion fair consideration, to the end that all small loan concerns may have the benefit of that coöperation which should result from organization conducted for the common good of all concerned.

"Ohio will be represented by strong delegates who will be able to express the views of our membership in regard to association matters. I should like very much to attend this meeting and particularly to visit Mammoth Cave and renew old acquaintances and shall endeavor to so arrange my affairs as to spend a day or more at the convention.

Very truly yours,
J. H. Dyer.

RE MEMBERSHIP.

Tate Harrison Writes:

Dear Lender:

Do you remember some years ago—
When everybody looked down on him?
When the courts frowned on him with a skeptical eye?
When the small loan broker was called a "Shylock?"
Do you remember?—

Those were the days when every lender was "going it alone"—when conditions were going from bad to worse and the future looked dark to every money lender.

But, since the organizing of the American Industrial Lenders' Association, conditions have gradually changed for the better—this was accomplished through coöperation and peristent work on the part of all its officers and members.

I feel that you can become an important "Cog in the Wheel" that is daily doing the things necessary to put the money lender before the public on a plane with the commercial banker—this has already been accomplished in some states through legislation and the passing of adequate and fair laws.

In my last letter I told you of the many things this national organization is doing and I want to again urge you to give this early and serious consideration, for the help you directly and indirectly receive will pay you in actual dollars much more than the small membership fee.

You will find enclosed another application blank—fill it out and mail with remittance on basis of 50 cents per thousand on capital invested.

Let's have the application to-day—then plan to attend the Ninth Annual Convention at Louisville, Kentucky, on September 19th, 20th, 21st and 22nd.

Cordially yours,
T. J. Harrison,
Chairman Membership Committee.

GLOBE SECURITY & LOAN CO. v. CARREL, Auditor, (Nos. 17212-17216.)

(Supreme Court of Ohio. Nov. 21, 1922.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. Pawnbrokers and money lenders key 4—Statute requiring license from loan brokers held a regulatory and not a revenue measure.

The provision of section 6346—1, General Code, making it "unlawful for any person * * * to engage * * * in the business of making loans * * * upon the mortgage or pledge of chattels or personal property * * * or making loans on salaries or wage earnings * * * without first having obtained a license," is a regulatory as distinguished from a revenue measure.

2. Pawnbrokers and money lenders key 4—Statute requiring license from loan brokers does not restrict right to levy tax as revenue measure.

The provision of section 6346—2, General Code, "no other and further license fee shall be required from any such license, by the state or any municipality," while restricting the state and the municipalities of the state from exacting further license fees in the regulation of such business, in no way restricts the state or the municipalities from levying an excise tax upon the business of such license as a revenue measure. (State ex rel. v. Carrel, Aud., 99 Ohio St. 220, 124 N. E. 34, approved and followed.)

Error to Court of Appeals, Hamilton County.

Separate petitions by the Globe Security & Loan Company, the Welfare Loan Company, and the Citizens' Mortgage Loan Company against George P. Carrel, Auditor, and by the Cincinnati Collateral Loan Company and the Beneficial Loan Society against the City of Cincinnati and others. Demurrers to the petitions were sustained in each case and judgments entered thereon were affirmed by the Court of Appeals on error, and plaintiffs bring error. Affirmed in each case.

The Globe Security & Loan Company, plaintiff in error in cause No. 17212, iled a petition in the court of common pleas of Hamilton county, Ohio, of which he following is a copy:

"Now comes the Globe Security & Loan Company, and says that it is a corporation organized under the laws of he State of Ohio, and engaged in doing business and making loans on chattel mortgages at its place of buisness in the City of Cincinnati, Hamilton County, Ohio, and that in conformity with the laws of Ohio it did, on or before the 1st day of March, 1920, pay to the superntendent of banks of the State of Ohio, fee of $100, and obtained from said uperintendent of banks of the State of Ohio a license to engage in the chattel oan business for the year beginning March 1, 1920, and expiring February 8, 1921.

"Plaintiff says that the defendant, George P. Carrel, is the duly elected, ualified and acting auditor of the City f Cincinnati, Hamilton County, Ohio. Plaintiff further says that on the 20th ay of August, 1920, the council of the City of Cincinnati, State of Ohio, passed n ordinance No. 312—1920, 'to levy an nnual occupational tax upon persons, rganizations of persons, firms and corporations carrying on certain trades, proessions, occupations and businesses in he City of Cincinnati, by amending secons 812—1 to 812—15, both inclusive, f the Code Ordinances of the City of Cincinnati.' That said ordinance, under chedule 2, provides as follows:

"'Brokers' (chattel mortgages) — very person, association of persons, firm r corporation engaged in the business f lending or advancing money (or neotiating for the loan or advance of money) or of securing chattels or by a mortgage shall pay an annual tax of one undred ($100) dollars. Also,

"'Brokers' (industrial loans)—every erson, association of persons, firm or orporation engaged in the business of aning money on plain notes or personal ecurity at legal rates, other than a naonal or state bank, to be paid in weekly monthly or other periodical installents, shall be deemed an industrial loan ompany, or Morris Plan Bank, and shall ay an annual tax of ($150) one hundred nd fifty dollars. Also,

"'Brokers' (salaries)—every person, sociation of persons, firm or corporaon engaged in the business of loaning advancing money or negotiating for e loan or advancement of money or asgnment of salaries or wages due or to ecome due, shall be known as a 'salary okers' and shall pay an annual tax of ne hundred ($100) dollars.

"That said ordinance aforesaid pro- des that the taxes provided for therein hall take effect as to all provisions ereof in so far as the same relate or pply to the trades, professions, occupaons, or businesses mentioned in schedule wo in section 812—1 thereof from and ter the 1st day of November, 1920, and at the annual taxes provided for in hedule 2 of section 812—1, thereof, all be payable in semi-annual installents, in advance, between the 1st and th days of May and November of each nd every year, commencing with Nomber, 1920.

"Plaintiff further says that said ordi- nce of the City of Cincinnati in so r as it purports to provide an occupational tax or license for the occupation or business of loaning money on chattel mortgages or assignment of wages, is unconstitutional or void.

"The defendant, George P. Carrel, as auditor of the City of Cincinnati, is taking steps and preparing to collect said tax against the plaintiff. Plaintiff states that it has no adequate remedy at law and asks the court that a temporary order issue restraining the defendant from collecting said occupational tax as aforesaid, and that upon final hearing said temporary injunction be made permanent; and plaintiff prays for all other relief to which it may be entitled in the premises."

The plaintiffs in error in the other cases filed similar petitions in the common pleas court, to each of which petitions a general demurrer was filed by the city solicitor, each of which demurrers was sustained by the court of common pleas, and the plaintiffs not desiring to plead further final judgments were rendered against them. Error was prosecuted to the Court of Appeals, where the judgment of the court of common pleas were affirmed, from which affirmances error is prosecuted here.

ROBINSON, J. The power of the City of Cincinnati to enact an occupational tax ordinance has been declared by this court in the case of State ex rel. v. Carrel, Aud., 99 Ohio St. 220, 124 N. E. 134; the court having there held:

"1. The State of Ohio, under the provisions of section 10, article XII of the Constitution, has authority to levy excise taxes in the form of an occupational tax.

"2. Under the grant of power of local self-government provided for in section 3, article XVIII of the state Constitution, the City of Cincinnati, as long as the State of Ohio through its General Assembly does not lay an occupational tax on businesses, trades, vocations and professions followed in the state, may raise revenue for local purposes, through the instrumentality of occupational taxes."

The Legislature of Ohio by the enactment of section 6346—1, General Code, has provided:

"Sec. 6346—1. It shall be unlawful for any person * * * to engage, or continue, in the business of making loans * * * upon the mortgage or pledge of chattels or personal property of any kind, or of purchasing or making loans on salaries or wage earnings * * * at a charge or rate of interest in excess of eight per centum per annum including all charges, without first having obtained a license so to do from the commissioner of securities and otherwise complying with the provisions of this chapter."

Section 6346—2, after providing for the payment of a "license fee," has provided that such "license fee shall include the entire cost of inspection or inspections for a period of one year," and that "no other and further license fee shall be required from any such licensee, by the state or any municipality nor shall any fees charged be collected under section 73 of the General Code." It has further provided for the mode of securing the license and for the execution of a bond to the State of Ohio to secure the observance of the provisions of the act, and has provided that the commissioner of securities shall annually, at least, investigate the business of the licensee. It has enjoined upon the commissioner of securities the duty of prosecuting violators of the act; has in fact through the commissioner of securities undertaken to regulate the business of such licensee and has undertaken to require the payment of the expense of such regulation of the licensee by the exaction of an annual license fee.

The record does not disclose the number of licenses issued by the state, or the number of agents and assistants employed by the commissioner of securities, or the expense of that department. The court, therefore, is without the necessary facts to determine whether the revenue secured by the state from such license fees is in excess of the expense of carrying out the provisions of the act. But were these facts disclosed by the record, this court would not with exact nicety make a comparison of the necessary expenditure by the commissioner of securities with the sum of the fees exacted, but would be governed by the purpose of the enactment rather than by the result which its enforcement discloses.

This court, in the case of State v. Hipp, 38 Ohio St. 199, has thus defined a "license":

"A license is permission granted by some competent authority to do an act which, without such permission, would be illegal."

[1] Accepting this definition, the Legislature enacted section 6346——1 et seq., and this court, adhering to that definition, and being further influenced by consideration of the regulatory provisions of that and the following sections, is of opinion that the fee exacted by the enactment is literally a license fee; that the Legislature in the enactment of the provision "no other and further license fee shall be required from any such licensee, by the state or any municipality, nor shall any fees charged be collected under section 736 of the General Code," used the words "license fee" advisedly, and in the sense above indicated; and that its limitation upon the further activities of state and municipalities with reference thereto is confined to the particular scope of the act itself and prohibits the state and municipalities from exacting other and additional license fees, but extends no further.

[2] The ordinance involved in this case, in so far as its provisions are disclosed by the record, does not attempt to make the business unlawful, or to regulate the manner of its operations, or to confer upon the person engaged in the business any privilege; but, on the contrary, assuming the right of persons to engage in the particular line of business, it imposes a tax upon such business, the payment of which is not a prerequisite to the right to engage in such business, any more than the payment of any other excise tax is a prerequisite to the right of a person to engage in the particular business taxed.

We find no conflict between the provisions of section 6346—1 et seq. and the ordinance of the City of Cincinnati as disclosed by the record.

The judgment of the courts below is affirmed in each case.

Judgments affirmed.

THE NATION'S BUSINESS.

Published by The Chamber of Commerce of the United States of America

Washington, August 17, 1923.

DEAR MR. KEHR:

I have before me the copy of your membership list which you sent us in January of 1922.

A few days ago I had it checked against the subscription lists of the Nation's Business, and I see now what an unusually large number of your members have become subscribers. This is a pretty accurate indication that the magazine is of definite service to men of such similar business interests as those who belong to the American Industrial Lenders' Association.

For this reason, the Chamber is desirous again to describe the official monthly magazine to those of your old members who have not yet subscribed, and to the new members who have joined your ranks since you sent us the old list.

President Barnes has himself prepared a letter which is to go to them, and is anxious to get it started promptly. Will you therefore kindly send us your newest list, giving names and addresses of your members. Send it, please, in care of myself.

Yours very truly,
MERLE THORPE,
Editor and General Manager.

DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE

Bureau of the Census.

Washington, August 27, 1923.

DEAR MR KEHR:

In looking through your August number of the INDUSTRIAL LENDERS' NEWS I ran across a statement at the bottom of page 5 bearing upon the membership of your association and the total volume of business which it transacts annually.

I note with keen interest the fact that the total loans aggregate annually $150,000,000. This is a sizable item, to be sure, and I am inclined to believe that the small loan business does, in fact, meet a real economic need. It is with this feeling that I write to inquire as to the possibility of obtaining current monthly statistics which would show the loaning operations of your combined membership. Were these figures made available to the general public, through such a medium as the "Survey of Current Business," published monthly by this Department, I believe a fairly accurate indication might be given of the future movements in commerce and industry for it seems to me that the volume of small loans would be the greatest in times of business depression and the least in times of business prosperity. If the figures covering this movement substantiate my presumption a statistical series showing this cyclical trend would be highly valuable. I realize that it will take considerable time and effort to compile current figures monthly if such is not already being done but I feel that time and energy will be well spent for the figures will be of benefit to your membership as well as to business men in general. Surely the industrial lender, among other things, is anxious to know whether he is getting the full share of business in his community and the only way that he can ascertain this point is by comparison with the total volume of business transacted by your association at large.

The data which I am desirous of obtaining are those covering the period from 1913 to date. If you are unable to furnish monthly data for this period, annual data will be sufficient for the years 1913 to 1920 with current data from January, 1920, to the present time.

Trusting that this matter receives your early attention and coöperation, I am

Very truly yours,
L. SETH SCHINTMAN,
Special Agent.

PENNSYLVANIA.

The regular meeting of the Pennsylvania Association was held in the rooms of the Eagle Mountain Home, Reading, at two p. m. on Friday, July 27, 1923.

GEORGIA.

The legislature recently adjourn without passing any legislation affecti the small loan business.

ALABAMA.

Reports and inquiries indicate that Senator Sloane who has been making an investigation relative to small loan legislation in other states will introduce the uniform small loan law in Alabama this year. Another state apparently is about to take the step necessary to correct its small loan problem.

ALABAMA.

The Alabama legislature did not enact the uniform small loan law due to opposition of the high-rate lenders, who are reported to have raised a considerable sum for financing aid to defeat the measure.

He reports that the Hildreth Bill against the salary buyers was successfully enacted.

FROM SCOTLAND.

112 Bath Street, Glasgow.
August 22, 1923.

Dear Mr. Kehr:

It is a long time since last I wrote to you, but I don't need to ask how you are doing, because I can see from the Gazette, which you send me every month, that you are keeping active and making progress.

My reason for writing is, firstly, to notify you of my change of address, and secondly, to ask whether you would be good enough to send me another copy (or copies of the Supplement which went along with the July Gazette. I was so impressed with it that I sent it to the picture-framers in order that I could hang it up in my office, but the fool lost it. I felt, not only that it would be a good advertisement for myself, but that I could show it to my fellow-lenders as a specimen of American progress.

It is possible, however, that we will gradually be waking up. The Scottish Money Lenders Association (of which I am now president) intend shortly adopting a small publicity campaign, and, we hope, the results will be all to the general good.

When replying, you might also let me know whether my dues are fully paid, and if not, I will forward you whatever is owing. I don't like to remind you that you owe me one or two Year Books, because you have all been so kind that it would seem like trespassing on your kindness.

I look forward with keen pleasure to every copy of the Gazette, and I almost envy you the progress your association is making.

Wishing you and the association every success, I remain, with kind regards,

Yours sincerely,
Ernest Greenhill.

P. S. Could your association help us to trace some of our "Skips?"

DR. R. H. SMITH SPEAKS

The proceedings of the Academy of Political Science in the city of New York, published in July, 1923, giving the proceedings of a special meeting devoted to "Law and Justice," gives (p. 522-30) an interesting address by Reginald Heber Smith of the Boston Bar, entitled "The Elimination of Delay Through Small Claims Courts and Conciliation Tribunals."

In the appendix (p. 227) Dr. P. T. Moon and Herman Oliphant, the editors, refer to this paper as follows: "An important paper by a distinguished authority on the subject, Mr. Reginald Heber Smith, on "Small Claims and Conciliation Courts."

Legal lenders throughout the country have long been cognizant of Dr. Smith's ability and are appreciative of the helpful interest he has taken in economics and legislation relating to the small loans business. He is on the program of the annual convention of the American Industrial Lenders Association at Louisville, Ky.

DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE. BUREAU OF CENSUS.

Bureau of Census.

Washington, D. C.
September 10, 1923.

Dear Mr. Kehr:

This will acknowledge, with thanks, receipt of your letter of September 4th.

For some time we have been interested in obtaining current statistics, covering now some 1,000 business movements, looking toward a greater knowledge of underlying business and industrial conditions. It is with this idea that it has been our desire to obtain data concerning the small loan business, particularly because of the present dearth of accurate statistical information concerning your line of economic endeavor.

In the "Survey of Current Business," a copy of which went forward to you several days ago, you will note the method of presenting the current figures which come to us from various sources. Many of these data run back to the pre-war years, which fact, of course, makes them highly valuable for comparative purposes. Other items do not enjoy this historical background and yet have a considerable degree of current value. If it were possible to obtain the figures showing the current monthly movement in your field of finance, which indeed fills an economic need, I believe our present data on savings deposits, new life-insurance sales and collection of life insurance premiums would be valuably supplemented.

Following your suggestion, I shall communicate with Dr. Louis N. Robinson, who has been making a study of the small loan field with a view to obtaining from him such statistical information which he has compiled covering this most interesting subject.

I do not think it possible at the present time to accept your invitation to be present at your national convention in Louisville but please accept my thanks for the consideration which you have given me in this connection. I trust, however, that my absence will not prevent your calling to the attention of the representatives of your association the work which I have in mind.

Very truly yours,
(Signed) W. M. Stewart, Director.

IRRESISTABLE.

Dear Lender:

The Industrial Loan business is a vital part of the business fabric of the nation. It performs a certain useful, needed service to mankind.

But, like every other line of business, it has to meet new conditions each year and must adjust itself accordingly.

The money lending profession has found, like every other up-and-doing business, that there was much to gain by having a National Association—a working body—

> That would keep track of changing conditions. Help to change conditions that proved detrimental to the business—that would act as a clearing house for information that would benefit its widespread membership.

You will find the most progressive and wide-awake men in our line of business are members of the A. I. L. A. Other progressive and wide-awake lenders are joining every week—purely for the benefits they can derive by joining—we want you with us.

> Our big National Convention will open at The Seelbach Hotel Louisville, Ky., on Wednesday, September 19th, lasting until the 22d.
> You are welcome to come—and we want you to be there to help make it a bigger success.

This gathering will not be a mere pleasure gathering—it will be essentially a business gathering from which you'll derive lasting, worth-while benefits.

Will you meet me at Louisville on the above dates?

Cordially yours,
T. J. Harrison,
Chairman Membership Committee.

MARYLAND.

The regular monthly meeting of the Maryland Association was held on Tuesday, September, 11th, at 8 p.m., in the Board Room of the Merchants & Manufacturers Building, No. 22 Light Street, Baltimore, Md.

An account of this meeting will appear in our next issue.

GEORGIA.

A meeting of the Executive Committee was held August 23, 1923 for the purpose of electing officers for the issuing year.

The following officers unanimously elected:

A. B. Madison, chairman; Henry Sharp, vice-chairman; F. B. Snyder, secretary and treasurer.

Executive Committee: A. B. Madison, J. M. Marion, Henry Sharp, L. B. Lassiter, and F. B. Snyder.

The association voted to have A. B. Madison attend the National Convention at Louisville, Ky., as Georgia representative, all expenses to be paid out of the treasury.

No further business of importance at this time the meeting adjourned.

LOUISVILLE INVITES YOU.

Remember the Dates—Come!

Just a sample of what will take place at the Ninth Annual Convention to be held at Louisville, Ky., September 19th to 22d.

"Advertising the Small Loan Business"—Will Pente, Chicago.

"The Years Progress and the Uniform Law"—W. S. Hilborn, Division of Remedial Loans, Russell Sage Foundation, New York.

"Educational Publicity"—G. W. Farrington, Indianapolis.

"Should Small Loan Companies be Permitted to Receive Savings and Deposits" Alan K. Dolliver, New Haven, Conn.

"What Rates Should be Charged on Endorsed Note Loans?"—F. B. Merritt, New Brunswick, N. J.

These are just a few of the many important subjects that will be discussed. They directly touch on the welfare of the Industrial Money Lenders of the United States. There is no question but what every member and non-member who attends will take away ideas and benefits worth a good deal more than the cost of his trip to Louisville.

You are cordially invited to attend whether you are a member or not—and you are invited to join the association—but remember you will not be urged to join. If you do so, it must be through your own desire to benefit by what the Association can do for you as a member.

Remember—be at the Seelbach Hotel, Louisville, Ky., on opening day—September 1 th. You'll have an enjoyable and worth while experience.

THE SMALL LOAN.

The widespread belief that small loans from the thousands of lending companies in the United States are due to lack of providence and thrift of a general class of borrowers, is refuted by a thorough survey and analysis made by the national association of loaning companies.

This indicates that the impelling reasons for this class of borrowing may be grouped under six heads: Sickness; deaths in the family; to consolidate numerous small debts into one and to liquidate it by installments; to buy real estate or to meet interest or principal accounts on mortgages; to advance the situation of the family, or to expand a small business.

Under ordinary conditions all of these causes are economically justifiable. It is only when one goes to extremes that they become harmful. And the increasing difficulty of negotiating a loan under those conditions is rapidly eliminating that class. Enforced thrift now is working to undo the things that cultivated and encouraged thriftlessness in other days not only made possible but disastrously easy.—The Dayton Journal, September 5, 1923.

"BLUE SKY" LAW EFFECTIVE.

All Stock Salesmen Must Register with State Banking Department and Must Obtain Certificates

Although the State Securities Act went into effect Aug. 1st. the Stock Investigation Department of the Harrisburg Chamber of Commerce is urging prospective investors to investigate before they invest their funds in unlisted securities.

Commencing today all persons selling stock in Pennsylvania must register with the State Banking Department and file statements showing their mode of business. Certificates of eligibility to sell stock will be issued by the Banking Commissioner providing the salesmen qualify but such certificates will not be endorsements of stock, the local Chamber Committee points out.

Provision is made in the "blue sky" law prohibiting the use of Banking Department certificates as means of advertising or selling stock, and penalties are provided for violations of the statute. The law gives the Banking Commissioner and his deputies considerable power in revoking the licenses of stock salesmen operating contrary to the act or believed to be doing beyond the limitations.

While the new law has been designed to keep many wild cat propositions out of the state, it is expected that the provisions of the act will not stop the sale of all speculative securities, and people of moderate means who are considering investing in unlisted stocks will do well to investigate stock selling schemes, although salesmen have registered with the State Department. The stock investigation department of the Harrisburg Chamber of Commerce will investigate and secure reports on unlisted stocks free of charge, and also is planning to coöperate with the state authorities in seeing that violations of the new law are reported and prosecuted.—Harrisburg Patriot, August 1, 1923.

WHY—
THE SMALL LOAN BUSINESS?

"Lend and do good" is a biblical expression. The loan business is as old as organized society. It dates back beyond the time of Homer when the picture of an ox was imprinted on a piece of leather and called "Money."

Money lenders have ever drawn the barbed shafts of wit and ridicule from the time of the Greek philosophers to the present-day pungent paragraphers.

The province of the small money lender is certain and established. His business is essential to the community. He is a necessary element in our financial system.

Sixteen years ago Mrs. Russel Sage established a philanthropic endowment of Ten Million Dollars, the income from which was to be used for the betterment of social and living conditions in the United States. A survey was made by the Sage Foundation of the small-loan business. It was found that considerable proportion of borrowers were being exploited rather than relieved.

There was organized as part of the Sage Foundation the Division of Remedial Loans, whose mission was to conduct a campaign of public education with regard to the necessity of the small-loan business as a part of our fiscal machinery—to point out the evil operations of the prevailing commercial agencies; to procure intelligent, reasonable legislation, based on a desire to regulate rather than annihilate; to oppose passage of impractical laws; to encourage the organization of remedial loan societies that woul make loans at the lowest rate consisten with sound business principles and a reasonable but definitely limited retur upon capital.

Out of this came the "Uniform Smal Loan Law," now adopted by Indiana and 19 other states. This law permitted a flat interest rate of 3½% per month, without fees or other charges. A lower rate had proved insufficient to provide capital needed to meet the demand for loans; a combination of lower rate with additional fees had proved too susceptible of abuse. The new rate was based on definite information concerning the necessary cost of operation and was keyed to the business of the lender of average capital in the moderate-sized cities.

NINTH ANNUAL NATIONAL CONVENTION

It is doubtful if any convention ever held by the American Industrial Lenders' Association possessed the significance and potential value that were the leading characteristics of the Ninth Annual Convention held in Louisville, Kentucky, September 19th to 22d. There have, it is true, been conventions that were larger in point of attendance, but probably no other convention in the history of the Association has had an importance to the future of the organized small loan business that the convention of last month possessed.

The holding of the convention in Louisville, the metropolis of Kentucky and the Middle South, was in itself a bold stroke and one which it hardly seems reasonable to doubt was a wise move. For it was designed to bring to the very heart of hostile territory the advocates of a cleanly and fair system of operation for the money lending business and at the same time to bring the arguments for the legalization of a necessary business squarely to the attention of the thinking people of the State. If the attention given to the convention and its proceedings by the press and people of Kentucky is a fair criterion of the success of the purpose in holding it in that city, it is fair to assume that the meeting has advanced the cause of regulated and legalized money lending not only in Kentucky but in the South as well.

The animating motive in the selection of Louisville as the meeting place for the convention was expressed concisely by National Chairman in his response to the welcoming addresses at the opening session, when he said:

"Kentucky, 'we are here,' several hundred strong, to tell you who we are and what we are. We are here to tell you about the aims and purposes of this Association. We are here to tell you what has been accomplished in the small loan field in the States all around you. We want to tell you how conditions have improved, both for the borrower and for the lender, to tell you how the old-time evils in the business have been overcome and eliminated. We want to tell you about the goodness of the Uniform Small Loan Law and why we believe in it. We want you to know what business men and the general public think about the way we conduct our business. We want you to know what State officials, who administer the laws under which we operate, think about us."

Two circumstances served to place the Louisville convention high among the number held by the Association. These were the distinguished character of several of the speakers, men prominent in the official, legal and educational world; and the presence at one of the important sessions of the convention of some of the most prominent people in the city, persons who have no connections or affiliations with the small loan business and who, indeed, had no acquaintance with its operations, but who were present to learn the facts about it.

OCT 5 1923

C. G. MUELLER.
National Chairman Elect.

Though an introduction seems superfluous a word about the new National Chairman Charles G. Mueller, Philadelphia, may not be out of place at this time.

A pioneer in state and national association work since 1916, having served as National Secretary, National Chairman and Secretary and Vice-Chairman of the Pennsylvania Association besides being chairman of the National Membership Committee for one year and written several master papers on industrial financing, "Doc," as he is familiarly known to his friends, presides over the Community Finance Service, incorporated one of the newer national industrial loan systems embracing some twenty-five offices in most of the principal eastern and middle western cities. His practical experience dates back twenty-five years although yet a young man and includes training with and supervision of some of the older successful industrial finance institutions. His record stands for cleanliness and efficiency. The A. I. L. A. is fortunate in being able to reclaim him for another year's service as its directing and presiding officer.

It was apparent from the outset that the sentiments of hostility to regulation of the small loan business that have kept Kentucky outside the roster of States in which the business has been legalized and placed on a plane of fairness to lender and borrowers alike are entertained for the most part by men and interests who are actuated by selfish considerations, and that these sentiments are not generally shared by men and women of distinction and unquestioned public spirit. This statement is amply substantiated by the very frank utterances of some of the most distinguished citizens of Kentucky, notably Dr. Frank L. McVey, president of the University of Kentucky, and Matt J. Holt, former attorney for the Legal Aid Society, who made it clear that they regarded the present laws under which the business of money lending is conducted in Kentucky as obsolete and inequitable.

Whatever else the convention accomplished of good, and it cannot have failed to have done this in ample measure, it was the consensus of those attending it that it had served to place before the people of Kentucky in a new and advantageous light the small loan business and that it may conceivably be the leaven of a new and better public opinion concerning it, out of which may eventuate legislation that will abolish old evils and establish the business on a legitimate plane.

The convention was formally called to order by National Chairman Rutherford Wednesday morning, September 19th, in the auditorium of the Seelbach Hotel. Mr. Rutherford introduced Dr. E. L. Powell, pastor of the First Christian Church of Louisville, who pronounced the invocation.

The address of welcome to the delegates was delivered by Huston Quin, Mayor of Louisville, who said that Louisville greeted them with everything implied in the welcome of Kentucky. After referring to the beauty of Louisville and Kentucky, the birth place of Lincoln and Clay, he said that the coming of the convention would be a distinct help to Louisville, whose citizens welcome its delegates because of the things they represent. In no other business, he said, had there been such great changes wrought, changes due to the principles held by the men present at this convention, who had put it on a business basis, and he quoted the designation applied to the small loans business by the Court of Appeals as a "useful business," adding his own definition of it as a sort of "junior bank."

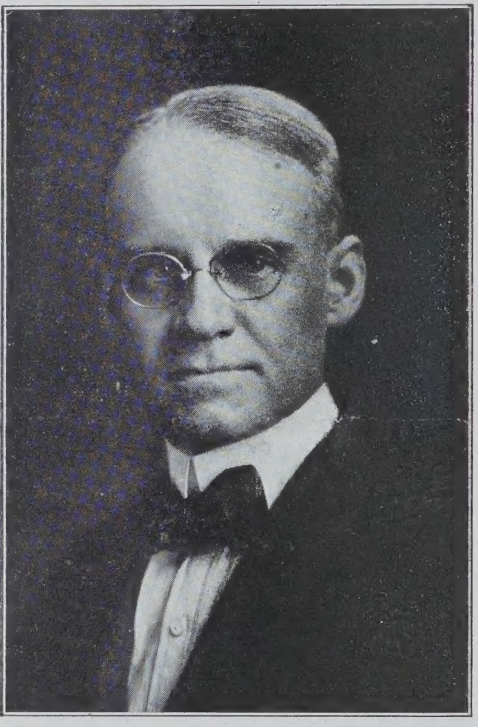
The small loans business, he declared, was an aid to humanity, and he counted it as a great asset to have the legitimate lenders in the city. Because they had not feared to put a wholesome spirit in their business it had been successful, he said and the men and women without credit had found in them real friends. If the business continued to make progress at the same rate as had been made in the last ten years, he predicted that the Association would be one of the greatest organizations in the country.



R. M. Rutherford.
Retiring National Chairman.

Mayor Quin's address was delivered in a tone of friendly informality and with earnestness, frequently interspersed with humorous anecdotes and illustrations.

R. F. Vaughan, a leading member of the bar in Louisville, delivered the address of welcome in behalf of the local members of the Association. Mr. Vaughan frankly criticized the attitude of Kentucky toward legislation which would legitimatize the money lending business in the State, and he said that in his opinion it had not deserved to have the convention held within its borders because of this attitude. Discussing the reasons for this attitude, he said that in the cities it could be explained by the selfishness of those men in the business whose high rates would be done away with, and in the country districts, where there is no industrial population, there is no proper understanding of the problems of financing industrial workers and of the need for remedial legislation.

The response to the addresses of welcome was made by National Chairma Robert M. Rutherford, of New York, former resident of Louisville. When was first suggested that the conventio be held in Kentucky, Mr. Rutherfor said, the idea did not strongly appeal t him, because the state has no associatio of lenders and a convention of this kin had never been attempted in a stat where the small loan business had n been legalized. Kentucky, he declare was one of the states in which the publi conscience did not seem to have bee awakened to a realization that the ma who works for wages should have an must have places where he can borro small sums to meet his emergencie Kentucky, he said, had also failed to real ize the fact that the small loan busines cannot be conducted at banking rates, an if people who need small loans are to b accommodated at reasonable rates, it mus be made possible for lenders to make good commercial profit on the money in vested. Otherwise, said Mr. Rutherfor sufficient capital will not be attracted t meet the legitimate demand and the busi ness will be conducted, in the main, b those who are ready to extract the highes tribute the borrower in his extremity i willing to pay.

"But the small loan business is bein conducted in Kentucky," said M Rutherford. "It is being conducte openly as well as otherwise. Your cit and telephone directories carry long list of names in the business; and this take no account of those who operate unde cover; and of the foremen and super intendents of manufacturing plants wh may conduct a 'vest pocket' business wit the men under them. The business is no regulated or supervised in any way, an there is no limit to the rate that may b charged."

Nevertheless, he continued, from th cordial reception accorded the conventio delegates by those in Kentucky who de sire to see the business receive the sam recognition it has received in other States he felt sure that no mistake had bee made in holding the convention in Louisville.

"So, Kentucky, 'we are here,'" h added. "We are here several hundre strong, to tell you who we are and wha we are. We are here to tell you abou the aims and purposes of this Association We are here to tell you what has bee accomplished in the small loan field i the States all around you. We want t tell you how conditions have improved both for the borrower and for the lender to tell you how the old time evils in the business have been overcome and eliminated. We want to tell you about the goodness of the Uniform Small Loa Law and why we believe in it. We want you to know what business men and the general public think about the way we conduct our business. We want you to know what State officials, who administer the laws under which we operate, think of us.

"We believe that our business is entitled to as much recognition and protection as the business of those who supply the other necessities of life, and we therefore ask Kentucky to give to this necessary business the same privileges that we enjoyed in many States of our Union, and to throw around it the necessary restrictions."

The rest of the morning session was given over to the transaction of the routine business of the convention, which included the reports of standing committees and of the secretary.

Tate J. Harrison, chairman of the Membership Committee, reported on the results of a drive for new members in the Association, which was in effect a recital of the trials and tribulations of the chairman of a committee.

Charles H. Watts, chairman of the Committee on Legislation, gave a resume of the year's work in this field. There were 12 legislatures in session and a total of 92 measures bearing on small loan legislations were introduced before them, of which one was enacted into law. This was in Rhode Island.

There were no formal reports submitted by the Chairman of the Law, Publicity and Finance Committees. Secretary Kehr read a letter from F. R. Hubachek, chairman of the Law Committee, regretting his absence from the convention and stating that he had no report to submit. W. P. Woll, chairman of the Finance Committee, stated that his report was covered in those of the Treasurer and Auditing Committee, but he read a resolution, which he said he would later formally introduce, reducing the membership dues in the Association.

The report of the Treasurer and of the Auditing Committee was read, showing the following financial condition of the Association.

Secretary Kehr stated that he had no formal report to make, but gave the membership of the Association as 402 in twenty states. He read a communication from the Director of the United States Bureau of the Census in which the request was made for information as to the gross amount of business done by the members of the Association. Mr. Kehr explained that the Bureau was the official clearing house of official information as to the extent of business operations in the United States and that this information, which was furnished voluntarily, was published by the Bureau at stated intervals. The interest of the Bureau in the small loan business was to be regarded, he said, as evidence of the importance attached to the business by the Bureau and because of this interest an invitation had been extended to Mr. Steuart, director of the Bureau, to attend the convention or to assign one of his staff to attend it.

Before the adjournment of the morning session National Chairman Rutherford appointed a nominating committee, consisting of the vice-chairman from each state represented, with Alan K. Dolliver, of New Haven, as chairman.

While the convention was in session the morning the ladies who attended the convention as guests were taken for a sight-seeing trip about the city, in charge of C. E. Reed, of Louisville, vice-chairman for the unorganized states, and in charge of the local arrangements.

The morning session had been a purely internal meeting, devoted to the business of the convention and, aside from the welcoming addresses, participated in only by members of the Association. The greatest interests of the day, however, centered in the luncheon, to which about seventy-five representative men and women of Louisville had been invited. The luncheon was held in the Rathskeller of the Seelbach Hotel at 12:15 Wednesday afternoon and the delegates and their guests practically filled the large dining room.

After the luncheon a programme of brief talks by noted speakers explanatory of the small loan business and the need for state regulation of it was carried out. Charles H. Watts, of Philadelphia, who introduced the speakers, said that the Uniform Small Loan Law was practicable in Kentucky, and the work for it should go on despite the fact that it had been lost three times. He advised the local men to coöperate with the welfare leagues.

Dr. Louis N. Robinson, formerly of the Chair of Economics of Swarthmore College, was introduced to speak instead of Walter S. Hilborn, Acting Director of the Division of Remedial Loans, of the Russell Sage Foundation, who was to have spoken on "The Year's Progress and the Uniform Law," but who was unable to be absent from New York at that time because of press of other business.

Dr. Robinson, who also is connected with the Russell Sage Foundation in conducting for it a survey of the small loan business in this country, in his talk sketched the origin of the Foundation, and the purposes for which it exists. He said that the Foundation some years ago, realizing that the financing of necessitous borrowers was a necessity, had worked in the direction of the formation of remedial loan agencies, but had soon recognized these were inadequate to meet the demands and that the business of financing persons in emergencies was the function of business organized for this purpose. The drafting of the uniform small loan law, which established a supervision by the state over the small loan business and fixed a maximum rate of interest which could be charged for such loans, was the outgrowth of this conviction. While at first blush this maximum rate —3½ per cent a month—seemed too high, Dr. Robinson said that it was low when compared to the rates charged by lenders in the old era of unlicensed and unregulated lending and with the rates charged even now by lenders in states where the business is not regulated.

Of the class of persons who borrow in small amounts, he said that the great majority of them were worthy persons, in need of and deserving of financial aid, and the small loan business was a necessary business extending credit to a class who could have no recourse to commercial banks and other sources of credit available to those in more fortunate circumstances.

The Uniform Law, he stated, had legalized the lending business and made it possible to be conducted openly and without cause for shame. It has reduced the interest rate charged on small loans and has made the men engaged in it take a greater pride in it. A campaign of education is necessary, he said, to make the law understood and to bring about its enactment in those states where the business of money lending is still in the hands of men who are extortionate and unfair in their practices. Dr. Robinson said that he had discussed the Uniform Law with a great many of the State superintendents charged with its administration in those states where it is in effect and that they regarded it as a great blessing.

Judge J. S. Baldwin, of Chicago, formerly of the Department of Trade and Commerce of Illinois, spoke in place of William A. Murphy, until recently Director of the Department of Trade and Commerce, who was unable to be present.

Judge Baldwin spoke as one who had first hand knowledge of the practical workings of the Uniform Small Loan

Law, for it was to the Department of Trade and Commerce, with which he was then connected, that the law when enacted in Illinois was assigned for administration. He outlined the provisions of this law and said that, because of a flagrant example of extortion which had come under his notice as a practicing attorney years before, he determined that he would interpret it as strictly as possible against the lenders.

The case of extortion related by Judge Baldwin was that of a borrower in the days before the era of state regulation who had made a loan for $400, of which he actually received $300, and on which in the course of a year through renewals, fees, fines, interest, etc., he had paid $1,200, and still owed $2,400, although he had never received but $300.

His experience with the law, Judge Baldwin said, led him to commend it. The rate, which was the point at which so many well-meaning persons stuck, was a minor consideration, he said, it would regulate itself once you got your hands on the business itself. If the rate seemed unduly high, he said, it should be considered that the men in the small loan business loaned their own capital, unlike the banks which lend the money of their depositors. This, he said, would account for the difference in the interest rate charged by banks and lenders.

Explaining the provision of the Uniform Law which had served to rid the business of many evils, he said that it permitted of no commissions, no fees, no compounding of interest, no pyramiding, no interest collected in advance, and penalized violation of its essential provisions by voiding the loan.

He gave the results of a questionnaire sent out by the Department in 1919, which developed that there was $5,000,000 invested in the small loan business in Illinois, and that the average interest charged on unpaid balances of small loans in that state was between 3 and 3½ per cent a month, as against an average interest rate of ten per cent a month prior to the enactment of the law. Competition, he stated, had cut down the allowable interest charge. The rate of 3½ per cent a month allowed under th eUniform Law, was not 42 per cent a year, as is commonly figured, but really amounts to about 22 per cent, which is about the usual margin of profit on retail merchants' transactions.

Judge Baldwin closed his address with an impressive plea for the enactment of the Uniform Law in Kentucky, which he declared would end the era of "money bootlegging" in the State by bringing the transactions between borrower and lender out from the darkness and secrecy of illicit operations into the open, and which would help to lift the unfortunate and necessitous out of the slough of despondency and to make better citizens of them.

Matt J. Holt, former attorney for the Legal Aid Society of Louisville, told of the need for more knowledge on the part of the general public about the business of small loans and of the good reasons for the existence of this business.

He said that he had recently acquired a new viewpoint of the small loan business through a better acquaintance with facts about it, among them being that the legitimate lenders of the country annually lend some $150,000,000 to about 2,000,000 necessitous borrowers and that only 15 per cent of the adult population of the country possesses credit accommodations at commercial banks. Necessarily, he concluded, 85 per cent of the population in any great emergency requiring credit must have recourse to men who make small loans. He referred to the handicap under which lenders in Kentucky who wish to make loans at a low rate of interest are put because of the absence of any law to curb the rapacity and greed of those lenders who charge extortionate rates of interest. The business of money lending, he said, is conducted in this State under the same laws as 100 years ago, and Rome 2,400 years ago had better laws for the protection of the poor claimant than now exist in Kentucky.

The maximum rate allowed by the uniform law at first blush seemed exorbitant he said, but the fact that the risks in such loans are enormous, that they are made on no stable or liquid security and that investigation of the risk is impracticable, justify a much higher rate of interest than it is permitted banks to charge on gilt-edged security. The enactment of the uniform law in Kentucky, he asserted, would be greatly better than the present evasion of the law. He described the operation of courts of small claims in other States, which he commended as beneficial to the poor plaintiff and defendant. Selfishness, he declared, stood in the way of the enactment of the uniform law in Kentucky, and the opposition to it was by the high rate lenders.

Mr. Holt's address was the closing one of a most interesting day, in which every speaker had held the close attention of his hearers. The luncheon and the addresses took up the greater part of the afternoon, for the latter part of which a two-hour motor drive in and about Louisville had been scheduled. The trip started at 4 o'clock from the Seelbach Hotel, about fifty cars having been provided for the excursion. About 200 of the delegates and guests of the convention went on the motor excursion and were taken through the city's principal streets and boulevards, to the parks and places of historical interest, and the diversion was thoroughly enjoyed by those who took part in it.

Dancing was on the programme for Wednesday night, those who still indulged in this form of exercise—and there were many of them—enjoying themselves on the Seelbach Auditorium floor from eight o'clock until midnight. For those who did not wish to attend the dance there was an informal business meeting for the discussion of subjects of interest to those in charge of the practical operation of offices.

Thursday morning's session was called to order, with National Chairman Rutherford presiding. In calling the meeting to order Mr. Rutherford used a gavel presented for the occasion by the Louisville Convention Publicity League, which he explained was made from a tree on the farm in Kentucky which was the birthplace of Abraham Lincoln.

Secretary Kehr read a letter received from Walter S. Hilborn, of New York, regretting his inability to be present to deliver his prepared address before the convention, and enclosing a copy of the address for the minutes of the convention.

The first paper read at this session was that of Will Pente, of Chicago, on "Advertising the Small Loan Business." Referring to the ignorance of the general public about the small loan business, Mr. Pente said that advertising would help to get the public to view the business as fairly as banking or any other worth while business. The public, he said, was ready for the Universal Bank, and he believed that in time banks may be forced to open departments for the making of small loans. The Union Bank, of Chicago, he said, had already taken a step in this direction.

The lenders' commodity, Mr. Pente said, was not so much money as it was service. He defined the advertising manager as a super-salesman and said that an analysis of "turn-downs" would indicate that either the individual advertising is at fault or the choice of mediums has been wrong. He estimated that 66,000 people in Chicago were on lenders' books, which he believed was far from the saturation point. Discussing the amount of money that should be appropriated for advertising, he said that advertising men advised 3 per cent of the gross sales for this purpose. He advised against sole reliance on the want ad pages, saying that by advertising otherwise a new class of borrowers would be appealed to. He advised supplementing newspaper advertising by the use of direct sales media, such as folders and booklets, street car cards and blotters. The use of these he said, would develop 'consumers' acceptance."

How the Rhode Island legislature last winter unanimously passed a law regulating the small loan business was described by Arthur L. Wick of Philadelphia in his address. Mr. Wick briefly ascribed the success of the legislation to "a good bill and hard work."

"I might also say that our campaign was successful," Mr. Wick added, "because after proper education the people of Rhode Island saw the goodness of our bill and they wanted it to become a law. It was no easy matter in the beginning to assure these people that our bill was really constructive. They had to be shown its true value. This is where the need of education comes in."

Mr. Wick described the extraordinary political conditions that prevailed in Rhode Island at the time the bill was passed, the Legislature being almost equally divided between the Democrats and Republicans, with a Republican majority of two each in the House and Senate.

The Rhode Island bill was fashioned after the Uniform Small Loan Law originally drafted by the Russell Sage Foundation, and was made to conform with the constitution and practice of Rhode Island. It was drawn up by the best legal talent in New England and after thorough study and investigation it was endorsed by the leading civic bodies of the State as well as by some of the most prominent churchmen and officials in Rhode Island, among the latter being the State Banking Commissioner.

Mr. Wick described the various steps in the campaign by which the public was instructed through the press as to the various features of the bill, what it was intended to accomplish and how, and told of the great interest that was manifested in the measure as shown by the attendance at the public hearings on it before Senate and House Committees. Commenting on what makes for success in a legislative campaign, Mr. Wick said:

"Granting that your bill is all that it should be and an improvement over the law in the states in which you wish to legislate, the next thing in order is to have the legislators, state officials and the citizens of the state see it the same as you do. You cannot do this by any underground method or secret passage. It pays to be open and above board and hide nothing and it pays to lay your cards on the table. If your men do not at first see the goodness of your bill they must be educated up to it. This is another step toward a beginning and if you are unable to convince them that your bill will do all that is required of it, you might just as well give up the idea of passing your law in that particular State at that particular time, because it is really the citizens of the State in which you wish to legislate that will pass or kill your bill."

Mr. Wick said that it was his conclusion that the Uniform Small Loan bill is the best bill that has ever been enacted and that, until something better is devised, it should be supported by industrial lenders and every effort made to educate the public upon its merits.

Because of the lateness of the hour at which the morning session convened and the length of the programme, other set addresses on the programme for this session were put over until the afternoon and the session adjourned.

The afternoon session was called to order with Mr. L. T. Baker, of Chicago, in the chair. Alan K. Dolliver, of New Haven, Conn., spoke on "Should Small Loan Companies Be Permitted to Receive Savings and Deposits?" Mr. Dolliver held that to do so would sound the death knell of the industrial lender as such.

The question, he said, should be viewed in its possibilities for benefit to the lender, and he believed that it would be inadvisable to include this among the functions of the small loan business.

He did not believe that any bank examiner would sanction the making of loans with depositors' money on unstable and insecure small loans, unbacked by any collateral, and the restriction that would necessarily follow would result in cutting down the volume of small loan business and hence in curtailing its service to that part of the population which have no banking facilities.

Mr. Dolliver also deprecated suggestions for the merger of the small loan business with commercial banks, the small loan business to be run as a department of the bank. He believed that the outcome would be that the small loan department would become a side line, or adjunct, of the bank, carried along by the profits of banking operations. The costs of operation of small loans being greater than those of banking, he said, it would be natural that the banks would give the greater attention to that department in which the profits were greater and this would be obviously to the detriment of the small loan business and to the quality and extent of its service.

He advocated maintaining the small loan business as a specialized business, and believed that in this way lowered rates, reduced operating costs and ratio of losses and increased volume of business would be brought about.

In the discussion which followed Mr. Dolliver's paper, Col. D. H. Pond, of Cleveland, agreed with Mr. Dolliver that the answer to the question propounded by his address should be "No," giving the experience of his own institution which, he said, has been receiving deposits. He thought that this was too unstable a method of capitalizing a lending business and pointed out that whenever a lending company does receive deposits it must satisfy the State Banking Department and its depositors that it has sufficient assets back of its deposits to safeguard the money of its clients.

Mr. F. E. Stroup, of Grand Rapids, told of his company's method of enlisting outside capital by the issuance of preferred stock redeemable after a year on sixty days' notice, but said that he would not want a great deal of this sort of financing. Mr. T. R. Schoonover, of Lima, Ohio, said that he believed that the receiving of deposits was too expensive a way of raising money and saw no practical advantage in it. Mr. J. H. Aufderheide, of Indianapolis, read from a clipping to show that a bank actually operated at a loss of seventy cents on a balance of $300, and believed that this was sufficient evidence that the small loan business could not profitably be operated on a capital consisting of small deposits.

George W. Farrington, of Indianapolis, in his paper on "Educational Publicity" made a plea for collective advertising of the small loan business, giving the experience of the Indiana State Association in this field. Mr. Farrington's address was interspersed with humorous anecdotes and stories which kept his hearers in good humor throughout his talk.

The rapid and radical change in the business, Mr. Farrington said, have forged ahead of public knowledge so speedily that the average citizen scarcely knows that anything has happened. For this reason he believed that the education of the public through advertising is incumbent upon the Association.

"The chief object of this brand of advertising," Mr. Farrington stated, "is to enlighten the general public and to popularize the small loan business. It is up to us to inform the people what we have and how they may use it. Since the rates are uniform, the service and terms almost identical, we all desire to impart the same message. Granting this to be true, the industrial loan business better than any other can be advertised collectively.

Mr. Farrington mentioned several instances where the effectiveness of coöperative advertising had been proven in other lines of business, notably the California Fruit Growers' Association.

Mr. Rutherford resumed the chair and called upon R. C. Clark of Indianapolis, who spoke on the "Indiana Publicity Campaign," Mr. Clark stressed the value of advertising in making known to the public the real character of the money lending business.

He told of the advertising campaign conducted by the Indiana Industrial Lenders' Association as a way of letting the people of that state "know that the loan business is now conducted in a well regulated manner, by business men who are devoting their sincere efforts and much capital to the end that men and women of Indiana might borrow money at a fair rate when they most needed it."

"If you have a product or service and this product or service is of value to the public tell them about it," Mr. Clark advised. "If the services of an industrial lender really are of true value to the citizens of a community, tell them about it. If there has been a decided change in the methods of doing business in the small loan field, then let the public know about it."

Mr. Clark said the first suggestion for the Indiana campaign was made more than five years ago, finally taking shape early this year. He said that he had first suggested a national campaign, and he now believed that it will not be long until the wisdom of that idea is realized.

At the conclusion of his address he read a few of the advertisements he considered particularly effective that were used in the Indiana campaign.

The essential difference between the commercial bank and a money lending business was explained by P. L. Alberse, of Paterson, N. J., in his paper "Banking vs. Money Lending." The banker, Mr. Alberse explained, can multiply his resources and thus aid in the development of trade in his community, while the industrial lender does not possess this power but is obliged to make his investments from his own funds. Loans are made by him to the ordinary citizen who has no bankable security to finance him in an emergency such as sickness, unemployment, the education of the children or the necessity of maintaining the practice of making purchases for cash only.

Mr. Alberse showed how the public can get the wrong impression concerning the popular terms of interest and profit, terms which are readily confused. The banker can turn a low rate of interest into a high rate of profit to himself, while the industrial lender, who apparently receives a high rate of interest, in reality receives but a low rate of profit on his investment. Several applicable instances served to illustrate the point.

A retail grocer, Mr. Alberse said, who discounts his bill every 10 days at 2%, is receiving 72% per year on this one item alone. A huckster, too, who loans his truck at a cost of $100, making a gross profit of $20 per day, is really earning 600%, on that part of his investment.

For these and similar reasons, it has been found necessary to have special interest laws for special lines of business. Laws for the banks, the building and loan associations, small or industrial lenders, automobile finance companies, pawn brokers and others, cannot come under one head. There is too vast a difference in their operation.

Mr. Alberse further urged that each special class of finance be conducted strictly within its limit. Small loans should be limited to the amount allowed by law; and no over-loans should be made under the acceptance of endorsements or otherwise. In order to most satisfactorily fill his place the industrial lender should depend exclusively on the security, moral character, and earning power of the borrower. This mode of lending, he said, will work in harmony with the commercial banker, and those operating under other special laws.

A. R. Dana of Chicago addressed the convention on "What Constitutes Good Will," declaring that more than anything else it makes for the success of a business, and particularly of a business of the character of money lending. He outlined the ways in which good will might be developed particularizing a connection with civic bodies as being valuable in this respect. The greatest contributing cause of good will, he said, was the manner in which clients are treated by the lenders. Good and fair treatment, he declared, would insure that they will return when again in need of financing and furthermore, that they will give a good report of their own experience to others. Mr. Dana emphasized the value of enthusiasm in the conduct of a small loan business, saying that nothing great was ever accomplished without it. The destiny of the small loan business, he said, was with the lenders themselves and it would be accomplished largely through the good will engendered by them in the conduct of their business.

That the question must eventually be considered by the National Association and the justice of the 3½ per cent rate must be defended, was the conclusion of F. B. Merritt, of New Brunswick, New Jersey, in his address on "What Rate Should Be Charged on Endorsed Note Loans."

Significant figures were given by B. E. Henderson, of Chicago, in his address "Does it Pay to be Too Efficient in Collections?" Discussing efficiency of collections, Mr. Henderson contended that it was false efficiency to strive to get the last cent of profit out of business by using unethical methods in making and collecting loans.

Mr. Henderson gave the results of a questionnaire sent out by his company to its branches in which many thousands of loans had been made. The replies showed, he stated, that in 1922 there were but eight foreclosures in the entire business conducted by the company, and these only in cases where the borrower had abandoned the security. They had 132 enforced collections in the same period, that is in cases where advantage was taken by the company of some legal right to obtain payment; and had 67 cases where the security or part of it was voluntarily turned over by the borrower for sale. In that same year Mr. Henderson said, 21 per cent of all their loans were in amounts up to and including $50; 45 per cent were in sums from $50 to $100; or 65 per cent of all loans made were in amounts not in excess of $100.

Because of the lateness of the hour and to give the delegates an opportunity to prepare for the annual dinner, the address by Charles R. Napier, of Chicago, which was on the program for Thursday afternoon's session, was put over until Friday morning, and the session was adjourned.

The program of addresses at the annual dinner Friday night was really a symposium of expert sociological opinion on the necessity of industrial lending, as the only addresses made during the evening were by three university doctors distinguished in the field of sociology and economics.

The dinner was held at eight o'clock in the Rathskeller of the Seelbach Hotel, the Association members and their guests filling the spacious room. During the dinner the company was entertained by numbers given by the International Novelty Orchestra and by Miss Fanny May Baldridge, of Louisville, whose negro songs and impersonations of negro characters were enthusiastically received by her audience. At each plate was placed a booklet handsomely illustrated with pictures of an old Kentucky homestead and of Stephen C. Foster, Kentucky's famous song writer, containing the words and music of Foster's three best known songs. Led by Miss Baldridge, the diners joined in the chorus of "My Old Kentucky Home," "Old Folks at Home" and "Old Black Joe." The songs were sung with so much zest that Mr. Rutherford suggested that the chorus of "Old Black Joe" be repeated, and this was done as the diners stood.

Chairman Rutherford presided at the dinner as toastmaster and in introducing the first speaker, Dr. Frank L. McVey, president of the University of Kentucky, he expressed his great pleasure at being "back home" in Kentucky on this occasion, and having the privilege of introducing as the after-dinner speakers three eminent sociologists.

Dr. McVey's address, "Small Loans As An Industrial Factor," was an earnest and scholarly argument for the right of industrial workers to legislation that will give them an economic independence. Men in the small loan business, he said, may make it possible for craftsmen to revive the trades they learned in Europe and become contented producers instead of industrial cogwheels.

"The slowness of the development of legislation to meet the needs of the fast progressing business world is one of the main causes of unrest in America today," Dr. McVey declared. "An example of the long period it takes to work out legislation in the field of industry is the passage of the Interstate Commerce Act. This was introduced first to the public in the early '60's, but it did not become law until twenty-five years later. Legislation against the trusts first made its appearance in 1871. The Sherman Act was not passed until 1890. This long delay in the passage of laws constructive to business is, under the present conditions, necessary. I hope that something will be done in the field of social legislation. This will do much to check the spirit of dissatisfaction among the working people and the small business men.

"Industrial conditions in America today are approaching the same plane as those in Europe prior to the World War. A striking similarity is seen in the host of problems confronting the United States Government to-day, and those which disturbed Europe before the conflict. When this nation was founded, the pioneer American went into the woods and provided all his needs. But in the present day, the man who has little capital and must provide financial independence for himself and his family must turn to some great established industry and dissolve himself into its personnel in order to attain an independent position.

"America has developed every resource, every vast store of material, with the exception of the human factor in industry. The meeting of this problem will put an end to the unrest in the middle classes and settle social conditions.

"In their mad rush for development the American people have lost sight of many of the great fundamentals upon which this nation was built. Their greatest loss is thrift. No one is interested in saving. This is partly due to no provision for the working man in the banking system in this country. Europe has taken steps to help the working man become better acquainted with the bank, but in America the man who cannot give substantial collateral finds it hard to borrow money from a bank."

The industrial lender, Dr. McVey said, could be an effective element in encouraging thrift, by fostering small savings to make small investments which will, in turn, become productive enterprises on an individual basis, and thus he can clear the current of economic progress of much of the festering unrest which threatens it

"The craftsman and skilled workman should have a chance to go into business for himself," he continued. "To do this he must have capital. Few States have regulation of the loan business, with the result that in many instances unfair loan men have created distrust of the business among working men because of the excessive percentage they demand on loans. Regulate all banking, public and private, through legislation. This is surely coming, and it is every man's duty to hasten the day when this is brought about."

The great importance and necessity of research in the proper adjustment of the lending business to modern conditions, economic and social, was emphasized by Dr. Earle Edward Eubank, head of the Department of Social Science, University of Cincinnati, in his address on "Small Loans and Social Research."

"Thorough research in the field of small loans is necessary to this business," he said. "The last decade and a half has shown more progress and rational grasp of fundamentals in dealing with this problem than all the previous centuries during which the need has been present.

"That this is the case is due in a large measure to the fact that scientific research has made a beginning at blazing the trail. It is reasonable to suppose that further progress also must be made upon further accurate knowledge. Research should therefore be welcomed by such a body as this and systematic provision should be made for its continuance.

"Getting rid of the loan shark is no longer the problem of the economic scientist. The problem now is to meet the need for small loans by methods akin to those employed by the big bankers."

"A Year's Progress in the Survey of the Small Loan Business" was the subject of the next speaker, Dr. Louis N. Robinson, who is engaged in a nation wide study of this field under the auspices of the Russel Sage Foundation.

Dr. Robinson briefly outlined the purposes of the survey, which is in line with a scientific consideration of the entire business of money lending, and went at some length into the early history of money lending and the causes which make it a necessary and useful business. He told of the long fight by well meaning men and women against the evils and oppressions of unregulated lending and how success in their efforts was finally attained by the drafting and enactment of a workable and scientific law to regulate and supervise the business by the State.

"Three and one-half per cent a month does not make the same appeal that it did in the days when the crusade against loan sharks was in progress," said Dr. Robinson. "The small loan business has reached a stage where it is looked upon with a fair view of respectability. Legalization of the small loan business at a livable rate will be a great benefit to the business."

Friday morning's session was called to order by National Chairman Rutherford who introduced the first speaker, Charles R. Napier, of Chicago, who delivered an address on "Reputation," Mr. Napier's address was a scholarly and eloquent discourse on the essential nature of reputation, which he defined as being "What the world thinks we are." The world has given the loan business a bad reputation based on its practices of old, and he declared that it was a duty incumbent on the reputable men engaged in the small loan business to defend it. He referred to the old practice of high pressure collections which had slowly degraded an ancient business, and said that the change for the better in Illinois began fifteen years ago in development of a conscience in the business.

This conscience in business he said constituted a "business morality" and had its value. A rising tide of understanding of and respect for the small loan business had followed upon the enactment of the Uniform Small Loan Law, he said, and he cited conditions in Illinois to substantiate this statement.

Upon the conclusion of Mr. Napier's address Chairman Rutherford called upon Mr. Elmer Johnson, in charge of the Loan Division of the State Bank Department of Indiana, who said that he had never heard a complaint against any member of the Indiana Lenders' Association and that he had never received from any other single line of business the same amount of coöperation that he has received from the lenders of Indiana.

A discussion of office methods, practices and appliances was on the regular order of the program for Friday morning and Mr. E. F. Moore, of Philadelphia, the first speaker, described the one-card system used in his office, which prompted many questions from other delegates. The discussion was participated in by Mr. Farrington, of Indianapolis, Mr. Moss, of Philadelphia; Mr. Miller, of Illinois; Mr. Rose, of Chicago; Mr. Baker, of Chicago; Mr Young, of Philadelphia; Mr. Clupper, of Marion, Ind.; Mr. Watts, of Philadelphia; Mr. Henderson, of Chicago; and Mr. Merritt, of New Brunswick, New Jersey.

At the close of this discussion Mr. Woll, chairman of the Committee on Finance, reported that $2,800 had been contributed for the expenses of holding the annual convention by the National Association, the State Associations and the three local offices of Louisville. Mr. Reed, in charge of the local arrangements, then read a report itemizing the expenditures and upon motion of Mr. Vogel of New Jersey a vote of thanks was given Mr. Reed by the convention.

Mr. Woll then offered a resolution providing for a reduction in the annual membership dues in the National Association to $10 a year for each office, to be paid by the treasurer of each State Association. Mr. Woll explained that he accepted full responsibility for the resolution, and said that while adoption would mean a substantial reduction in the revenues of the Association, its expenditures could be curtailed and the money for the annual conventions could be obtained through voluntary contributions.

The introduction of the resolution caused the most prolonged and spirited debate of the entire convention, in which practically every member of the Association in attendance took part. It was obvious that while many members appreciated the sincerity and earnestness of Mr. Woll's motive in offering the resolution, there was a grave doubt on the part of most of the members of the wisdom of reducing the revenues of the Association.

Mr. Vogel raised the point of its effect on the expenditures of the Association and Mr. Hartz of Indianapolis opposed the suggestion of voluntary contributions to defray the cost of holding the annual conventions. Mr. Woll conceded that the adoption of the resolution would mean the discontinuance of the Lenders News, but was of the opinion that the publication could be dispensed with. Secretary Kehr gave a summary of the annual receipts and expenditures of the Association. Mr. Stratton of Indiana declared against the resolution, favored continuing the News and said that the present membership dues were fair. Treasurer Zumpfe and Mr. Merritt also spoke briefly against the resolution and Mr. Gardner moved that it be laid on the table and the motion was carried.

Judge Dyer, of Columbus, held that the chair's interpretation of Article 19 of the constitution, requiring notice in advance of the introduction of a resolution was erroneous, in this particular, as it would prevent the introduction of any amendment to a resolution which had been offered in accordance with the requirements of this article of the constitution. On motion Mr. Woll's resolution was then taken from the table to be considered at the afternoon session, and adjournment of the morning session was taken.

Discussion of Mr. Woll's resolution for reduction of membership dues was resumed at this session when Mr. Tyson introduced a resolution to change the wording of the article in the Constitution relating to membership dues, to make it read "twenty-five cents on the average loan balance."

The debate upon this amendment became so involved and complicated that it threatened to tie the session up hopelessly in a parliamentary tangle and on motion of Mr. Harbison of Chicago the question of the proper parliamentary procedure was referred to a committee of lawyers present. Chairman Rutherford named Messrs. Dyer, Napier, Anderson, Thompson and Hubachek as members of this committee and the debate halted while they conferred.

In the interim the Nominating Committee reported the following nominations: Dr. Charles G. Mueller, National Chairman, 305 Flanders Building, Philadelphia, Pa.; W. A. Zumpfe, National Treasurer, 701 Odd Fellows Building, Indianapolis; G. W. Kehr, National Secretary, 204 Chestnut Street, Harrisburg, Pa.

Standing Committee Chairmen.

Auditing—W. E. Pool, Mass.
Finance—W. P. Woll, Chicago.
Law—F. R. Hubachek, Minneapolis.
Legislation—C. H. Watts, Philadelphia.
Membership—T. J. Harrison, Waterloo, Ia.
Publicity—R. F. Hartz, Ind.

The choice of the Nominating Committee was unanimously ratified by the Convention and in motion the Secretary was instructed to cast the ballot of the convention for the officers named.

Dr. Mueller, the president elect, was then escorted to the platform by Mr. Young, and Mr. Rutherford inducted his successor into office by pinning on him the badge of office and surrendering to him the gavel as presiding officer.

Dr. Mueller on assuming the chair briefly thanked the delegates for the honor conferred upon him.

Dr. Mueller expressed his appreciation of the confidence reposed in him by the members of the Association as evidenced by their selection of him for the important office, which had been so ably filled by his predecessor, National Chairman Rutherford.

He asked that everyone within hearing of his voice should feel at liberty to bring to his attention at any time matters for the advancement and progress of the small loan business as a whole of the members individually and of the Association, and he reserved for himself in turn a like privilege, realizing that the Association could not grow and prosper without a wholesome, enthusiastic and united coöperation.

He closed his remarks with the pledge that he would energetically administer the duties of the office of National Chairman and would give to the work the best within him.

Secretary Kehr then read a letter from Director of the Bureau of the Census at Washington, requesting information about the small loan business. Chairman Mueller said that this information could only be supplied by the voluntary actions of individual members and suggested that members of the Association send the information requested direct to the National Secretary for transmission to the Census Bureau. Mr. Watts said that while his company individually would be glad to do this, he doubted if the request would generally be acceded to, as the average lender needs education upon the subject. The matter of giving such information was supported by Messrs. Baker and Harbison of Chicago, the latter telling how a frank statement of this kind had resulted in saving the Uniform Small Loan Law in Chicago when a bill was before the Illinois Legislature providing for a reduction of the maximum rate from 3½ to 2½ per cent a month.

Mr. Harbison then asked for an expression of reasons why it should not be done in this case, and when there was no response he asked how many present were willing to give the Census Bureau the information requested. Mr. Schoonover of Lima, Ohio, spoke briefly, doubting the advisability of giving the information, and at this point the committee of lawyers reported on their discussion of the point of parliamentary law referred to them by the chair.

Mr. Napier for the committee reported that they recommended that an amendment to an amendment could be offered in the regular way and should be voted on in the reverse order in which they were offered.

Judge Dyer then took the floor and made a strong argument against the reduction of the annual membership dues. Debate again became general and gave promise of becoming as prolonged and complicated as before when it was ended by Judge Dyer's motion that both the resolution and the amendment to it be tabled. This was seconded by Mr. Young and the motion was carried.

Secretary Kehr then extended the invitation of the Chamber of Commerce of Harrisburg, Pennsylvania, to hold the 1924 convention in that city, at the same time telling of some of the beauties and advantages of his home city. Mr. Stratton suggested French Lick, Indiana, as the meeting place for the next annual convention, and both recommendations were referred to the Executive Committee for action.

Secretary Kehr announced that the silver loving cup for the State Association having the largest percentage of its membership present at the convention was won by West Virginia. In point of numbers present, the State did not lead, however, this honor going to Indiana, while Kentucky and Texas, both unorganized states had 100 per cent of their members present.

In adjourning the convention subject to the call of the National Chairman, Doctor Mueller bespoke the coöperation of all the members of the Association in the work before him and pledged the utmost fidelity and loyalty to its interests on his own part to make the year of his administration the best year in the history of the Association.

The registration of the members and guests of the Association attending the convention showed a total of 168, with 16 States represented. Those who registered were:

Most of those attending the convention remained in Louisville over Saturday to make the trip to Mammoth Cave, Kentucky. The arrangements for the excursion to this point, one of the great natural wonders of the world, had been made by C. E. Reed, of Louisville, in charge of local arrangements, and a special rate had been obtained from the railroad.

Trip to Mammoth Cave.

Some fifty delegates with their wives daughters and etc., remained over Saturday for the trip to Mammoth Cave. E. G. Jones, City Passenger Agent of the L. & N. R. R. saw to it that this was a delightful experience. The special train with happy people pulled out of Louisville on time reaching Glasgow Junction to meet the "Tunerville Special" without mishaps. Our entertainers, Mrs. Schneider, Bill Young, Fred Snite, Al. Ezekiel and Sol Vogel kept us in a merry mood all the way to Mammoth Cave, where we donned overall suits preparatory to a good chicken dinner served in the hotel in true southern style and the cave trip proper. When the dinner was consumed we paired off and got our miners lamps for the nine mile trip three hundred feet below the surface. Prior to our entry into the Cave a photograph was taken in our Cave regalia and included in the group was Louis Bransford, our guide, whose forefathers were among the pioneer explorers.

"Louie" proved a faithful and entertaining guide as Mrs. Dyer will testify when she inquired why the name of one of the springs was changed to "Bird Spring," Louie answered, "because it had so many swallows."

Space does not permit a detailed description of this wonderful work of God and nature but the sights seen in the Echo River trip, the Mammoth Dome, the boat ride and the final ascent of 190 feet on ladders for the most part on hands and knees twisting through "fat man's misery," "low bridge" and up the famous "cork screw" are experiences which all, but particularly Rose, Young and Alberse will remember for the rest of their days.

The echo in the Shakespearian gallery where Booth recited Hamlet as enunciated by "Louie" was wonderful as well as musical. Frank Merritt in true aboriginal style ventured beyond the beaten paths as he wanted all the "thrill" there was and he got it.

The trip took several hours and ended where it started in "Broadway" where we built a monument of loose stones which was appropriately dedicated by the fitting remarks of Dr. Mueller, National Chairman elect, who said in part we stand "for the improvement of financial service to the masses" and accordingly a sign with the name of the organization, the date of the trip and the above quotation will be placed on the monument to serve as a primer to the 70,000 or more people who pass through the cave every year.

EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE MEETING.

After the adjournment of the convention the national executive committee met in the Seelbach Hotel, Louisville, with Messrs. Mueller, Zumpfe, Kehr, Watts, Harrison, Wall and Hartz present. Mr. Harrison was directed to continue his efforts for new members and Mr Hartz was authorized to submit plans for a publicity campaign.

An appropriation toward the expense of the legal survey was authorized.

It is the purpose of the committee to meet three or four times during the year to consider and act on any business that should be taken up by the national body. The first meeting will probably be held in Philadelphia, November 20th, the day preceding the annual meeting of the Pennsylvania Association. All members are invited to refer to the National Secretary any business that should be considered by the National Executive Committee.

NATIONAL CHAIRMEN'S CLUB.

During the ninth annual national convention held in Louisville, Ky., September 19th to 22d, the National Chairmen's Club was organized with the following charter members: G. W. Kehr, Harrisburg, Pa.; C. G. Mueller, Philadelphia, Pa.; J. H. Dyer, Columbus, O.; C. H. Stratton, Sullivan, Ind.; W. G. Wood, Providence, R. I.; and R. M. Rutherford, New York City.

G. W. Kehr was elected the first National Chairman at the organization meeting held in Philadelphia, April 19, 1916, and presided at this and the Atlantic City meeting held September 9, 1916, but resigned in November, 1916, in favor of C. G. Mueller to take up the work of National Secretary vacated by C. G. Mueller who served as National Chairman until the Cedar Point Convention held July, 1917, when he was succeeded by J. H. Dyer. The Dyer administration continued two years and included the Detroit Convention held September, 1918, and the Atlantic City Convention of September, 1919. C. H. Stratton presided over the Indianapolis and Chicago Conventions of September, 1920, and 1921. W. G. Wood succeeded Stratton at the Chicago Convention as National Chairman but due to ill health was unable to preside at the convention held in New York, September, 1922. His choice of presiding officer for the New York Convention proved to be same as the delegates as R. M. Rutherford was elected National Chairman and completed his administration at Louisville, Ky., September, 1923.

C. G. Mueller by whom the affairs of the A. I. L. A. will be directed for the ensuing year returns to the National Chairmanship after an interim of six years between his former administration "Doc" always has been popular and known for his energy and aggressiveness. This ought to be a big year for the A. I. L. A. with him at the helm. That pays for the dinner that "Doc," gave to Messrs. Dyer, Kehr and Stratton the only eligible members present at the Seelbach Hotel, Friday evening, September 21st.

Here's hoping the National Chairmen's Club will be an inspiration to others who may aspire to membership. The object to be obtained is the honor and confidence of the members and sociability.

SO SAY WE.

It is always a great pleasure to have our former Superintendent, Mr. Robert M. Rutherford, with us. We are privileged on this, one of his occasional visits, to welcome not only Mr. Rutherford, but as well Mrs. Rutherford and the daughter, Dorothy. Mr. Rutherford is here at this time as National Chairman of the American Industrial Lenders' Association, which is having its sessions and banquet at the Seelbach Hotel. Congratulations on the honors which have come to one so greatly beloved by this congregation!—First Christian Church Bulletin. Louisville, Ky., September 23, 1923.

JUDGE REED.

Many do not know that to his home folks the chairman of the local entertainment committee of the last national convention, Charles E. Reed, Manager of the People's Provident Loan Association is known as "Judge" Reed.

The Louisville Herald of September 2, 1923, which published a large photograph of him says: "Judge Reed is ranked as one of the best racing judges in America and is admired for his firmness and fairness to all parties concerned, and has a knack of keeping the horsemen in good humor, which is the next thing to an impossibility. He acts as judge throughout the country and is held in high esteem by the public in general. For the past ten years he has done the starting for the Kentucky State Fair and is the best known starter of harness races in America."

And we can testify that no warmer welcome or more considerate attention could be given by anyone than that with which Judge Reed greeted and took care of us while in Louisville.

CLIPPINGS.

The Camden N. J. Daily Courier under date of September 19, 1923, publishes in full the paper of Walter S. Hilborn, acting director of the division of remedial loans Russell Sage Foundation on the "Philosophy of the Uniform Small Loan Law."

POSITION WANTED.

MANAGER—Twenty-three years experience, best of reference, with-up-to-the-minute ideas. Address—SAM WORMSER, 1020 9th Ave., Huntington, W. Va.

WHERE SHALL WE GO IN 1924?

Invitations have been received from Harrisburg, Pa., and French Lick, Indiana, to hold our tenth annual convention in those places.

The executive committee would like to have other invitations before selecting a place. Don't be backward. The national convention is a big thing for your business and town and ala Louisville it does not cost much money. That reminds us to say, what did you like about the Louisville Convention and what didn't you like? How would you improve the National Conventions? Tell the National Secretary about it in a letter.

MARYLAND.

The regular monthly meeting of the Maryland Industrial Lenders Association was held in the Board Room of the Merchants & Manufacturers Building, No. 22 Light Street, Baltimore, Md, at 8 P. M., on Tuesday, September 11th.

The meeting was called to order by Chairman Gardner. Among those present were: Lewis F. Eckhart, People's Loan Society, J. E. Turner, Herman Lappe, Leroy Busch, Community Finance Service Co., G. W. Stancill, H. C. Moore, People's Finance Service Co., C. A. Gardner, Earl Fuggett, United Finance and Security Corporation, W. F. Oliver, Jr., Household Finance Service Co., H. T. Mattingly, R. A. Long, Equitable, Fayette & Calvert Branches, The Master Loan Service Co. Inc., E. E. Hougham, Coöperative Loan & Investment Co.

REPORT OF OFFICERS.

In the absence of Treasurer Goldrick, no report was received as to the finances of the association.

The Secretary reported 5 Members being delinquent in State dues since July 1, 1923, four of which are also delinquent in dues of the American Industrial Lenders' Association since August 1, 1923.

REPORT OF COMMITTEES.

Executive Committee Chairman Mattingly reports progress.

In the absence of Chairman Young, Mr. Oliver of the Membership Committee reported progress is being made toward obtaining new members. It is hoped this Committee may have several applications to submit at the October monthly meeting.

Unfinished Business.

Messrs. Hougham, Oliver and Gardner were delegated at the June meeting to investigate a member of our Association who was supposed to be charging $5.00 look up fee in taking applications. It is pleasing to know that this matter has been sifted to the bottom and it developed that a non member of our Association was following this practice. The matter being discussed with the management of this Company, they immediately promised to discontinue this practice. A vote of thanks was tendered this delegation for the quick action in bringing this matter to an issue.

Communications.

The Secretary read a letter from Mr. Oscar C. Orem, Genl. Manager of the Lend-U-Money. Bankers, of Baltimore, Md., in which Mr. Orem called the Association's attention to the great need for the People's Court having jurisdiction up to and including amounts of $200.

It should be the effort of the Association to bring this action or present the necessity before the coming Legislature.

Upon motion of Mr. Hougham, seconded by Mr. Mattingly, the Secretary was instructed to draw up the following resolutions:

At the regular monthly meeting of the Maryland Industrial Lenders' Association, held on Tuesday, September 11th, at the office of the Association, M. & M. Building, No. 22 Light Street, Baltimore, Md., it was,

Resolved, that the Association approves the effort to extend the jurisdiction of the People's Court of Baltimore City up to, and including, amounts of three hundred ($300) dollars. That such extension would facilitate the business of the members of this Association and would relieve the public in general of unnecessary costs and delay in this class of litigation.

It Was Further Resolved, that a copy of this resolution be forwarded to the Governor of the State and the various members of the General Assembly immediately after the November election.

H. C. Moore,
Secretary.

The Secretary called the members' attention to the wonderful Loan Library which was started by the Illinois Association, with Attorney C. R. Napier, Ashland Block, Chicago, Ill., as Chief Librarian and originator of the idea.

This Loan Library will in time contain all Literature of importance about Ancient and Modern money lending which in time will be of untold value to the loan business.

The members are urged to collect any literature, old books or any data upon Ancient money lending conditions and mail to Mr. Napier in order that we may assist him with the Loan Library.

New Business.

Upon motion of Mr. Oliver, seconded by Mr. Hood, the Secretary was authorized to change his records and issue new membership certificates as a transfer for, Surety Guarantee Co., to The Masters Loan Service Inc., Equitable Branch, Reliance Guarantee Co., to The Masters Loan Service Inc., Calvert Branch, Commercial Guarantee Co., to The Masters Loan Service Inc., Fayette Branch.

The Exchange Committee reports that the members will be ready in 30 days to start the Exchange, as outlined in the previous monthly meeting.

Messrs. Mattingly, Gardner and Oliver were instructed to immediately get busy with the arrangements for the annual banquet, and advise the Secretary at their convenience, as to the date.

Chairman Gardner called the members' attention to the great need of our Association being an incorporated body, in order to protect the members when confidential bulletins relative to delinquent clients are mailed the members, again the Association will be better prepared to take action relative to any questionable money lending enterprise or schemes of a questionable nature.

Mr. Hougham made a motion that the matter be taken up with Attorney Bryant, and have him draw up articles of incorporation. The officers of the corporation to be the same as the present officers of the Association. The Board of Directors to remain the same as the Executive Committee of the Association.

This being acted upon, Carried.

Chairman Gardner instructed Messrs. Hougham and Mattingly to take the matter up at once with Attorney Bryant.

Upon motion of Mr. Long, seconded by Mr. Oliver, the hour of future meetings of the Association was changed from 8 to 7:30 P. M.

There being no further business to transact, upon motion of Mr. Long, seconded by Mr. Eckhart, the meeting adjourned until October 9th, at 7:30 P. M.

Secretary.

CHATTEL MORTGAGES.

Unrecorded Chattel Mortgage Held Inferior to Second Mortgage Properly Recorded.

On August 28, 1920, Z. G. Beck gave to the defendant, Carpenter, a chattel mortgage on an automobile. This mortgage, which purported to secure the payment of two notes aggregating $900, was a purchase money mortgage. It was not recorded in the county where Beck resided until October 22, 1920.

Z. G. Beck and Myrtle Beck, on October 2, 1920, executed a chattel mortgage in favor of the plaintiff, the Humphreys Savings Bank, to secure the mortgagor's note for $1,148.70. The mortgage described various personal property, including "one new Mitchell automobile, 1920 model." It was recorded on the day of its execution in the county where the mortgagors resided. At the time this mortgage was given, Beck told an officer of the bank that the automobile was already mortgaged to Carpenter for $600. The officer said that he would take the automobile subject to Carpenter's mortgage.

Subsequent to the execution of the second mortgage, Carpenter took possession of the automobile. The plaintiff then brought an action to replevy it. The bank based its right to possession of the automobile upon its chattel mortgage.

The defendant contended that his mortgage was prior to the bank's mortgage, and, therefore, superior to it; that the plaintiff's mortgage did not identify the property except to show that it was a Mitchell automobile, 1920 model; and that, since the bank knew of Carpenter's chattel mortgage at the time its mortgage was executed, its mortgage was taken subject to Carpenter's mortgage.

It was held that the plaintiff's chattel mortgage, since it was recorded before Carpenter's, was superior to his, for the reason that under the Missouri Rev. St., 1919, Section 2256, a chattel mortgage not recorded in the county of the mortgagor's residence is inferior to a second mortgage properly recorded. The description of the automobile, as given in the bank's mortgage, was held to be a sufficient description as between the parties to the instrument, since the mortgagor owned only one automobile, and the county of his residence was given. The court further held that since the description was sufficient as between the parties, it was sufficient as against the holder of a prior unrecorded mortgage. The court also held that, although the bank knew of Carpenter's chattel mortgage at the time its mortgage was executed, its mortgage was not taken subject to Carpenter's mortgage: Humphreys Savings Bank v. PLAN TO PROTECT SMALL BORROWERS.

Legal Aid Organizations Propose National Educational Campaign on Loans.

Hope to Extend Pennsylvania Law.

A national campaign for legislation to protect the small borrower is being considered by the Executive Committee of Legal Aid Associations, now in session in New York.

The campaign—to be one of "forceful publicity and intelligent propaganda"—was recommended by the Committee on Small Loans and Investments, of which Romain C. Hassrick, chief of the Bureau of Legal Aid, is chairman.

The recommendation was based on the experiences of the legal aid organizations in the various States where the so-called 3½ per cent uniform law is effective. The Pennsylvania act on that subject is considered one of the most advanced laws of its kind, and the committee hopes to extend the benefits of this legislation to other States.

In ten States, according to the national survey conducted by Mr. Hassrick's committee, there is in effect at present a uniform law which provides interest at the rate of 3½ per cent a month on small loans. The law has the support of the Russell Sage Foundation and reputable welfare organizations in the various States affected.

Besides Pennsylvania, the States are Arizona, Connecticut, Georgia, Illinois, Indiana, Iowa, Maine, Maryland and Rhode Island.

Similar laws, establishing a legal rate of interest for small loans, are in effect in ten other States—Colorado, Massachusetts, Michigan, New Hampshire, New Jersey, New York, Ohio, Oregon, Utah and Virginia.

Rhode Island was the last State to get the 3½ Per Cent Law. It was passed this year and becomes effective on January 1, 1924.

In West Virginia, Minnesota and Missouri an effort was made to pass a uniform 3½ Per Cent Law, but it failed in each case. An amendment providing for a 3½ per cent interest rate also was suggested this year for the present law in New York, but was defeated.

In investigating this legislation the committee has conferred with representatives of the Russell Sage Foundation, the American Industrial Lenders' Association and the Pennsylvania Industrial Lenders' Association. Coöperation with the Russell Sage Foundation and the American Industrial Lender's Association is suggested to the National Association of Legal Aid Organizations by the committee.

"The committee also recommended," said Mr. Hassrick, "that the legal aid organizations shall, in all States where the uniform law or a similar law is not in operation, direct public attention to abuses practiced by unscrupulous money lenders, who are charging rates in excess of 3½ per cent a month. We also suggest that the organizations compile statistical data as to the evils arising from these usurious practices." — Public Ledger, Philadelphia, October 7, 1923.

GOOD WILL IN THE SMALL LOAN BUSINESS.

A. L. Whitmer, Manager, Provident Loan Association, Sioux City, Iowa.

There are many earnest souls, preachers, missionaries, evangelists and reformers, trying to do people good.

It seems ungracious to say a critical word to any enthusiastic person who is engaged in so laudable an enterprise as that of feeding the hungry, healing the sick, and giving away money, and yet when you take time to think right through to the bottom of things, you must come to the conclusion that there is but one real effective way to help your fellow man, and that is the way called justice.

By being just toward ourselves and everybody else, we are being good to people. The only untainted charity is justice. Real charity, which is justice, sets about removing the conditions that make beggary and poverty. Conventional charity piously accepts things as they are, and helps the unfortunate; justice goes to the legislature and changes things. It is presumed that the best part of the human race does not want help, nor favor, nor charity. It wants a fair chance and a square deal. Therefore, putting it briefly, good will in the small loan business can be assured by the observance of this principle: Justice to the borrower and every one with whom you come in contact. You can have the good will of your customers by rendering an efficient and honest service. It is not expected by the persons with whom you do business that you become intimate with them. What they want is service combined with fair treatment. A new applicant for a loan in our office seldom receives over ten minutes and when there are no complications, the interview is much shorter. On renewals many of them are handled by one of the young ladies, and only so far as practical, in accordance with good business, is a renewal loan closed by myself or someone in the office that can leave an impression with the borrower of the importance of carrying out his part of the contract in accordance with its terms.

We all frequently have prospective borrowers who complain that it is impossible to save anything at all. They are victims of self pity, weak will, and bad management. They are the kind of applicants that cannot be rushed through, but can be shown how it is possible for them to get ahead, by explaining to them that it is not from large salaries that people grow rich, but that it comes through saving, as that is about all that most of us can do. Many a shopkeeper has been ruined trying to get rich, not realizing that he is not a money maker, but a money earner. I often tell them that there are natural born money makers, but we had better content ourselves with the only thing wherein we have a prospect of sure success, and that is saving something from each pay day.

We cannot pour a brimming measure of friendliness and good will into our relations with our fellows without provoking a generous return flow of the same qualities.

There can be no better way of obtaining good will and keeping it than by having your business clean. A clean profit is one that has also made a profit for the other fellow. Any interest you collect that arises from another's loss is dirty, and no one will ever have good will when his business is a damage to any other business. Our business properly conducted is the type of honest clean business that helps everybody and hurts nobody, just as when a farmer sells a housekeeper a barrel of apples, when a milkman sells her a quart of milk, or the butcher a pound of steak, or a dry goods man a yard of muslin, the housekeeper is benefitted quite as much as those who get her money.

The Rotarian motto, "He profits most who serves best," simplifies good will, and if we will all ask ourselves what there is in it for the other fellow, before closing a loan, and refuse to enter into a transaction for our own gain which will be of no benefit to anyone else, we cannot go far wrong. The members of this Federation stand before the public squarely on its merits as an organization of service. Our direction has been guided by our chairman, whose connection with the Remedial Loans Division of the Russell Sage Foundation for many years has given him an opportunity to obtain all of the information necessary in the proper conduct of small loan companies. He is largely responsible for the formation of this Federation, and so far as I have been able to judge, every member has followed suggestions made by him, and those that did not do so are no longer with us. I refer to those that liquidated.

Good will in our business is no different from the good will in any other business. We desire to be well thought of not only by our customers but by those that have no business dealings with us, as our business largely depends upon our standing in the community.

MOST INTERESTING EXPERIENCE IN THE SMALL LOAN BUSINESS.

D. S. Coffey, Manager of the Provident Loan Society, St. Paul.

Most of our interesting incidents occur in connection with getting people out of the hands of the high-rate companies. A short time ago a victim of the loan sharks came into our office, and gave me a little history of his dealings with the loan sharks, and if you will permit me I will give it to you as he gave it to me:

"At the request of Mr. D. S. Coffey, Manager of the Provident Loan Society of St. Paul, I have consented to give a brief synopsis of my more than twenty years' dealings with loan shark companies. He has, no doubt, heard many interesting stories of loan shark victims, but I claim to be the champion 218-pound, fifty-year old, loan shark victim of the world.

"In order to give the reader a clearer understanding of my story I will begin a few years back of my real loan shark activities.

"I was born in a small country town in Minnesota and spent my early days on the farm. When I was fifteen I entered the eighth grade of our town school. Entered high school one year later and finished two years of high school, then after three total crop failures and being one of a family of twelve, struck out for myself. I roamed about the country for two years, then settled in St. Paul, in October, 1890, at the age of twenty. I entered the livery stable business and in one year was promoted to general manager of the Albion Livery, doing a business at the time of $4,500 a month. I was considered as a very able and trustworthy man, and handled all the cash. Never was under bonds and never short a cent. After four years I was married, in 1895. Every one remembers the 1895-1897 money panic, with business failures all over the country every day. The firm I was with did not fail but had to cut wages so low that even a child could hardly live on the salary I received. We had a son born to us February 19, 1896, and he was taken sick and died July 14 the same year, leaving me $175 in debt to the doctor and the undertaker, and I owed nearly every druggist from Broadway to Dale Street, which took in most of the town at that time. Then by having nearly every alderman and the mayor pull for me I got a job on the fire department at the magnificent salary of $45 per month. All the employees of the department were required to pay all legitimate bills monthly. By hard scratching and many a close shave from garnishment, I finally got the druggist bills paid. By this time the doctor was pressing hard and he gave my account to the D——— Collection Agency, which generally got the money if the victim was living. I was up against it strong, then one day a fireman was fired for borrowing money from a loank shark, on his salary. The daily papers gave a full account of it, also the address of the loan shark, D. H. Tolman, 710 New York Life Building. I read and reread the account, wondering which one of the two evils was the worse, getting fired for borrowing on my salary or for non-payment of bills. The latter was as sure as death, while the other would give me two or three months on earth, so I chose the shark. I spent hours of my time off in the New York Life Building looking around and trying to work up courage enough to go in. Remember, that during all this time I did not drink, smoke, or gamble. Finally one day I went in, and found a very pleasant young lady in charge. She seemed to realize at once that I was a good risk and told me no one would ever know as long as I could pay part at any time, so I dove off at $30, three payments of $12 each. Gave the $30 to the doctor, then when the $12 was due, I paid it, leaving me $33 to live on for thirty days. Shortly after a girl was born to us, more doctor bills and the $12 every month. Well, I would let the grocer go for a balance and make two $12 payments, then pay the last $12 and renew the loan. Finally the two doctors and the grocer put on pressure. More money from the loan sharks—a loan of $45 to be paid in three installments of $20 each. Then when I felt the pressure I got a little more hardened. I got an endorser for a loan at 317 Pioneer Press Building and secured a loan of $30. Then I was in over my head. By stalling one and paying the other two at once and renewing, I sailed along for four years. Then I borrowed $30 through a friend on my furniture from Shark No. 3, at 210 Globe Building. Then my domestic affairs began to cause trouble. I was accused of squandering my money, keeping other women and gambling. So in preference to telling her the real truth I let my wife believe I did gamble, and many was the night, when off duty, that I would stay out all night and go back and sleep at the Fire House, then come home in the morning at six o'clock, so as to be at work at seven. I would tell my wife I had played poker all night and lost.

"By this time I was some $200 in the hole. I got a raise in salary to $55 per month, still leaving me $35 to live on, but as living was quite cheap at that time, and believe me it had to be for me, I got along for a while. I was finally driven to the wall and had to resign. Went back, however, to my old place in the livery, where I was my own paymaster. Tolman located me first. I then fixed it with the other sharks on promises, as I always intended to pay them in full. Tolman had by this time secured from that first $30 loan in four years without advancing any more money, $144 and I still owed him $60—four payments of $20 each. I had established a line of credit with the loan sharks, which had I established it in a legitimate business it would have been sufficient to enable me to open a bank.

"At this time, however, I had to change my system. I now was doing business with three loan companies. I had them run three months each. Each one came due on a different month. I paid up the loans, interest and all and renewed. Finally I got a chance to return to the Fire Department, but there was no use with all that load. So I took the 'Nelson' cure—bankruptcy, and cleaned up, then returned to the Fire Department. However, I paid all my debts outside the shark companies, after going through bankruptcy. Then I found out that bankruptcy did not clear me of salary loans, as these notes were secured by unearned salary, which security was good when I had the salary earned. Well, I then had $100 more to pay my attorney, a friend of mine, who put me through, added to the two shark accounts I had been taking care of, while off the Fire Department, so I had to go to No. 317 again and renew, with all back interest applied to the principal of the note. All this time my wife suspected that I was keeping other women, although she never found any evidence, and I could never explain satisfactorily. No one knew except God, the sharks, and myself. My wife took in roomers to help out and my two girls were well taken care of, and went through High School.

"About this time the Provident Loan Society of St. Paul was advertised as a remedy for victims of the shark companies, but I felt that my case was far beyond salvation or consideration. I felt that they could never find a manager to whom I could explain my case in such a way as to interest him, so I struggled on. You must know that by this time rumors were afloat of my double life, and I did not want anyone to investigate and find out what a fool I had really been for ten years. My family was about to lost my wife, she was going to leave me, so I finally went to the Provident Loan Society, and to say that I was surprised at the reception I received and the ready understanding of my case by Mr. Coffey, manager, is putting it mildly. However, long before going to the Provident I had secured two $50 loans from a Mrs. Eubank, 410 Pioneer Building, as I found I was in good standing in all the shark companies. I paid Mrs. Eubank $10 interest per month for five years on these two loans, and at the time Mr. Coffey settled her claim for me I still owed $100 principal and two months' interest of $20. The total interest paid on this one loan was $600.

"The assistance of the Provident Loan Society, at that, was only a temporary breathing spell, as I was afraid to tell them the whole story or how deeply in debt I really was. I was about $500 in debt, but as I had received an advance from $55 per month to $83, I felt that I could get through with the aid of $100 from the Provident, which I secured on the endorsement of my father, to whom I had never been able to explain satisfactorily why I should have to borrow money, as I had never lost a day from work, or had a cent to spend in thirty years.

"Well, my wife finally got so disgusted with me and the small amount of money I gave her that she left me, and I could not blame her very much, for after all those years I could never explain to her the real difficulty, and she probably would not have believed me then if I had.

"Another hundred dollars for a divorce suit, one girl in boarding school at $35 per month and another with my mother at $20 per month, as I could not afford to have my mother think I could not support my family, so that I was now $600 to the bad. And while my hair had turned white worrying over financial affairs, I must have another $100, which I secured from another shark upon my plain note, and I paid $9 per month interest on that note for over four years.

"About this time I was again promoted and my salary raised to $140 per month, which again relieved the tension and gave me a short breathing spell. My oldest daughter has now been married about two years, and my youngest has a fine position and is able to care for herself, and with the help of a second loan of $100 from the Provident Loan Society, I decided to get married again to a woman to whom I have fully explained all my financial difficulties and knows where all my money has gone. With the assistance of Mr. Coffey and the Provident Loan Society I have finally been successful in knocking down the shark companies, one at a time, until to-day all I owe is a balance of $40.75 to the Provident Loan Society.

"The principal of the original loans secured from the shark companies with which I did business during this time amounted to only $290, while the interest paid thereon amounted to $3,642, to say nothing of what it would have been but for the intercession of the Provident Loan Society.

"As strange as it may seem, it is nevertheless a fact that nine-tenths of the employees of the Fire Department of St. Paul are in the hands of the loan sharks to-day, and many of them have been for years. Many of the less fortunate have long since gotten so deeply in debt to the shark companies that they could not keep up payments, lost their jobs, and can be seen to-day sitting around the parks and public places, doing little or nothing, simply because they cannot accept a salaried position.

"I know that many persons will censure me for doing certain things enumerated herein, and others even more so for not doing certain other things, but I was optimistic enough to feel and believe that I would soon be able to extricate myself from debt. In fact, as explained to Mr. Coffey, I promised myself every month for over six years that I would pay off a certain $60 loan and cease doing business with that concern, but by the end of the month something would happen, so all that I could do was pay the interest and renew. But with all my hard times and financial worries, I still consider that I have been extremely fortunate in being able to carry my financial burdens along while many of my friends lost heart and fell by the wayside, until the good people of St. Paul organized and put into active operation the Provident Loan Society, without the assistance of which I would never have been able to extricate myself from the usurers' grip. I find myself to-day fifty years old, having spent over twenty years of that time endeavoring to overcome the handicaps placed upon me by the loan sharks, and while all my earnings have gone into the coffers of the money lenders, am out of debt for the first time in over thirty years, I have a good job, and from present prospects the future has many good things in store for me.

"There are many worries and incidents connected with this story that I should be glad to relate in detail, but time and space forbid. However, when I have time I will write a more detailed account of my trials and tribulations from April 21, 1898, to September 15, 1920, that will be worth sitting up nights to peruse.

"In conclusion, to the wage earner of St. Paul, who has through sickness, ill luck or lack of work, come to find himself in debt, I want to say, by all means stay away from the loan shark. If you will submit your case to Mr. Coffey, of the Provident Loan Society, the only person who ever understood my case, except myself, he will no doubt be able and willing to assist you in securing relief."

Since the above story was written, the writer has purchased a home, and rides around in his automobile, which he has also purchased out of his savings since he was able to throw off the bonds of the loan shark.

INDUSTRIAL LENDERS NEWS

VOL. VIII, No. 5. NOVEMBER, 1923. Price, $1.00 a year.

AS L. T. BAKER SAW THE CONVENTION.

As every legalized state is organized, and therefore, well represented at each of the National Association conventions, the appointment of one or more delegates by each State Association to attend the National Convention, is more or less, merely a matter of meeting a constitutional requirement.

The report of such a delegate, so appointed, is made largely to conform to an established practice as the convention is fully covered by the National Secretary's report and the year book. The individual impression of the big meeting and the matters of local or State interest are, therefore, the special features which might justify a state delegate's report.

The impression which your delegate brought back from Louisville was that he had attended the nicest, smoothest, most pleasant little convention ever held by the National Association. Everything started out and moved on through the entire meeting with the clock-like precision of an efficiently handled and well-generaled affair. This is all especially noteworthy because of the fact that Louisville is in unorganized territory.

Mayor Quin, of Louisville, was scheduled to make the address of welcome and he did so. He welcomed us in true southern fashion, leaving no doubt about his sincerity and showed an intimate knowledge of the small loan business thereby proving that he is a student of important civic problems as well as being a very delightful and entertaining orator.

Both Mayor Quin and R. F. Vaughan, a prominent Louisville lawyer and social worker, who was also an opening speaker, are personal friends of the then presiding National officer, Mr. R. M. Rutherford, and spoke of him in very complimentary terms.

Following the opening addresses the committeemen made their annual reports after which the convention adjourned to the Seelbach Hotel Rathskeller as luncheon guests of the entertainment committee. There were at this luncheon also about seventy-five public spirited business and professional people of Louisville. After lunch there were several good, educational talks and undoubtedly many new viewpoints were taken on by those present.

The entire body was then driven round and about Louisville in a line of taxi-cabs which stretched out for several blocks, stopping traffic and attracting much attention because of its size and also, no doubt, because of the unusual character of the occupants. Tate Harrison, of Iowa, dubbed this ride "The Loan Man's Parade" and has written a poem on it, the last line of which is "And the brave three hundred moved on." Tate will read the poem at the next convention.

The informal dance given the first evening of the convention was a very enjoyable affair and well attended. Those who did not dance gathered in little groups about the hotel or went out to see the town.

The second day of the convention was given over to the discussion of practical subjects and the reading of papers, all of which will be published in the year book.

As has always been the case every one looked forward with great hope and expectation to the banquet. And surely no one was disappointed. There have been other banquets with more glow and splendor, perhaps, but never has there been one so genteel, so elevating in its character, nor so fully satisfying as to its environment, its entertainment and its decidedly high grade speakers. Long will this feature of our Ninth Convention be remembered.

Friday, the last session day of the convention, was so well filled with important business that little time was available, much to the regret of many, for the general or open floor discussion of practical, every day business subjects. The proposed change in the National Constitution to reduce the dues to ten dollars per year for each office became involved in a parliamentary entanglement, which required the joint effort of all of the seven lawyers present to straighten out, and then the amendment failed to passage and the dues in the National Association are now as they have been for the past several years.

The elections of officers made little change in the executive committee except that C. G. Mueller, of Philadelphia, relieved R. M. Rutherford, of New York, of the chairmanship responsibilities for the ensuing year.

The attendance trophy which was won last year by Pennsylvania was awarded to West Virginia having a small attendance but a high percentage. Illinois was represented by twenty-nine registrations but would have won from Indiana on percentage although there were thirty-four Hoosiers present.

After adjournment on Friday every one scattered out either preparing for the homeward trip or seeing more of Louisville. A very nice crowd, however, stayed over and went to Mammoth Cave in a special, chartered train. The trip is reported to have been very interesting and enjoyable.

This convention was in every respect and in every detail a big success. This is said with no intention to exaggerate, but is sincerely meant. Those who did not attend missed an occasion of which all in the loan business might well be proud and which was made possible only by: First, our legal status, and second, by the efficiency, diligence and self-sacrifice of the men in charge and especially Chairman Rutherford, Secretary Kehr and Mr. C. E. Reed, of Louisville, who was the "man on the job."

GUARDING AGAINST FRAUD IN THE CHATTEL LOAN BUSINESS.

Albert Knight, Assistant Manager of the Workingmen's Loan Association, Providence, L. I.

Just as long as there are human beings, remedial loan associations may expect to find a small proportion of mankind who have come to the conclusion that it was never intended that they should earn their living "by the sweat of their brows," and while other people may labor and enjoy it, this small element of humanity will still endeavor to defeat the laws and usages of society, preferring to be drones in the hives of industry rather than willing workers in a common cause.

Of all the phases of the chattel loan business, perhaps none is of greater importance than the question of ownership, and of all obstacles to be overcome none presents more difficulties than the question of goods purchased on lease, on credit, or on time. Rarely do we find in the public records a list of goods purchased in that manner, which makes it difficult to ascertain whether the furniture offered as security for a chattel loan is fully paid for. Many devices are used by prospective borrowers to cover up the real facts.

One of the most satisfactory methods of our Association, and one which perhaps has brought to light more evidences of such dishonest attempts at borrowing than anything else, has been first of all to verify the statements in the application of the prospective borrower with reference to his address or residence for a period of at least five years. This part of the application, when substantiated by city or town directories, has been at least one assurance of the applicant's reliability.

It is not a common occurrence, but it occasionally happens that a person buying goods on lease will alter an installment receipt by inserting the words "In full to date." Such a receipt, bearing a recent date, and having the appearance of being genuine, is very misleading, and unless checked up with the installment house, the receipt may pass as proof that the account is paid in full.

In other cases borrowers have been known to present a bona fide receipt in full from one furniture house, while making no mention on their applications of having purchased goods from any other installment house, and, occasionally, as a result of this condition it is discovered later that more than one-half the property is subject to other liens. Here is where the appraiser must do his best work. It is quite possible to have such a knowledge of the various makes and marks of furniture sold by different installment houses in your city that many times a clue may be obtained with the aid of such information, sufficient to trace the place from which the property came. Or, it may be that by carrying on a conversation at the time the appraisal is made, with a person who did not make out the application, comparisons may be made which will expose a fraud and thus defeat the designs of such a prospective borrower. Then, too, there are cases where more than one couple live in the same apartment, and the applicant fraudulently avoids any mention of the fact that others own the greater portion of the security, and arranges to have the appraisal made at a time when the real owners cannot be interrogated. But how shall we discover that such is the case? While the furniture has the appearance of being new it is not uncommon for them to use this expression, "We bought this property from a party who has left the state, and have no receipts for it." Upon further inquiry, perhaps you will get the name, a Mr. Smith or Mr. Brown, as the person from whom goods were purchased, and this is insufficient. The questions will naturally suggest themselves, "Where did he live and to what city did he move? How long was he a resident of your city? What was his occupation and where was he employed? How long had you known him, and how did you learn that he wished to sell his furniture?" These questions and others of a similar nature, if answered evasively, should be sufficient to detect a cheat of this kind. Such an applicant usually ends with making a statement similar to this: "If I had known there was all this red tape to the thing I should never have made an application." If by that time you have discovered what furniture house you should approach, and do so, you will probably discover that a large balance remains unpaid on the furniture which was offered as security.

Other familiar stories are that the furniture was left to them by an aunt who has since died, or that it was purchased at a second-hand store, the owner of which has since retired from business. Sometimes a bill of sale is presented which appears to be spurious. In either of these cases a similar course may be followed with good results, as in those first cited.

Thus far we have only dealt with fraud in loan applications; but more fraudulent devices are adopted after loans have been made than in the application for them. One of the most common practices is that of answering a small three-line advertisement in the daily newspaper reading something like this: "Spot cash paid to parties who are breaking up housekeeping. Call Bell 9000, or address Box No. 452, care of this newspaper."

It would seem that a law should be passed making all persons who purchase second-hand furniture in this manner subject to the same rules which apply to pawn shops, and requiring such dealers to send to the chief of the license bureau not only an itemized list of the goods purchased but also a description of the persons who contracted for the sale of them.

Sometimes a dishonest borrower will negotiate with the owner of a second-hand store and sell one or two articles of mortgaged household furniture. In this way there does not arise in the mind of the proprietor the same suspicion as would be the case if he attempted to sell all he had, and if his plan succeeds, a return visit is made either to the same place or a similar one until enough security has been disposed of to accomplish his purpose. The small remainder of the furniture is left in the house, and the borrower leaves town, or before leaving he disposes of the remaining security by giving it away to neighbors with the explanation that he is going out of town. If he mentions his destination, the chances are, many to one, that his statement is false. He then leaves the state where the fraud was committed, thus temporarily, at least, evading justice. What is to be done with such unscrupulous borrowers? How shall we proceed to get justice without doing some innocent borrower an injustice? Inasmuch as there is now a uniform law in several of the states pertaining to the rate of interest to be charged for small loans, does it not seem feasible that a "uniform law" should be urged and adopted, making it a felony, punishable as such in any state of the Union, for a mortgagor to wilfully dispose of mortgaged personal property and convert the funds to his own use without making a satisfactory adjustment with the mortgagee? This would seem to be in accord with the work of remedial loan associations, which are always desirous of conducting their business in conformity with law and order, and are not primarily money-making institutions, but instead are agencies designed to help solve some of our social problems. Therefore, it would appear to be as much a part of our program to thwart the designs of unscrupulous persons and prevent them from obtaining funds intended for worthy applicants as it is to loan money to worthy applicants themselves.

With all the care that it is possible to exercise, there will still be dishonest attempts at borrowing. Some of these may succeed, but when discovered, there should be an insistence that the loan be settled in full. That such cases are usually settled out of court is another indication of the value of remedial loan associations, and of the work they are trying to do.

In conclusion, then, these items are but a few of many which may be cited but they explain some of the devices adopted by dishonest borrowers, and at least offer a few suggestions as to how to defeat these devices. This timely subject, I feel sure, is very important, and ought to receive greater consideration, and I trust that with the presentation of these brief outlines, there will come a desire on the part of the members of remedial loan associations to find a legal way to thwart this small minority who desire to practice unscrupulous methods.

FINANCE COMMITTEE REPORT.

W. P. Woll, Chairman of the Finance Committee, of Chicago, which handled the finance at the Louisville National Convention reports that there was received from the Indiana, Illinois, Ohio Association; the A. I. L. A. and the three local members, sale of banquet tickets and refund from the Mammoth Cave trip, a total of $3,296.70; and there was expended for badges, publicity, services, printing, prizes, lunches, speakers, etc. $2,191.24; leaving a balance unexpended of $1,105.46, which was distributed pro rata between the Illinois, Indiana and Ohio Associations.

In acknowledging the receipt of the check returned to the Ohio Association, J. Fred Anderson, Secretary and Treasurer, addressed the following communication to the Chairman of the Finance Committee:

SPRINGFIELD, OHIO, OCTOBER 27, 1923.

DEAR MR. WOLL:

I have received this morning a letter from George W. Kehr, National Secretary, enclosing your check No. 16 on the Illinois Merchants Trust Company for $368.49 representing Ohio share of returned contribution to the National Convention recently held at Louisville, Ky.

Seldom indeed do such things happen. Ordinarily one is asked to make up a deficit, and the return of this money certainly evidences the fact that those in charge of this convention were looking after the financial end of it in as careful and proper a manner as they would their own private affairs.

I believe that this last convention was the best I have ever had the pleasure of attending. There was a wonderful spirit of good will and fellowship manifested. The addresses and papers were well prepared and well delivered. I believe that everyone who attended this convention felt well repaid for the time and expense involved.

With kindest personal regards, I am,

Most sincerely yours,

J. FRED ANDERSON

ADVERTISING PRESENTS THE SMALL LOANS CASE IN INDIANA.

How Educational and Human Interest Copy Are Being Used to Build Good Will for the Indiana Industrial Lenders Association, an Organization of 122 Loan Companies.

The Indiana Industrial Lenders Association, an organization comprising 122 loan companies of the State of Indiana, in the newspapers of cities in which members are located is conducting a purely educational advertising campaign.

For seven years the organization has been in existence but the idea of using paid space to establish good will did not gather momentum until the recent convention of the association at Indianapolis. The need of advertising was then so apparent that adoption of the new step was recorded without a single dissenting vote.

The need of informing the public of present-day conditions dictated the first type of copy which appeared in more than one-fourth page space in the Indianapolis newspapers.

"Throwing Light— On a Business You Should Understand!" read the caption, against the rising-sun background. The text declared:

You are entitled to know all the facts about any business so vitally important in modern life as ours.

Fifteen years ago the type of man that dominated this money-lending field was the grasping and unscrupulous "loan shark."

That type is dead. The "loan shark" has passed.

It is not fair to you or to us to permit the honest business of lending money, to labor under the shadow of another's misdeeds.

The loan business of to-day is conducted by BUSINESS men, who realize that the life of any business is assured only as the business answers fairly the needs of the public.

The State of Indiana has passed laws that specify a maximum rate of interest to be charged in lending money. Industrial lenders are responsible legally to the State Banking Department, and morally to the public at large, and are recognized by great men and great institutions in both business and public life as faithful and friendly servants to the man of moderate means.

In this series of messages we hope to shed light on the true methods of operation followed by legalized loan companies.

This statement of its platform is echoed in some degree in all later copy. A pledge of service to the people also was early advertised, guaranteeing observance of Indiana statutes and protection of deserving people against payment of interest higher than that provided by law.

Succeeding insertions of smaller size, appearing Wednesday and Saturday in Indianapolis papers and in other cities at the direction of the local associations, were, in the main, human-interest stories of honest workingmen who, aided by timely loans had been able to grasp opportunities or meet stringent financial necessities.

How Bob Brandon with eight children and an inadequate salary was enabled to buy a truck garden, and how a new home for Bill and Mary was made possible by advancement of the first payment are typical instances cited.

"Who borrows money from an Industrial Lender?" as one advertisement asked was answered by men and women from all walks of life. The copy disregards the stigma of dealing with the loan shark. It assumes that it is entirely honorable to deal with an institution of character. The Industrial Lender is referred to as "nothing more or less than a banker who makes small loans as a business proposition," and as "a necessary cog in modern business."

The card of membership in the association also lent itself to copy, and the public was directed to those loan companies which displayed it.

At another time a testimonial was made to the honesty of the public. "Very often," stated the copy, speaking of the workingman, "his security might be considered insufficient." It was then related how the loan company took character into consideration and often placed an implicit trust in the borrower which was seldom violated. In all copy, lenience and coöperation are inferred, together with a desire for pleasant and congenial relations with the borrower.

In various states, small-loans institutions have aided in the passage of legislation for the deterrence of unscrupulous lenders. Many of these institutions have taken the next progressive step, establishing good will by advertising, and they are finding it of remarkable assistance in shoveling into the grave the old-time loan shark, the popular prejudice against their profession.

LENDERS ASSOCIATION TO MEET HERE ON NOV. 21ST.

Biennial Convention of Association Will Bring Many Delegates to Kokomo.

LOCAL MAN IS PRESIDENT.

FRED DAVIES WILL ACT AS HOST—IS PREPARING AN ELABORATE PROGRAM.

On Wednesday, November 21, Kokomo is going to be the scene of a convention that is somewhat out of the ordinary, as conventions go in this city. Something like 100 delegates will be in attendance on the sessions, which are to be held in the Elks clubrooms in West Mulberry street.

The occasion will be the third biennial convention of managers of the Indiana Industrial Lenders Association, of which a Kokomo man, Fred Davies, is president. Mr. Davies is manager of the Central and the Legal Loan companies of this city, and as such there will devolve upon him all the responsibilities of host and entertainer in chief. The ease, resourcefulness and ingenuity with which he devises programs of entertainment are well enough known to his fellow members of the Kiwanis club, for which organization it has been his duty at divers times to furnish the fun as well as the more serious phases of various programs, and if his associates in the Industrial Lenders Association are not aware of these qualities of Mr. Davies, a very agreeable surprise is in store for them when they assemble here in November.

Among the more serious agenda of the convention will be the business session which is scheduled to begin at 10:30 a. m. at the Elks club. The meeting will be broken at the noon hour by a luncheon at the Courtland hotel, to be followed by another business session in the afternoon.

Officers will not be elected at the meeting here, this important matter not requiring the attention of the association until the next regular meeting in the spring, so that Mr. Davies will not only welcome the delegates in his capacity of president but also as president will bid them farewell after the business of the meeting and the merrymaking are over.

At a recent meeting of the executive board it was decided to hold the convention in Kokomo, in honor of the state president, Mr. Davies, who expressed himself to-day to the effect that this city was fortunate in getting this convention, which confines its biennial meetings almost exclusively to the larger cities of the state. There are more than 130 companies affiliated with the state organization, representing almost every county in Indiana, and practically every one of them will have a delegation at the convention here.

The association is recognized as having done much to uplift and dignify the loan business, and is responsible for the present loan law having been placed among the statutes of Indiana, which is advocated by the Russell Sage Foundation. The foundation has approved this law as being fair alike to the borrower and the men who have invested their money in the business. All loan companies in Indiana are now supervised by the state banking department, and the state association at the present time is running a series of newspaper advertisements in the papers of Kokomo and other newspapers of the state.

Mr. Davies and his helpers among the association's members are making plans for a good meeting, having arranged for speakers of national reputation to address the convention. In addition there will be purely entertainment features of a high order.

The agenda includes a banquet Tuesday evening at the Courtland hotel with the Legal Loan company acting as host. This one company has twenty-one offices located in the central part of Indiana, and all of their scores of employes are expected to be present as guests.—Kokomo, Ind., Daily Tribune, Oct. 23, 1923.

FEW PEOPLE NOW FREE FROM DEBT.

CREDIT LAVISHLY USED.

Instalment Plan Buying Encouraged in Many Luxury Lines.

Mortgages Are the Rule.

Savings Deposits Are Large, But the Ordinary Man Has to Borrow in Time of Need.

Down in Georgia there is a man who wants everybody in the county without debts to attend a barbecue at which he will be host. One jesting editor has said that he hopes "all three" of the guests will enjoy themselves. Doubtless the sarcasm in the Georgian's gesture has caused readers throughout the country to reflect on their chances of a seat among the elect. The number would not be large, judging from the extent to which credit is used in American daily life.

It might be desirable to draw a line between credit and debt, but it is difficult to find the dividing point. In other and simpler days, when economy and privation were familiar in most homes, debt was a thing dreaded as the worst of ogres. In the literature and the drama of those days a mortgage hung over every home. This either was foreclosed at the climax, or the wandering son returned to lift it and keep the old folk in comfort the rest of their lives. Nowadays almost every home is mortgaged and nobody seems to care. So times have changed.

Only five per cent of the total business of the nation is conducted upon that cash-and-carry plan which was a heritage from the fathers. Just what the total of American business approximates in a year would be difficult to determine accurately, but it was placed at $350,000,000,000 by J. Harry Tregoe, Secretary of the National Association of Credit Men. Mr. Tregoe added that ninety-five per cent of all business was conducted upon credit and ninety per cent of the annual credit turnover was paid in checks.

Credit, of course, has much in its favor. It is the lubricant of business, the medium that keeps the wheels turning. But it has distinct perils.

Extravagant Use of Credit.

"Credit is the cheapest commodity we have to-day," said Mr. Tregoe, "and the cause of much woe, to buyer and seller I look upon the extravagant use of credit as an attack upon our whole system of economy; and there can be no doubt that we as a nation, are using credit extravagantly. This not only is the fault of the public, but of organized business as well.

"Everywhere one goes credit is thrust upon him. It takes considerable resolution to resist the temptation to buy. Business, in its eagerness to sell, has devised a thousand plans based upon credit. Many people buy thing they cannot afford, run themselves into debt, and either fail to meet their obligations or else must go through a long period of struggle—all caused by mistaken purchases."

As an illustration of the way some industries are functioning on credit, Mr. Tregoe said that he understood 70 per cent of automobiles were sold on some plan of credit. This percentage probably would apply to many other industries, such as the manufacture of talking machines, pianos and the retail sale of furniture. Some kinds of goods are sold to such a large extent on credit that few buyers ever think of paying cash. In a number of instances there would be no advantage, because the high cost of credit has been figured into the universal sale price, and the cash buyer merely pays part of the burden for the buyer on credit.

"The increasing facilities for the use of credit may be blamed for much of our extravagance," said Mr. Tregoe. "Without them we should forego many purchases which we have come to regard as necessary, knowing that they are to be had without much present trouble, and depending on the future to provide for their payment. Individual credit, no matter how excellent it may be in specific cases, is the unsafest credit in the world as a whole. And it is this individual credit which is used so unwisely."

The Instalment Habit

When the ordinary man looks around to-day and decides that he will buy a home, it is seldom that he has the means to pay the full purchase price. So he buys on credit, with an initial payment of from $500 to $3,000, and one or two mortgages. By the time he gets through signing papers and paying fees the next few years of his life are well mortgaged.

Then comes the question of furnishings, if this home-making happens to begin at the beginning. An instalment furniture bill follows for almost any amount, perhaps including a talking machine or a piano, maybe a washing machine and a whole assortment of the up-to-date electrical fixtures. All of these things and a host of others are eagerly sold on instalment, particularly when the buyer is a home owner. And once the interior has been properly equipped along comes the automobile salesman who deals in instalments, and completes the bondage of the home-builder.

The science of selling has reached such a degree of efficiency that it is impossible to go in any direction, to pick up any publication, without meeting clever suggestions to buy something—soap, clothing, home and automobiles. Since the war period, it has been remarked, the number of luxuries advertised is largely on the increase.

The Provident Loan Society was founded for the purpose of offering ready money in an emergency on low terms upon personal collateral. It has gone far to meet the demands of a numerous class who are without any cash reserve but have assets that may be easily realized, such as jewelry.

"The growth of the instalment business has been one of the biggest factors in increasing the debts of the American people," said Arthur H. Ham, President of the society. "It is so easy to buy almost anything within the range of daily use by the payment of a small sum down that a great deal of our buying is carried on without the forethought that cash payment would involve.

"Americans used to be taught that they never should buy anything until they had the money in their hands to pay for it. But that old doctrine has fallen away, and nowadays we are urged at every turn to buy something upon almost any terms.

"Debt is rapidly increasing in this country: by just how much nobody knows, but there are signs of it everywhere. The growth of luxuries arouses the desire for more luxuries, and the easy purchase of these for a trifling first payment encourages obligations which can be met only with great difficulty."

Help for Small Borrower.

Another phase of the debt question involves personal loans, obtained either on collateral or by means of endorsements. The Russel Sage Foundation has endeavored to help the small borrower solve his problems and has a legislative program which is expected to provide important remedies. Through the efforts of the Foundation a uniform bill has been passed in eighteen States limiting the monthly interest on small loans to 3½ per cent a month.

At first sight this might seem like a stupendous interest, 42 per cent a year. But in States where such legislation has not been passed these rates often mount to 500 or even 1,000 per cent a year. The Foundation made a thorough study of the matter before introducing its measure and believes that general adoption of this bill would have a broad influence in eliminating usury, often cloaked under the law.

Despite the lax use of credit and the undoubted increase of indebtedness, inquiry tends to show that the loan shark of other days is not so formidable at least, he does not operate with such boldness nor have things so much his own way. Many big industries have organized mutual societies for the purpose of combating the loan shark, one of the most successful being that of the Pennsylvania Railroad.

Those societies enable employes who become members, usually by capital subscription, to borrow money with a minimum of trouble on low terms. Thus the loan shark has been virtually eliminated in many industrial centers by restricting his field of opportunity. Competition is the one thing that he cannot meet—a thing much more effective than laws and campaigns.

An offshoot of these mutual lending societies in the form of credit unions is gaining prestige, with laws in ten States permitting the operation of such unions. They have been organized in accordance with European models which long ago proved their value. New York State has 100 credit unions. Massachusetts 100, North Carolina 33. Membership is obtained by a subscription to the capital, and loans are made on the signatures of two endorsers. The extent of operations may be judged from the $8,000,000 capitalization of the New York unions and the total of $14,000,000 for the three States.

Credit unions may be organized among the employes of a large corporation or by any group which obtains the approval of the State Banking Department. Considerable care has been exercised in the issuance of licenses, particularly in New York, where it is said that only a small part of the applications has been acted upon favorably.

Any one belonging to a credit union has capital near to hand at minimum cost. Endorsements for loans may be obtained from other members, so that the service is mutual in the highest sense, the borrower of to-day becoming the endorser of to-morrow. And the risk is thoroughly mutual in either case.

New Yorkers as Spenders.

Despite the great increase in savings during the last year or two and the evidences of prosperity on all hands, the pawnshops of New York are doing an excellent business. And—perhaps it should be whispered—the pawnbrokers also find our general extravagance the reason for their success. The manager of one of New York's largest pawnbroking concerns said that a considerable part of his business arose from needs unexpected which required money at once.

"Most New Yorkers have no cash reserve," he said. "I do not believe that the average man here has even $100 on hand. He spends as he goes, and when sickness or business trouble comes to him he must look around for a ready source. Then he turns to us. We treat him fairly. If he has negotiable property he pays us less than he would be compelled to pay a loan broker and frequently less than would be demanded by a bank. The transaction is quick, confidential, and generally satisfactory on both sides.

"Business is excellent with us. Yes, it is true that people are buying more luxuries than ever before. They certainly spend a lot of their money that way which they would be wiser to save. But I suppose that there is no use talking about saving to most men, because it is unpleasant for them to deprive themselves. They prefer present pleasures to possible benefits.

"Although wages are high at this time, prices also are high, and there really is not much margin to permit savings. In the past it often has been the rule that our business was best when depressions were worst, because of the acute need for ready money, but we are making all the loans our capital justifies at this time right in the midst of a prosperous period."

Summing up the combined experience of the men consulted on the individual debts of the American people, all the facts would point to a narrow margin between their necessities of to-day and the demands of to-morrow. So long as the everyday American keeps his job or continues his business, he gets along well enough, generally owing a little more than his assets, but not usually pressed for money. The moment that something goes wrong he finds himself confronted with the need of a lending agency.

Notwithstanding the many billions of dollars on deposit in savings institutions the money is not so widely distributed as might be desired. It represents the rainy day fund of the thrifty class rather than a cross section of the American democracy. The conclusion is inescapable that most Americans are spending faster than they earn, depending on that magical faculty of the nation—good luck—to meet whatever troubles may come.

EDWARD M. STEIMLE RETURNS TO ATLANTA

Edward M. Steimle has returned to Atlanta after an absence of several years and has assumed management of the Citizens Loan company, an industrial company which he organized ten years ago, according to announcement Saturday by officials of the company.

Mr. Steimle is an authority on industrial loans, having spent many years in careful study of this business and in actual experience in the field. The Citizens Loan Company, which he organized many years ago was one of the first legitimate loan companies in the state. Mr. Steimle was one of the first industrial loan officials to accept the general plan evolved by the Russell Sage Foundation investigation, applying the principle to his company with marked success.

The principle of the Sage Foundation is that 3½ per cent is legitimate interest to charge on sums borrowed by those who have no credit at banks. This rate now applies to industrial loan companies in 18 states. Georgia having adopted the plan by an act of the legislature of 1920.

Mr. Steimle has established loan offices in Pittsburg, Philadelphia, Chicago, Savannah and many other large cities, and has experienced success in such undertaking, he states.

"I am very glad to get back to Atlanta," Mr. Steimle states, "and I am agreeably surprised at the rapid growth and development of the city during the past ten years. It is marvelous the way Atlanta can grow and expand. This city is certainly the metropolis of the south and destined to become one of the greatest cities in the nation, I believe," he concluded.

BENEFITS OF SMALL LOAN BUSINESS AS ESTABLISHED BY THE ACT OF 1917.

Among agencies for financing the business of the American people both in big ways and in small there is a service represented in the membership of the Association of Commerce by the subdivision known as Licensed Lenders, being Division No. 55. The licensed lenders by regulation of law provide small funds for the worthy needy at a fixed rate. It happens that on one or two occasions, when their work has been in peril before the Illinois legislature, the Association has been able to be of some assistance to these interests. They are an essential factor in the credit system accommodating the small borrower.

Chicago Commerce has invited a representative of that interest to report on the progress of this service, and this is herewith done by Charles L. Napier, a member of division No. 55, of which L. C. Harbison is chairman:

"For many years past the larger centers of population in America have required a considerable volume of small loans, but until about the beginning of the recent century, the business was conducted in a haphazard fashion, often at exorbitant rates of interest, and usually without regard to the character or mental capacity of the borrowers, or use to be made of the money loaned. Such conditions naturally produced some friction but no change in the business worthy of note took place in Chicago until some time after the World's Fair.

"Seemingly there was no direct connection between the fair and the small loan business, but the probabilities are that the fair increased the demand for such loans and intensified the evils which had attended them, with the result that what was at first merely adverse criticism, became an agitation against the business, and later, somewhat of an uproar concerning it.

"In the light of present-day conditions it appears that this movement against the loan business, which was then looked upon by even the better class of lenders as an injustice, was really the best thing that could have happened for everybody concerned, for a general clean-up resulted.

"An effort which began in 1912, resulted in 1917, in the passage of the Illinois small loan act. Under it lenders are licensed and their business supervised and regulated in much the same manner as are banks. The effect of the act was to reduce the interest rate by more than two-thirds; and, generally speaking, put the control of the business into the hands of reputable lenders, who have made it useful and constructive.

"While the social necessity for the small loan business is no longer questioned by persons who are informed with respect to it, the lenders themselves now admit that the business imposes a definite moral obligation upon those engaging in it. In recognition of this obligation, the members of division 55 make it a rule not to lend to irresponsible or dissipated persons; nor to any one for an improper use; nor beyond the needs of the borrower; nor beyond the borrower's ability to get out of debt within a reasonable time.

"These lenders have come to believe that their interests, and those of the men and women who borrow from them, are in a large measure identical; and, that any benefit to the borrowing class is a direct benefit to their city, and an indirect benefit to the lenders themselves.

"While laws regulating the small loan business have been enacted in some twenty states, the latest being Rhode Island in 1923, and much improvement has been made in the conduct of the business in each of those states, the business is probably on a higher plane in Illinois, than in any other state in the Union."

WEST VIRGINIA.

The annual meeting of the West Virginia Industrial Lenders Association was held at the Frederick Hotel, Huntington West Virginia, Friday, October 19th. The following officers were elected for the coming year: Chairman, H. L. White, Wheeling, W. Va.; vice chairman, C. Cunningham, Bluefield, W. Va.; secretary, Wm. B. Grimes, Charleston, W. Va.; treasurer, D. E. Earnest, Parkersburg, W. Va.. committee, Edw. B. Campbell, Huntington; George B. Benson, Huntington; Owen Musgrave, Huntington; E. R. Meadows, Huntington.

It is doubtful if any meeting held by the State Association possessed the spirit and value to the future of the State organization as the one held this year. The membership has been increased and it will be but a short time until the State will be 100%.

The West Virginia Association is proud of the Silver Loving Cup won for having the largest percentage of its membership present at the National Convention and go on record that they will endeavor to hold it again next year.

Mr. Harry T. Bates, Economy Loan & Investment Co. of Wheeling, W. Va., was admitted to membership in the State and National Associations. The following Companies are now in good standing both State and National; Home Loan Co., Huntington, West Virginia; W. Va. Loan Co., Huntington; American Loan Co., Huntington; Union Loan Co., Huntington; Bluefield Investment Co., Bluefield; State Loan Co., Wheeling; Economy Loan & Investment Co., Wheeling; West Virginia Loan Co., Charleston; Capital City Loan Co., Charleston; Ideal Loan Co., Charleston; and State Loan Co., Parkersburg. One more new member will be added within the next few weeks.

The session was given over to the transaction of routine business which included the reports of the committees and of the Secretary and Treasurer. Mr. H. L. White the Chairman gave a report on the National Convention held at Louisville also discussed the State Association business for the coming year. The legal reform law was also discussed among the members to some extent.

The luncheon was held in the Dining Room of the Frederick Hotel at 1 P. M. and after the luncheon the members were treated to several musical hits by Mr. George Benson of the Union Loan Co., Huntington at the piano who is quite an artist.

The meeting was adjourned at 3 P. M. D E. EARNEST, Treas.

MARYLAND.

The October monthly meeting of the Maryland Industrial Lenders Association was held in the Board room of the Merchants & Manufacturers Association Building, at No. 22 Light Street, Baltimore, Md., on Tuesday evening, Oct. 9th, at 8 P. M.

Chairman Gardner promptly called the meeting to order. The minutes of the meeting show the following members were present: Earl Fuggett, C. A. Gardner, United Finance Security Corporation; Wm. J. Delcher, Jr., H. C. Moore, George W. Stancill, Jr., Peoples Finance Service Co.; W. F. Oliver, Jr., Household Finance Co.; J. E. Turner, Herman Lappe, Leroy Busch, Wm. Young, Community Finance Service; R. L. Smith, Masters Loan Service Incorporated; F. L. Brust, Roy T. Baseman, Peoples Loan Society; E. E. Houghan, Coöperative Loan Co.

Report of Officers.

In the absence of Treasurer Goldrick, the Secretary reported that we have $300 in the treasury, with all bills paid to date excepting six months retainer fee ordered the secretary to request the treasurer to immediately pay Attorney Bryant.

The Secretary reported a membership of 19. Eighteen in good standing as of December 31, 1923. Seventeen of which are members in good standing in the American Industrial Lenders Association as of Feb. 1, 1924.

Report of Committees.

In the absence of Executive Committee Chairman Mattingly no report was recorded as to the activities of this Committee.

Chairman Young of the Membership Committee, reported progress, and assured the members that he would have at least two companies to submit for membership by our next meeting.

Chairman Eckhart of the Program Committee being absent, the Secretary reported that Mr. George W. Stancill, Jr., outside man of the Peoples Finance Service Co. had prepared a paper to be read at this meeting, entitled "My Experience in Handling Delinquent Accounts."

Chairman Pumphrey of the Publicity Committee being absent, the secretary was instructed to request him to write a new advertisement for the Baltimore Magazine, using the same amount of space as our present advertisement and to insert this advertisement in the next issue of the Magazine.

Chairman Hougham of the Exchange Committee reported progress.

Unfinished Business.

The matter of Incorporating the Maryland Association was not discussed at this meeting, but was carried forward until November monthly meeting for action.

Communications.

The secretary read a letter from Emerson B. Knight Incorporated of Indianapolis, Ind., asking if the Maryland Association would be interested in putting on an advertising campaign similar to the one recently conducted in Indiana, if so they would be very glad to take care of the advertising for us, as they have had two years experience in preparing advertising for the small loan business in various forms by direct mail, publicity, newspaper advertising, etc.

An advertising campaign of education would find favor at this time if run purely from an educational point of view. This matter not being voted on, was carried forward until November meeting.

New Business.

"My Experience in Handling Delinquent Accounts."

When I opened Program Committee Chairman Eckhart's letter requesting that I prepare a paper to be read at this meeting my first thought was to decline, owing to my limited experience in the loan business, I did not feel capable of telling you anything new in the way of handling successfully a delinquent account, as the majority of you fellows know far more about the loan business than I may ever know. However, I will give you a few points relative to my experience in handling delinquent accounts.

Persistence and persuasion will do more in collecting money than any other method. It should be the thought of every man to "Keep the customer and get the money."

An outside man must know in his own heart, that 99 people out of every 100 are honest, and do the best they can in the eyes of their God in respecting their obligation. When a customer permits his account to run overdue, there is a reason, and it is the outside man's duty to find out just what the cause is.

In our office, when a loan is made, the customer is given a pass book, and his contract is thoroughly explained that all payments are to be paid at the office no later than the due date. If the customer fails to make payment on the due date, within a period of a few days, he receives a notice calling his attention to the payment being overdue. This notice is followed by a second and third notice, then if there is no response, the customer is sent a dictated letter signed by the manager. We next try to get in touch with the customer by telephone, if not successful, the card is placed in the route for attention.

When I am requested to call on a delinquent customer, the condition of the account is thoroughly explained to me by the manager; with this knowledge before me, I am in a better position to contact the customer. Then I adjust myself to suit the existing condition as I find it at the home, or the business place of the husband. In calling at the residence I make it a point to sit down and talk to the client in a smooth, persuasive tone, endeavor to show them the right way, explain to them, if they do not have the money when the payment is due, it is their duty to call at the office, and see the manager, who will gladly grant the extension should it be deserving. If an extension is worth having, it is certainly worth asking for, and the office is the place to get it.

Do not frighten or threaten them. Have the customer know that you are doing everything in your power to keep their credit good. We want them to know that it is a part of our service to keep their account in a perfect condition, and on a business basis.

Remember, boys, your business is to look up and approve loans, and collect slow accounts. Be a regular fellow, show the delinquent you are a human being, you are willing to listen to reason, that you are kind, considerate and just. You only want what is fair, reasonable and right. Win their confidence, teach them how to manage, show them how to finance, tell them how to pool all their little obligations. At all times impress upon their minds that "Good credit is better than gold." We feel that way about their credit with us. Let us be their banker when illness, out of work or death to a dear one comes.

No matter what their financial condition may be, the office is the place to explain it. Use tact, skill, be inventive, thereby getting the delinquent to call at the office, and explain his condition to the manager. This should be the sole thought of every outside man.

Immediate results are the things that count. Get the customer to the office, our Manager lays special stress upon us boys getting immediate results by having a customer call at the office in person in preference to telephoning.

A promise to pay given at the office carries far more weight than one over the telephone, therefore, we have a customer call at the office in person when asking for an extension in order that the manager may go deeper into the matter should he so desire. The impression is there.

GEORGE W. STANCILL. JR.

Mr. Stancill was complimented upon his paper by several members. After which a general discussion took place covering the importance of an outside man being thorough in his work.

Messrs. Young, Gardner and Hougham gave short but interesting talks upon how they enjoyed attending the National Convention at Louisville, Ky., especially so from a social and educational point of view.

No further business to transact, on motion by Mr. Turner, seconded by Mr. Baseman, the meeting adjourned until, Tuesday evening, at 7:30 p. m., on November 13, 1923.

H. C. MOORE, Secretary.

REPORT OF THE COMMITTEE ON SMALL LOANS AND INVESTMENTS TO THE EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE OF THE NATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF LEGAL AID ORGANIZATIONS AT NEW YORK CITY, OCTOBER 5, 1923.

As Chairman of the Committee on Small Loans and Investments, I desire to submit the following recommendation as to the proposed activity of the committee for the ensuing year.

The committee has conducted a careful national survey as to the situation throughout the various states, relative to small loan legislation. This survey indicates that in ten states there is in effect at present a uniform law which provides interest at the rate of 3½% per month on small loans, which law has the support of the Russell Sage Foundation and reputable welfare organizations in the various states affected, which are as follows:

Arizona, Connecticut, Georgia, Illinois, Indiana, Iowa, Maine, Maryland, Pennsylvania, Rhode Island, Virginia.

In nine other states there is in force at present a similar law, as follows:

Colorado, Massachusetts, Michigan, New Hampshire, New Jersey, New York, Ohio, Oregon, Utah.

The committee has been in Conference with representatives of the Russell Sage Foundation, the American Industrial Lenders Association, the Pennsylvania Industrial Lenders Association, the president of the American Industrial Lenders Association and the Chairman of the National Legislative Committee of this same association. The last state in which the 3½% law was enacted in Rhode Island, where it was passed in 1923, becoming effective January 1, 1924. In three additional states, West Virginia, Minnesota and Missouri an effort was made to pass the uniform 3½% law, but in each of these states it failed of passage. In the present year also, an amendment to the law in the state of New York, providing for 3½% interest rate was defeated.

This committee suggests to the Executive Committee of the National Association of Legal Aid Organizations that its efforts be concentrated on two purposes:

1. To coöperate with the Russell Sage Foundation and the American Industrial Lenders Association, toward bringing about the enactment of the 3½% law in the states which are determined upon by conference of these organizations in November. under the auspices of the Russell Sage Foundation.

2. That in all other states in which the uniform law, or a similar law, is not now in operation, that the Legal Aid Organizations shall, by forceful publicity and intelligent propaganda, direct public attention to abuses practiced by unscrupulous money lenders, charging rates in excess of 3½% per month; and that the Legal Aid Organizations also compile statistical data as to the evils arising from these usurious practices.

That the committee devote its energies toward carrying out this program is our recommendation.

Respectfully submitted,
ROMAIN C. HASSRICK,
Chairman Committee on Small Loans and Investments.

CAN YOU BEAT IT?

On October 25th one of our eastern members referred to J. A. Macbeth, manager of the Detroit Mortgage Loan Co., an account upon which there was a small balance past due since last July. On October 27th the account was seen, the money due collected, and the account closed and a check remitted to the sending member October 29th, reaching its destination the morning of October 31st. This incident is published merely to show the prompt service that is rendered to members, by Mr. Macbeth in Detroit and seems to justify the reputation that he has of being the best collector in the country. The question is, does membership in the A. I. I. A. and its affiliated state organizations pay? The answer is, it does!

FROM SINGAPORE.

The National Secretary,
The American Industrial Lenders Association, Harrisburg, Pa., U. S. A.

DEAR SIR:

I have received your letter dated 3d August together with a copy of your official organ and some other printed matter for which I want to thank you very much. I must say here that it is very kind indeed on your part to send me the official organ, etc., and I must say at the same time that I appreciate very much this help and coöperation of yours.

Very truly yours,
G. L. STODART.

FROM GLASGOW, SCOTLAND.

October 15, 1923.

DEAR MR. KEHR:

I am much obliged to you for your letter of the 28th September.

I am pleased to tell you that the printed matter you sent me reached me in good order, and was a source of considerable interest to our members. I feel, indeed, that if it were possible to arrange for the regular distribution of such literature among our members (for which, of course, they would no doubt be willing to pay) it would prove of great benefit to them in the conduct of their business.

At our next meeting I am putting forward the very kind offer of assistance in locating skips, and I will communicate with you again after that meeting.

Thanking you once again, and with all good wishes, I am, yours sincerely,

EARNEST GREENHILL.

CONVENTION ECHOES.

Re: the Louisville Convention, let me say that it seemed to me to be a success from any standpoint from which it could be viewed. One of the most enjoyable and interesting from both a social and business angle that I ever attended. I trust that you will be able to land Harrisburg as the location of the 1924 Convention, as I know you can and will put it across if given the opportunity.

ALAN K. DOLLIVER.

SPECIAL NOTICE.

In order that the Publicity Bureau may compile records of publicty, will each member forward all items of publicity, whether for or against the Industrial Loan business, or advise where they may be obtained, mail to

Let reverence for the law be breathed by every mother to the lisping babe that prattles on her lap; let it be taught in schools, seminaries, and colleges; let it be written in primers, spelling books, and almanacs; let it be preached from pulpits, and proclaimed in legislative halls, and enforced in courts of justice; in short, let it become the political religion of the nation.—Abraham Lincoln.

GEORGIA.

From the point of attendance, enthusiasm, and interest shown and the importance of the business transacted, the meeting held in Atlanta, November 14th, was without exception the biggest and best get-to-gether business meeting the Georgia Association ever held.

We had with us as our guest and counsel, Attorney Tillou Von Nunes of Atlanta. There were seven companies with representation of 18 men. Citizens Loan Company—Mr. Steimle, Mr. Wilson, Mr. Bell, Mr. Turner, Mr. Bowdon; Beneficial Loan Society—Mr. Snyder, Mr. Bryand; Southern Security—Mr. Lassiter, Mr. Harris; Seaboard Security Co.—Mr. McCollum, Mr. Maffett; Securities Investment Co.—Mr. Davis; The Masters Loan Service, Inc.—Mr. Madison, Mr. J. B. Madison, Mr. Worley; American Loan Co.—Mr. Dismer, Mr. Allen. Due to the illness in the families of Mr. Sharp and Mr. Adair, they were unable to be present.

The meeting was called to order by Chairman Madison at 8 p. m. By motion duly seconded and unanimously carried, roll call and the reading of the minutes of the previous meeting were dispensed with. Chairman Madison addressed the meeting, informing all present that from this meeting on, the Association must adhere strictly to the Association's constitution and by-laws, and that each and every man present should take an active part in all meetings.

Treasurer Snyder reported $22.37 in treasury, all bills to date paid.

American Loan Co., 406 Peters Bldg., Atlanta, Mr. Chas. T. Dismer, Mgr., unanimously elected to membership to Georgia Industrial Lenders Association. Dues to be paid beginning Jan. 1, 1923.

Mr. Steimle then gave a talk on some of the things necessary to make a successful Association, which in part Mr. Steimle stated:

"I am not going to take a lot of valuable time telling you what the Illinois Association or any other Association does. Will say a few words on what we, in Georgia, should do—that makes for a successful Association.

"1st. The first and above all important thing to remember in successful Association work is that everyone should and must have confidence in the other fellow and must maintain an unselfish attitude in everything he does in connection with the Association.

"2d. Hold frequent meetings. Insist upon every one participating, and by all means get the managers and outside men to attend.

"3d. Get prominent men to address us at least once a year. Get whenever possible newspaper notices of meetings. Appoint committees that will function. See that every one is acquainted. Invite the ladies at least once each year to attend meeting and furnish entertainment and a dance. Try to get the National Chairman to address us. Keep a cash reserve in treasury. See to it that our officers are fellows that will work. Keep things moving and inspire the other fellows."

After much discussion as to the holding of regular meetings in which the majority present participated, it was moved by Mr. Steimle and duly seconded by Mr. Maffett and unanimously carried that the Georgia Industrial Lenders Association hold their regular meetings once each month on the fourth Friday of month, beginning the fourth Friday in December, and that a banquet be held at some hotel, including speakers, entertainment, and dance, some time during the first two weeks in January, 1924.

By proper motion, Chairman Madison was authorized to appoint an entertainment committee to report in detail at next regular meeting. The chair appointed Mr. Lassiter, Mr. Maffett, Mr. Bryant, Mr. Harris, and Mr. J. Madison.

The matter of publicity was then discussed at some length. It was the consensus of opinion that notices of all meetings be gotten into the three Atlanta papers, also a brief story of meetings be published.

It was properly moved and seconded that the chair appoint a committee to get story of this meeting into the three papers immediately. The chair appointed Mr. Maffett and Mr. Dismer. Attorney Mr. Von Nunes voluntarily offered his service to this committee, which was appreciated very much.

It was proposed by Mr. Madison, Mr. Steimle, and Mr. Snyder that the Atlanta members of the Association join as a whole, the Atlanta Chamber of Commerce. A good half hour discussion of this subject was taken part in by several members. It was unanimously agreed that all Atlanta Association members should join individually, or in a body, that it would be the biggest thing the Georgia Association and the Industrial Loan business along the lines of favorable publicity could do.

It was properly moved and seconded that the chair appoint a committee to get full details from the Chamber of Commerce and report back at next meeting. Mr. Snyder and Mr. Steimle were appointed.

The next subject was one in which all members were very much interested and which brought about considerable discussion. A clearing house for loans of Atlanta members. It was the consensus of opinion that we should by all means organize a clearing house that will adequately meet the demands of the Altanta offices.

It was moved and duly seconded that the chair appoint a committee to formulate a plan for clearance house and report back in detail at next meeting. The chair appointed Mr. Lassiter, Mr. Steimle, Mr. Davis.

The special feature of this meeting was a question box. Each member to write on paper five questions pertaining to the business. The question box was full, but the hour was late. The secretary read several questions, which were discussed by all, and we all learned something. Attorney Tillou Von Nunes answered many questions on the legal phase of our business. A few of the questions are:

1. How many notices by mail should be sent a past due account, before sending a man on it?

2. Is it a violation of the law to make the endorser of a loan of $300.00 a separate loan of $300.00? Can you sue either party and recover?

3. To what extent in percentage do you think accounts are doubled up?

4. What recourse have we if security for loan is destroyed by fire?

5. What recourse have we in case of death of indorsers?

6. How may we coöperate with the merchants, professional men, and the business men in general in their present campaign against the dead-beat, slow pay, and the undesirable accounts in general?

7. How can we as individuals or as an organization enlighten the borrowing public against the high rate people? There are at the lowest estimate 10,000 persons representing $250,000 borrowed money from these concerns. This business rightfully belongs to the legal lender.

Attorney Von Nunes had to leave us at this time. It was moved and seconded that a rising vote of thanks be given Mr. Von Nunes.

After being notified that the doors of the building would be locked in fifteen minutes and not having provided beds, and with many questions still to be answered, a motion for adjournment was carried.

F. B. Snyder,
Secretary and Treasurer.

Mr. Madison, who was a delegate to the National Convention at Louisville, Ky., made a brief report on the proceedings at the Convention. He said in part that it was the most harmonious convention he ever attended, that much was accomplished in the way of a better understanding among members. That the many prominent guests in attendance delivered speeches worth while. He spoke highly of Mr. Reed, who as chairman of the Reception Committee spared neither time or money to make the members happy. Mr. Madison was delighted with the election of an old friend, Dr. Mueller, as National Chairman, and predicted a successful year with Mr. Mueller at the helm.

YEAR BOOK.

If there are no unfortunate delays, our members and others interested may expect to receive copies of our 1923 Year Book the latter part of December. In accordance with our usual custom, members in good standing in the National organization will receive complimentary copies as will public libraries and other public welfare organizations. Nonmembers engaged in the business for profit and others who wish to have copies of the book, which contains the proceedings of our last National Convention in Louisville, can obtain them upon application to the National Secretary by remitting the price of $1.00 per copy.

DECEMBER ISSUE.

The important meetings held by the Pennsylvania and Indiana Associations just previous to our going to press will be covered by interesting articles in our next month's issue.

SITUATION WANTED.

Position wanted, by a successful manager 38 years old, with ten years' experience in small loans and discount; honest and reliable. Can furnish bond and the best of references. Address Manager, Box 778, Harrisburg, Pa.

VOL. VIII, No. 6. DECEMBER, 1923. Price, $1.00 a year.

PENNSYLVANIA'S CONVENTION.

Pennsylvania lenders deliberately set out this year to make their annual state convention rival that of the national association, with what success they achieved there is no doubt in the minds of those who attended the eighth annual convention of the Pennsylvania Industrial Lenders Association in Philadelphia on November 21st.

The single day devoted to the sessions was crowded with business, which was transacted with the smoothness and dispatch of a railroad schedule on one of he crack trunk line systems. At every session there was a 100 per cent attendance, and the papers were short, snappy, attention-compelling and provocative of constructive discussion. Every committee charged with making arrangements for a phase of the convention's activities had functioned with so much efficiency that here was not a single hitch to mar the uccess of the convention.

The work of the entertainment committee was performed so thoroughly that a slight change was necessitated in the original program for the annual dinner n the evening. It had been planned to have dancing between the courses, but when reservations for the dinner came pouring in to the tune of four hundred diners it was necessary to postpone the dancing until after the dinner and the peech making, for the floor space of he Rose Garden of the Bellevue-Stratford hotel was just barely adequate to ccommodate the tables for the dinner uests.

To add to the interest in the convention, which the diligent efforts of E. F. Moore and the Publicity Committee of which he was chairman did much to timulate, the Executive Committee of he American Industrial Lenders Association, was in session in Philadelphia imultaneously, and the members attended he sessions of the convention.

The convention was called to order Wednesday morning promptly at 10:30 o'clock by Chairman Albert V. Hart in he south corridor auditorium of the oof. The reports of Treasurer P. B. Reeves, Secretary C. H. Watts, and E. F. Moore, Chairman of the Publicity Committee; A. S. Ezekiel, Chairman of he Entertainment Committee; and Charles G. Mueller, Chairman of the Membership Committee, were submitted nd adopted.

After announcing the appointment of Messrs. Kehr, Mitchell and Watts as a ommittee on Nominations to report on slate for officers of the Association for he ensuing year, Chairman Hart called or the regular order of the convention program. Z. P. Applegate, of the Guarantee Loan Company, of Philadelphia, read a paper on "The Advantages of a Forty-five Inch Office," explaining that by this was meant the office that did away with high partitions and closed rooms in which business with clients was transacted. Mr. Applegate's paper was a plea for the conduct of the lending business in the open, and he cited the favorable impression made on new applicants or prospective clients by an office so arranged that, while individual business with a client could be conducted without any sacrifice of a desired confidential character, there was one of the atmosphere of mystery and secretiveness that marked lending transactions of an earlier day. He believed that clients preferred the open and frank methods to the closed door methods, and characterized the latter as provocative of distrust and apprehension in the client.

Discussion of Mr. Applegate's paper was general and spirited. Arthur L. Wick, Philadelphia, spoke in support of the advocacy of open transactions, characterizing it as modern. H. P. Gatter, Philadelphia, while not pronouncing against it, raised the question as to whether customers prefer it. J. J. O'Neill, Allentown, declared for the open door as the thing in a lending office and Harry D. Holloway, Philadelphia, while asserting in a lending office that an air of too great secrecy was undesirable, said that the preservation of confidential relations must be considered and believed that a happy medium between extreme secretiveness and open transactions was to be sought.

From his experience with both the closed and open offices with the same clients, E. F. Moore, Philadelphia, declared he was convinced that clients regarded the latter as a big improvement in office methods, and said he viewed it as in line with the ideals of industrial lenders for the fullest knowledge of their business methods. He believed lenders could educate their clients to the desirability of open transactions. Mr. Hirsch, of the Jewish Charities, Philadelphia, in response to Mr. Hart's invitation for an expression, said his own organization in the plans for their new building had provided for both open and private offices for the negotiation of loans, to suit the preferences of borrowers. He believed there was no more reason for closed rooms in a lending company than in a bank.

Roy F. Hartz, Indianapolis, who was attending the sessions of the executive committee of the national body, responding to Mr. Hart's call, said he was for both the closed and open office, as preferred by the client, but believed that eventually all modern lending offices will be open. W. P. Woll, Chicago, declared unequivocally against compromise, and for the open office alone. Mr. Bates of Philadelphia, gave it as his experience that the open office was most desirable.

Following the discussion, William S. Wright, of the Atlas Loan Society, Philadelphia, read a paper on "How I Would Take An Application and Close a Loan."

Chairman Hart invited as discussion of Mr. Wright's paper the recital of experiences in making loans by those in attendance at the session. J. J. O'Neill, said that it was his experience that the wife nearly always made the preliminary arrangements when an application for a loan was to be made, leaving it for the husband to call later for the closing of the negotiations. He said that, although it was not strictly necessary, he had found it a valuable precaution to have a second witness to loan transactions. Mr. Halloway said that in such transactions he preferred to have the wife, rather than the husband sign the application. William Young Philadelphia, after questioning Mr. O'Neill as to the advantages of having two witnesses, declared himself as converted to the idea.

The morning session adjourned to luncheon in the adjoining room, at which the only speaker was Jacob Billikopf, of the Jewish Charities, Philadelphia, who was introduced by Mr. Watts. Mr. Billikopf described the work of his organization in making free loans. These loans, he said, had totalled more than $1,000,000 in a year, made at an overhead cost of $50,000 which was made up by philanthropists of the city. Borrowers in these circumstances, he said, were recipients of charity. Out of his own experience with the work of industrial lenders and their interest rates, he said that he realized the fairness and equity of their business, but he wondered whether in the future through mergers and economies it would not be possible to reduce the rate. He expressed his pleasure at the survey now being made for the Russell Sage Foundation by Dr. Louis N. Robinson, and hoped that on his findings a concerted effort will be made to inform the public in order to counteract prejudice. He believed, he said, that an intelligently directed and vigorously conducted campaign of this sort would develop the good will and understanding of the public toward the lending business.

A large percentage of applicants for loans, he declared, were deserving, but he feared that the tendency of loan institutions might be, to create chronic borrowing, unless the individual lender was impressed with the moral responsibility upon him to obviate the necessity of borrowing, if possible. Indiscriminate borrowing, he asserted, dulls the edge of thrift, and lenders can give service in many cases by constructive counsel no less than by the granting of loans.

At the afternoon session the report of the Committee on Nominations was submitted, and on their recommendation the following officers were elected by acclamation:

Chairman, W. S. Herron, Philadelphia; vice-chairman, P. B. Reeves, Pittsburgh, secretary, C. H. Watts, Philadelphia, re-elected; treasurer, A. S. Ezekiel, Philadelphia.

Executive Committee: E. B. Webster, Philadelphia, chairman; A. V. Hart, Philadelphia; V. D. Moss, Philadelphia; C. G. Mueller, Philadelphia; P. C. Hess, Philadelphia; and the four officers of the state association.

Mr. Hart, the retiring chairman, welcomed Mr. Herron to the chair and yielded the gavel to him. The first paper of the afternoon was by H. S. Davis, of the American Loan Company, Reading, on "Selling Service."

Chairman Herron called for experiences of those present, exemplifying service rendered clients over and above the mere providing of money in loans, and Mr. Lyons responded that the most unique and satisfying service he recalled rendering was bringing a man and wife together and inducing them to reconcile their differences. Mr. O'Neill told how his company had interceded with a furniture company for a client in whom they had confidence, when the furniture house was about to foreclose on him. The hard pressed client had evidently justified their faith in him, he added. F. G. Hart, Easton, told how he had referred a woman client seeking advice as to investments to a banker, while Mr. Kehr related the case of a woman who wished to borrow on her savings account. He had called up the bank and induced them to let her have the money, thus foregoing for his company the profit that would have accrued from a loan made to her.

Mr. Moore related an interesting instance of a case involving an investigation by an agent of his company in Belgium by which a woman client had been enabled to recover a considerable sum of money she had invested. H. E. Burt, Chester, told how a woman client, who stood to lose her husband's life insurance of $1,150 through a real estate deal she did not fully understand when making it, had been advised so that she was able to avert the loss of her money. J. G. Bachofer told of advice given clients as to their rights in controversies with landlords, and Roy F. Hartz, Indianapolis, and Mr. Burt both told of the opportunities for service to clients through the affiliations of lending companies with civic organizations, such as the Kiwanis, Rotary Clubs and the like.

Chairman Herron called Mr. Reeves to the chair while he read his paper on "The Future of the Small Loan Business."

Secretary Watts led the discussion of exchange bureaus, emphasizing their importance as a coöperative agency in guarding lending concerns from the impositions and frauds of dishonest persons and in adding to the efficiency of the companies.

Mr. Gatter after sketching the functions and purposes of exchange bureaus in locating "skips" and circumventing repeaters, explained the system of the Philadelphia Exchange Bureau and read the principal clauses in the articles of association adopted by the bureau.

Mr. Bachofer told of the organization and methods of the Reading Exchange and said that it was his experience that it functioned to the distinct benefit of the lending companies represented in it. Mr. Hartz claimed for the Indianapolis Bureau that it was one of the pioneers, having been in operation for twenty-two years.

At the close of the discussion the convention by a rising vote tendered the thanks of the association to the retiring chairman, Albert V. Hart, for his faithful and efficient services as its head. The thanks of the convention were also voted to Mr. Ezekiel, chairman of the Entertainment Committee, and its members. Messrs. Moss, Darragh, Lobb and Webster.

Mr. Davis of Reading, suggested that the members of the association consider the advantages of group advertising by lenders as a way to inform the public of the operations and purposes of the small loan business.

Chairman Herron, preliminary to declaring the convention adjourned, bespoke the coöperation of all the members to make his administration in the coming year a success, stating that only by the united efforts of the whole body of members could the aims and purposes of the association be realized in full measures.

The annual banquet was held in the Rose Garden on the roof of the Bellevue-Stratford. It was scheduled for half past six, but the throng of diners was so great that the elevator service of the hotel proved inadequate to carry them all up in time, and it was not until about seven that all were seated and dinner was served. There were four hundred seated, with many ladies among the guests and the large room was crowded to the very edge of the stage at the far end where Senator's Novelty Singing Orchestra and the Madrigal Singers gave musical selections as the courses were being served.

The menu cards, which in richness of effect were in keeping with the excellence of the menu itself, bore as its frontispiece an excellent portrait of Mr. Hart, the retiring chairman, together with the entertainment programme, the names of the evening's speakers, the officers for 1923, and the personnel of the Entertainment Committee. At each plate was placed a song sheet with the words of the popular songs that the diners joined in on in the interval between eating and listening to the set programme. As a surprise offering, Mr. Ezekiel called on Tate Harrison, of Waterloo, Iowa, a member of the American Industrial Lenders' Association Executive Committee, for a song and Mr. Harrison's melody was so pleasing to his hearers that they insisted on other numbers from him. "Bill" Young also was called upon for songs and his responses convinced his hearers that his likeness to Caruso extended beyond merely physical proportions.

With the serving of coffee and cigarettes came a distribution to the diners of many colored paper headdresses and toy balloons, which latter were tossed about in the air in all directions, until the upper reaches of the room resembled a firmament of rainbow colored planets. Favors of boxes of candies were distributed to each lady guest.

Mr. Watts presided as toastmaster with the same grace of manner, wit, and happiness of remark that has characterized his many other appearances, in the same capacity. Edwin R. Cox, former State Assemblyman and father of Pennsylvania's small loan regulation law, who was to have been one of the speakers, was unable to attend, the other speakers being J. Washington Logue, Philadelphia, former Representative in Congress, and Dr. Robert Norwood, rector of St. Paul's Memorial Church, Norwood, Philadelphia.

Mr. Logue's address on "Your Business Ideals" was an eloquent plea for the application of the principles of Americanism in the conduct of business. At the outset he spoke of the new day in the small loan field, where the lender is not the typical lender of an earlier day, hard, exacting and relentless, nor the borrower the cringing applicant for the use of funds in his necessities. The change in both types, he said, was in line with the development in this business, as in others, whereby the humblest worker has a share in the achievements of the great financial institutions and the financial genius, back of whom he stands, his meagre savings combined with those of his fellows making it possible for capital to do those great constructive things that mark our day.

Speaking of the commonality of interests that exists, he said that the humblest worker because of this is interested beyond his wages in the accomplishments of that institution or concern by which he is employed. Business ideals, he declared, are as important as philosophical or theoretical formulas in government. Lenders are the medium for providing credit for those who need it and are without the means for obtaining it through ordinary banking channels, bringing hope to the despondent through their faith and confidence in the integrity of the necessitous.

He sketched the intimate acquaintance the lender gains of human misery and necessities and the sympathy and capacity for service thus developed in him. Business ideals, he declared, must permeate the transactions between all men who are fair and honest in their dealings, and the American people must be a coöperative people, ready for service. He spoke for the dignity of labor and service as a way to contentment, rather than telling a worker how miserable he is because his destiny is to work for a wage. He saw as the true Americanism and a settling influence in the post-war dislocation a realization by each man and woman of the dignity and importance of the position of each one and their possibilities of service to their fellows.

Dr. Norwood spoke on "The Challenge of Life," stressing the responsibility placed upon each person by the particular environment in which he is placed, for he quoted the philosophical definition of life as "the individual's correspondence to its environment." The challenge of life to America, he said, was the nation's complete correspondence to its own environment of Democracy, to establish which men and women had fled the restrictions and persecutions of the old world.

THE ADVANTAGES OF THE FORTY-FIVE INCH OFFICE.

Z. B. Applegate, Manager Guarantee Loan Co., Philadelphia.

By the title is meant, waist high partitions, which have replaced the familiar seven foot partitions generally used in all Industrial Loan Offices.

My judgment as to the advantages of the 45 inch office is based on what I have seen and heard, during which time I have been impressed with the following facts:

The new applicant upon entering your office is immediately impressed by the open and frank manner in which the business is conducted. In other words, being able to observe everything that is going on, whereas before entering he might have been a little skeptical as to how we do business. It is reasonable to suppose, that this applicant never having applied before, is entirely ignorant of the closed rooms in the past, therefore, making it very easy to educate said party to the open office. The impression on the client upon entering the office and seeing seven foot partitions and the inner office obscure, makes it very difficult for the manager and his associates in "Selling Small Loan Business." Compare in your mind the conditions just mentioned and the 45 inch office—nothing hidden, and nothing obscure.

On the other hand, the old applicant, or recheck, must be educated to the new surroundings having previously had his business transacted behind closed doors. However, thus far the reader has encountered no difficulty in this respect, by reason of the fact that the forty-five inch office enables a person to carry on an ordinary conversation, answering personal questions without being overheard by those waiting. Furthermore, a number of old applicants have been questioned from time to time in regard to the open office, and the concensus of opinion has been favorable. The expression of opinion has been unanimous and about as follows: The office is open, brighter and more cheerful than heretofore, and all business is being conducted in an open, frank and unconcealed manner.

To quote verbatim one person who applied for position in the office in question approximately four years ago. "Upon entering the office, I was at once unfavorably impressed with the secretive appearance, due to the partitioned or enclosed rooms, and when being told to enter one of them, the door suddenly swung open as though manipulated by some unseen hand, giving me the impression of the presence of spooks. I at once doubted as to whether or not I would be satisfied in such a place. I discovered later, that the doors were opened by an overhead rope controlled by the manager. If an applicant for a position was so impressed, an applicant for a loan would be even more so." A point strongly in favor of the open office.

A gentleman with whom we had dealings for a number of years, brought to our attention an incident at the time of the change to the forty-five inch office, which has direct bearing upon the subject in question. The incident came to light after the change from the closed to the open office was made. While their dealings had always been satisfactory behind closed doors, it developed that when the first application was made and the wife on being told to enter the closed room, hesitated, feeling very uncomfortable and ill at ease, and on the verge of refusing to participate in the negotiation of the loan. With the advantages of the open office, no such conditions would have existed.

The closer relationship between clients, also between clients and company by reason of the forty-five inch office, is an advantage in that it creates a better understanding between them and dispels the feeling of hesitancy or that tendency to refrain from borrowing. For example, two applicants were in the closing rooms at the same time, and while in conversation with applicant number one, the wife remarked, there is Mr. A. and I don't think he wants us to know he is here. It developed later, that applicant number two was thinking the same thing, and upon leaving the parties in question mutually agreed that it was no disgrace to negotiate a loan, or to be in an office where legitimate business was being transacted. Another point strongly in favor of transacting business in the open office.

The present day tendency to transact business, especially banking matters, is in the open and to the front, which is in direct keeping with the fourty-five inch office. Since the loan company has nothing to conceal and most of the business of the world is transacted on paper, it is an advantage to encourage our clients to transact their business in like manner.

There are loan companies who advertise no publicity, confidential dealings, etc. Why should these conditions exist when we favor scrutiny? Why should we prejudice our patrons against the frank and open transaction of business by such advertisements, when within no feeling of concealment is permitted to exist.

I unqualifiedly recommend the forty-five inch office—based on my experience.

HOW I TAKE AN APPLICATION AND CLOSE A LOAN.

Wm. S. Wright, Manager Atlas Loan Society, Philadelphia.

My topic for this afternoon is one with which everyone here is familiar: "How I Take An Application and Close a Loan." An application for loan is what we receive only after we have spent considerable money in some form of advertising; consequently, it is my purpose to make the loan if at all a reasonable risk and a necessitous borrower.

When the applicant calls at the office, he is invited to have a chair in one of our private offices rather than interviewed at the cashier's window. This puts the applicant at ease and has a tendency to impress him that his transaction will be treated in confidence.

In some instances the applicant is very talkative and I take advantge of this by the means it affords of obtaining important information which is recorded on the application by me, previous to his signing same; the purpose being to procure as much data as possible concerning relatives, friends and other associations of the applicant. The advantages I find in taking numerous references is that it reduces skips—people will move just the same, but having given so many references they know you will have little difficulty in locating them and consequently it will have a tendency for their giving you personal notification in the event of a change of address. The names of the children attending school, their ages, the school, the grades and teachers, all will aid in the locating of a skip in the event of the scholar being transferred to a school elswhere in the city or out of the city.

The manner in which the applicant answers my questions and the methods employed by me to procure information that he might hesitate in answering were I to ask him direct questions, enabled me to determine the character of the applicant, which is one of the essential qualifications to borrow money and in determining that the chattel will justify a complete expectation of getting the money back. It also enables me to check up the reports which I have received from my appraiser and it confirms the fact that I have interviewed the same applicant that the appraiser has.

The application is then handed to the prospective customer to read over and sign. In order to arrive at my final conclusions, I compare the application with the appraiser's report; If I then decide to close the loan, I draw my papers in the presence of the customer and properly fill in the pass book, leaving no blanks to be inserted after customer leaves the office, giving him a pass book also a rate slip. After the papers are executed by the customer I witness their signatures in their presence, place the proper amount of revenue stamps on the note (cancelling same) and then explain to the customer the dates and amounts which will be due monthly, both as to principal and interest, making sure to impress him with the importance of his installments being made promptly. It is well to specify that if payments are mailed, he should always forward his pass book; to remit by check, Post Office Money Order, Express Order and when remitting by currency to always register the letter. I then pass the money over to the borrower and ask if everything is perfectly clear and if there is anything that is not understood to not hesitate to ask questions, which will be explained further.

In dismissing the customer it is an appropriate time to inform him that if any of his friends should require a service such as ours, upon recommendation or his referring them to us we should be pleased to serve them likewise.

SELLING SERVICE.

H. S. Davis, Manager American Loan Company, Reading.

Within the memory of many of those present, when Big Business frequently assumed the "Public Be Dammed" attitude, and the word "Service" was not so generally in use as it is to-day, I very often took up a newspaper or magazine, just as you and I do to-day, to study the advertisements. Invariably the ad of some one firm would grip my attention and impress me above all the others. In trying to find out the reason for this, an analysis usually disclosed that, while the average advertisement dwelt upon "low price," superiority of our goods etc., the other outstanding message emphasized the "you" and "service." One intuitively felt that the one aim of this house was to please the customer and to make friends, realizing this to be the surest way to create a lasting market for their wares.

Every man should believe with all the intensity of his being that he can render some one service to the world better than any other man. Then he must deliver. He must not only believe unquestionably in his ability to do his own particular work, but this belief must express itself in "Service." And as this is true of the individual, so also is it true of a group of individuals or an association of such groups, such as this "State Association of Licensed Lenders." The time has come for us to be, as a certain writer said some years ago "Master-Egotists." We must stand out individually and collectively, without fear, with no thought of apology but with a firm conviction that we render one service in this world better than anyone else. And the world will accept us—you and me—if we make good, if we render that service for which we are established, honestly, conscientiously, fearlessly, considerately,—well. We have a place in the world of finance, in industry, in the field of service which no one can better fill in our community than we, the Licensed Lenders of Pennsylvania. But while we know this, does the world at large know it? I said the world will accept us if we make good. Are we as individuals doing all we should, in the way we should, to make good in that one particular which will prove to the folks in our own community that we are worthy of their confidence, their esteem, their recognition and respect; that we are a necessary part of the social and industrial structure of the community. To my mind this can best be done by service. While we are primarily in business for profit, we must not concentrate our whole attention on the goal and lose sight of the condition we may be in when we arrive, nor fail to take heed of those who are traveling the same road, whether as client or competitor. The farseeing loan man of to-day is the one who, in the pursuit of his business does not say farewell to kindliness, gentleness, honesty and the Golden Rule, but who uses his merchandise—money—only as the vehicle which permits him to deliver a real-helpful service to his fellowman.

The National Banks and Trust Companies of to-day, to which business we are closely related, are probably the most agressive and wide-awake in the matter of business development, and the most successful of them are those that give the most consideration and thought to better service to the public. They have long ago realized that they must merit and retain the good-will and confidence of their depositors if some other bank is not to win their business away from them. They have learned by experience that, other things being equal, the bank giving service as it is known to-day is assured of success and a large volume of business.

We also have a service to deliver if we hope to succeed permanently. Yesterday we had no competition. The field was ours exclusively, and as is frequently the case, we sometimes became careless in our methods. We simply sold money, hoping that we would be fortunate or clever enough to get it back. To-day we have keen competition, not only from our competitors in the association, but from so-called philanthropic concerns, who make loans at a lower rate of interest than we possibly can do and continue in business.

How are we to retain our business in the face of this ever-growing competition? We cannot consider reducing our present rates. Then what is the answer? It seems to me our best bet is to give the borrowing public something that our competitors are not giving them, and that is real money service. And to me this service means something more than fitting up an office where application can be made, loans closed and payments received. That is the necessary part of the service, of course, but beyond this we must be ready to extend to our customers on unselfish, friendly help in time of trial and tribulation; advise them honestly; help them out of trouble, but never permit our desire for business to get them into greater trouble—in other words, practice the good old-fashioned Golden Rule. Let the customers know that when they come to our offices they are amongst friends, that we are interested in their welfare beyond the matter of making them a loan.

If we honestly do this, we shall not only retain our business, but we will also build up a following that will help us in our educational work amongst the non-borrowing public. It is conceded that a goodly portion of our new business comes to us through the recommendation of our satisfied customers, so that from a purely selfish standpoint it is good business, and the number of referred customers we secure may well measure the confidence and good-will of our customers, and our ability to deliver the kind of service that will make our business one that we can justly feel proud of.

If the loan business is to be recognized by the public not only as legalized, but as an honorable and necessary business, and if those in it are to succeed greatly, they must have one end in view always; that of serving the small borrowing public in the best and most helpful way. And this must be a real, honest-to-goodness service, delivered to each and every individual with whom we come in contact, and not a platitude to be used in our advertisements and in after-dinner speeches. Our business—the making of small loans—will be made what you and I desire it to be—and what we make it.

THE FUTURE OF THE SMALL LOAN BUSINESS

W. S. Herron, Manager Hamilton Loan Society, Philadelphia.

The future of the small loan business is not a problem to be guessed at but an assured fact if you men so desire.

The good you can do for your fellow man—future in life is far beyond our present endeavors. Now we are looking to the preservation and perpetuation of our business and the making of profit for our firm, but that is not all there is in our business. There are more beautiful things in back of this thing we call business, and if we try and look for the background we can rest assured of the perpetuation of Industrial Lenders.

A few short years ago we all threw up our hands in horror at the thought or mention of State Supervision, and the small rate of interest permitted by law. We said we all must go out of business with such regulation, but no; the hill which looked so high in the distance was not even a stepping stone to the beautiful things beyond.

So it is to-day, there are things now facing us which are not being forced upon us, that are not only going to be the stepping stone to better things, if we grasp them when we have the opportunity, but will place our business before the public at large in an entirely different light than it now is.

Just picture for an instant your present customers bringing deposits in your office making regular monthly payments for saving and receiving a good return on their savings. Can you not see the vast volume of good you will be doing them, can you picture your office on the corner where thousands pass your door every day with your sign stating you are an Industrial Lender also saver.

We talk to our friends and say we are Industrial Bankers. Just what does that mean? Are we ashamed to say Lenders or are we merely voicing our future field? I think we are voicing our future, because if we practice what we are now preaching we will gradually drift to the higher plane and be Bankers in reality to the needy and in a greater sense than we now are, that is the financing of the public to buy their homes which we are now doing to a limited extent.

Then there is the financing of the man who has a good business ability and a good idea who wants to start a small business! You will say we are doing all of these things—but are you doing them as much as you should do, being you are Industrial Bankers?

Then there is a greater financing yet; the customer who is actually down and out; no furniture, no security, nor any tangible asset; we can say the risk is too great—I cannot see any way to safely make that loan—how can I collect what they owe us? There is a way, gentlemen, but it is up to us as bankers to find it. The banker usually finds a way to take care of his business man who needs additional capital to pull him through; even though now he owes a number of creditors;—and if he was forced to liquidate he could not do so and meet all of his creditors at par.

The same condition faces us in financing the smaller borrower. And we, as practical Bankers of the necessitous persons, as our law recites, must find the way and means of doing so. Think of the prestige it would give our companies if we could say to the public—we save your money for you and pay you a high return on it the same as any bank or trust company, and also lend you money for any legitimate purpose.

Think of the happiness we can bring to our fellow-man by helping him in his time of trouble, placing him on an equal footing with his friends and neighbors without forcing him on charity.

I believe you men read in the papers of some of the good work done by one of our fellow workers in the loan business, how they, as a charitable organization, had started a number of new arrivals in this country in business,—now they are on the road to become useful and beneficial citizens in their various communities. You say we do the same, but, gentlemen, we are not doing it as much as we should because we are looking too much to the safety of our principal and the making of money for our employers. I could name hundreds of other worthy causes to which we could lean a little and broaden the future of the loan business and at the same time create an interest in the public which would be very beneficial to our cause for perpetuation and preservation of our most wonderful business.

Sweets, gentlemen, are always appreciated more when we get a taste of the bitter—so now for a shot of vinegar!

If we ignore all the beautiful things which we have before us and continue in our same old rut making money without any thought of better things—we can feel assured of adverse criticism from nonbelievers in our organization and policies. And what shall be the outcome? First—unfair criticism—and that means all of our educational work for better understanding of our business gone for good; public sentiment against us, especially if we go advertising promiscuously having paid dividends to our organization of a hundred percent and better;—they will say if they can pay that rate to their owners they would be better off charging the poor borrower less money for interest. It will grow so rapidly that the old flame burning or now smouldering under the name of 'Loan Shark', will again be heard.

Legislators will, as you men know, be guided by public opinion and frame laws accordingly, even though they are unfair, and the consequence will be either a rate that is too low to operate or the complete elimination of the small lender as a nuisance to a community, and a menace to society,—or else back to the old game. And gentlemen, I, as a licensed lender will not stay in the game if I have to go back to the old methods of operating.

Think it over gentlemen, do you want a more beautiful business, a larger future with a real banking institution,—or do you want to go back to old times?

The future of the loan business is in your hands!

MASSACHUSETTS.

The third annual meeting of the Massachusetts Industrial Lenders Association, was held at Hotel Bellevue, Boston, at 1:00 P. M., Thursday, October 18th.

Chairman Pool of Boston presided. Twelve members attended the meeting, one from the western part of the state.

The officers and the different standing committees made their yearly reports, all of them were approved as rendered.

D. J. Wholey of Lowell, delegate to the National Convention, read a very interesting account of the doings at the National Convention.

W. E. Pool of Boston read a report of the activities of the association for the past year, then tendered his resignation as member of the Executive Committee.

It was voted to hold the meetings quarterly on the third Thursday, instead of monthly as heretofore.

During the meeting a recess was called, the Executive Committee went into session and elected the following officers for the coming year:

Chairman, Charles S. Beatty, 262 Washington, St., Boston; vice chairman, D. J. Wholey, 7 Merrimac St., Lowell; treasurer, G. A. Ingalls, 181 Tremont St. Boston; secretary, H. J. Desormaux, 96 William St., New Bedford. The above officers and the following comprise the Executive Committee:

F. McConville, 453 Washington St., Boston; W. J. Baldwin, 262 Washington St., Boston; Benjamin Parker, 27 School St., Boston.

The retiring chairman, Mr. Pool, was given a vote of thanks for his untiring efforts and valued services to both our association and the National Organization. H. J. Desormaux, Secretary.

RHODE ISLAND.

The regular meeting of the Rhode Island Industrial Lenders Association was held at the Providence Biltmore Hotel, Thursday, November 1st at 7:15 P. M.

The meeting was called to order by Chairman Wood, and those present were Edward J. Littlefield, Deputy Commissioner, Warren L. Offer of the Banking Commissioners Office, C. H. Watts of Philadelphia, A. L. Wick of Philadelphia; W. G. Wood of the Household Loan Company Providence, J. H. Wickstrom of the Peoples Finance Service Company Providence, J. Moran of the Mutual Finance Service Company Providence, G. E. Rich of the Mutual Loan Association, Pawtucket, J. R. Smith of the Blackstone Loan Company, Pawtucket, H. T. Chase of the Peoples Loan Company, Providence, H. G. Neal of the L. E. Chester Company, Providence, F. N. Kennon of the Peoples Finance Service Company, Pawtucket, F. A. Pomfret of the National Loan Company, Pawtucket, J. S. Lester of the Economy Loan & Investment Company, Providence and Mr. J. S. Dwight of Dwight & Company, Providence.

The secretary reports eleven members in good standing.

Four new members were elected at this meeting and were given a hearty welcome by those present.

On motion made by Mr. Pomfret, Mr. H. G. Neal was elected Treasurer and was authorized to open a bank account in which the funds of the association be placed. Members were advised to make checks payable to the Attorney General or the Bank Commissioner when applying for license.

On motion of Mr. Watts, seconded by Mr. Chase, a committee of two men were appointed to employ an attorney to draft papers which will meet the approval of all members.

Mr. Chase is to furnish the various forms from the different offices so that an opinion can be given on what would be considered satisfactory papers to meet the approval of the Banking Department.

Mr. Littlefield Deputy Commissioner assured the members that it was his desire to help in every way to bring about cordial relations between the Department and Lenders, and stated while he knew few mistakes would be made at first, if the Lenders showed good intent and are desirous of upholding the law to the best of their ability, he felt sure that no friction would occur to the extent of his having to forcibly use his influence.

Mr. Watts thanked the officials of the Banking Department for their willingness to coöperate with the Lenders and is positive that they are our friends and that the members could go to them for counsel at any time.

The Lenders, he assured, would not only live up to the spirit of the Law, but would be mentally prepared to circumvent any causes or influences that have a tendency to evade or disregard the Act to regulate the business.

The perfect harmony between the Lenders and Banking Commissioners that manifested itself throughout the meeting was an indication that everyone would work together for the common weal and welfare of the Small Loan Business.

A rising vote of thanks was given to Edward J. Littlefield, Deputy Commissioner and Warren L. Offer of the Banking Commissioners Office.

Mr. C. H. Watts of Philadelphia mentioned that the Pennsylvania Association will hold its yearly meeting November 21st and would tender an invitation to any member that could attend.

No definite date was set for the next meeting as it was decided to hold same depending on the celerity of the various committees. J. H. WICKSTROM, Sec.

MARYLAND.

A business meeting of the Maryland Industrial Lenders Association was held in the Board Room of the Merchants and Manufacturers Association Building, No. 22 Light Street, Baltimore, Maryland, on Tuesday evening, November 13, at 7:30 P. M.

Among those present were: Messrs. C. A. Gardner, United Finance & Security Corporation, W. J. Delcher, Jr., W. C. Bookman, H. C. Moore, Peoples Finance Service Company, C. R. Hathaway, Household Finance Service Company, J. E. Turner, Leroy Busch, Community Finance Service Company, E. E. Hougham, Howard Hood, Coöperative Loan and Investment Company, H. H. Larsen and A. L. Wick, of Philadelphia, Pa.

Chairman Gardner gave an interesting report covering the "Open Form Letter" recently published by one of our local newspapers. Mr. Gardner said he had a personal talk with the author in which our business was thoroughly explained, comparison being made with other business, clothing, installment furniture, drugs, candy, etc. The writer of this letter happens to be in the clothing business, and Mr. Gardner called his attention to the enormous profit made by the clothing people, explaining to him the only material difference in our business was that the borrower knew exactly just what the loan would cost him but he did not know as to what the actual profit was on candy, clothing, drugs and other necessities. The profit on the latter articles in a good many cases is far in excess of a small loan.

This gentleman being of a socialistic frame of mind, would not admit that he was impressed with the fairness of American business.

After receiving Mr. Gardner's thorough report on this subject, we decided this gentleman has had sufficient education to let the matter rest.

The matter of incorporating the Maryland Association was voted on and unanimously carried.

The secretary was requested to write Mr. Geo. W. Kehr, National Secretary, inviting the A. I. L. A. to hold their next convention in Baltimore, Md., as the guest of the Maryland Association.

Baltimore is a very old historical city, a city having an ideal location for a convention. We have many places of interest, beautiful parks, art galleries, beautiful churches, an ideal harbor, wonderful excursion trips can be taken daily, during the Summer and Fall months, down the Bay. Hotel accommodations that cannot be surpassed. "BALTIMORE IS THE PLACE FOR THE NEXT CONVENTION."

Upon motion of Mr. Wick seconded by Mr. Hougham, the next monthly meeting to be held in January, to be in the form of a midday luncheon, followed by an open forum meeting, Carried. Advance notice of this Luncheon will be sent in due time for each member to be present.

The remainder of the evening was devoted to ways and means of collecting delinquent accounts. The outside men talked on the advantages of salary assignments, their experience in filing assignments, their success in collecting accounts in this manner in preference to replevin of the household furniture. A salary assignment never works hardship on the home, while a replevin works hardship on the client's family. It is pleasing to know few assignments are filed. Most people in borrowing money use it in the home, pay taxes, insurance and for other worthy purposes. In borrowing money for a good cause, it is in most cases paid back as rapidly as possible. H. C. MOORE, Secretary.

(Kokomo Dispatch)

After speaking favorably of the community spirit of Kokomo, C. H. Stratton, of Sullivan, former president of the national organization of industrial lenders spoke as follows at the banquet of the Indiana Industrial Lenders Association at the Coutland hotel yesterday noon:

"I am going to make the statement that the small loan business is as little understood by the public as any other business conducted in these United States. If I were to ask you men, who are our visitors to-day, how much you know about the small loan business no doubt your reply would be very little. If I were to tell you that in this good town of Kokomo outside of your banks and manufacturing plants there is probably more money invested in the small loan business than in any other kind of business, you would hardly believe me but I dare say this statement is true. This is a condition that not alone prevails in Kokomo but in every other section of Indiana and other states where the Uniform Law is in force, which proves the demand for the service and which will be met with fair and just laws.

"The loaning of money is more or less of a confidential business. When you go into a bank to borrow money, every live one borrows at times, there are no exceptions, you step up to the cashier's window. make your wants known in a tone of voice that will not attract attention or be heard by bystanders. You are a little particular that the general public does not know about your personal financial affairs. This same condition exists more or less in the small loan business. Now if one buys a new automobile the family at once appears in it and the public is given notice of the fact that the automobile dealer has sold a car. When a woman buys a new hat or coat she is at once seen upon the street with it which is notice to the world that a merchant has sold some merchandise. When a family fits up a new home with new furnishings the friends and neighbors are invited to a house warming which gives notice to them that the house furnishing concern has sold some merchandise. But when a man borrows money he does it quietly and the public seldom knows about it.

"The small loan business has in reality been a business only ten years in Indiana. In the spring of 1913 the Indiana legislature passed a bill regulating to some extent and legalizing the business. Before that date the business was not recognized as a business and while there were thousands of small loans made it could not really be called a business because of the fact that it was not recognized in law. The act of 1913 legalized the business and was a step in the right direction. This law remained upon the statute books for four years or until 1917 when along came Mr. Ham representing the Russell Sage Foundation of New York City with a bill which they called the Uniform Small Loan Bill. The Russell Sage Foundation is an organization endowed by the Sage millions. It is not an organization for profit but one to ferret out the needs of the public along various lines and to endeavor to bring about reforms which in their opinion are good for the general public. After years of research coupled with experience they drafted this new bill with the idea of leaving no loopholes in it whereby the provisions of the bill would have a double meaning and allow the intention of the law to be ignored. Recognizing the great need of the public for the small loan business, the Sage Foundation endeavored to prepare a bill that when it became a law it would be fair to both borrower and lender. It was their purpose of making the cost to the borrower just as small as the money could be loaned by the lender and give a fair return to the lender on the capital invested. While they were trying to give his service to the borrower at a minimum cost still they recognized the fact that in order to attract capital in sufficient quantities to meet these demands the lender must have enough income to pay dividends. It was not the purpose of the Sage Foundation to drive the lenders out of business but to encourage legitimate service to the public to meet a legitimate demand at the minimum cost to the borrower. When Mr. Ham came to Indiana during the session of the legislature to present his bill, some three or four of us loan men—I happened to be one of them—went over it with him, in detail examining same from every possible angle trying to anticipate how it would work if passed and it took quite a lot of argument to convince us that the bill if passed would not put us out of business.

"Well, to make a long story short the bill was passed and became effective by the proclamation of the governor, I think in May, 1917. Indiana was the first state in the Union to pass this bill. Since that time fifteen or twenty other progressive states have passed this bill or one practically the same and have it now in force. In every state as well as in Indiana where this Uniform Law has been enacted the results have been most remarkable. The unscrupulous and irresponsible lenders have disappeared and we have in their stead to-day something like one hundred and twenty-two licensed and well-organized responsible companies all bonded and under the supervision of the state banking department. Our books are open to the department at any and all times and the very closest coöperation between the loan companies and the department is maintained. We have a State Loan Association to which most of the licensees of this state belong and each member of this association pledges to use every honorable means to induce all persons or companies engaged in the lending of money on salary or chattel security to observe the rate, terms and methods as fixed by state statutes and to protect all deserving people against the payment of interest higher than that provided by law. Our membership consists of men of the very highest type and character to be found in the state, in any trade or profession, barring none.

"Any business that is giving honest service to the people is entitled to a fair return on invested capital. That our business is hazardous no one will dispute. We loan money constantly on insufficient security and in many cases where there is practically no security except a man's word.

"To more than 70 per cent of the families there comes a time when a small loan will be of inestimable value to them. It tides them over in emergencies of sickness, unexpected expense, unemployment, when financial assistance is keenly needed and in most cases at once.

"The overhead and losses in connection with making small loans is tremendous. All loan companies make loans quite often in which the overhead in connection with the loan is more than the interest charge can ever be. We know it when the loan is made but we are giving a special service and feel duty-bound to take care of this obligation. For example a man wants $15.00 for thirty days. There is no expense fee that we can charge, only the interest. The interest on $15.00 for thirty days is fifty-three cents (53c). In order to make this loan it is necessary for us to examine this man's personal property which requires a visit to his home or place of business. Then a mortgage must be written up and signed. Then we give him the money and the transaction is recorded on our books and when it is paid off it is carried through again. All of these transactions take the time of a clerk who is paid a good salary because we must have capable and responsible help in our offices. The larger loans and for longer periods of time evens this up somewhat and allows us to make these smaller loans at a loss, which we do, in order to give the service which the law intends.

"Realizing the fact that the general public know very little about our business the State Association has now under way a publicity campaign, the object of which is to give the public a better understanding of the small loan business and to acquaint them with our purposes and desires. The association members want to give honest, conscientious money service to the small borrowers in Indiana. We want to give this service at a cost to the borrower so that he may profitably use our money. At the same time our charges must be sufficient to pay operating costs and leave a fair profit. This, any legitimate business is entitled to and no more. Right is right and must in the end prevail.

"We believe in strict regulation under state supervision for the reason that supervision will not hurt any honest concern and one that is dishonest should be found out and thrown into the discard.

"I had the privilege and distinguished honor of serving for two years as National President of the American Industrial Lenders Association and therefore feel that I am in a position to speak the sentiments of those men representing the small loan business over the United States wherever legalizing laws have been enacted and I want you to know that it is their desire to conduct their business along lines that will bear the closest scrutiny and investigation. It is their desire to take their place in the business life of the nation and to make it possible for every worthy, deserving person to borrow small sums of money within their own resources and on a basis that is fair both to lender and to borrower. I certainly appreciate this opportunity of being your guest to-day and to enjoy the hospitality of your wonderful city and in behalf of both the State and National Associations, I thank you."

PHILADELPHIA, PA.

Nov. 23, 1923.

Dear Mr. Watts:

Let me place myself on record in regard to the state conference of the Pennsylvania Industrial Lenders Association, and incidently pay my respects to those who were directly responsible for the working out of the details of the day.

The papers read, in every case, were not only instructive to the commercial lenders, but I found them of great value and applicable to the work of this office. The men who contributed by the writing of the various theses, showed uncommon good sense and thorough knowledge of the business. But, above all, I feel that the greatest compliment that could be paid your profession, was the constant search for new avenues of service which you, as a body, wish to render the public you serve. It is quite evident that the Lenders want to be more than mere changers of money, and that they want to dignify their profession by giving more than cold cash on ample security, and that the question of dollars and cents, if not secondary, at least is not the all important work you want to render.

I do not know what the trend is among lenders in other states, but surely in Pennsylvania, a higher development of the business along ideal lines may be anticipated. Many thanks indeed, for the opportunity afforded me and for the courtesy shown throughout the day.

Sincerely yours,

Wm. Hirsch,
Managing Director,
The Federated Loan Association.

EVERYDAY CREDIT.

Looking over recent statements of the extent to which credit figures in our everyday life, we might conclude that Americans have changed the late divine Williams's sentence to: "Either a borrower or a lender be." The man who is never in debt is almost unknown. The mortgage, once the excuse for the stage villain, all teeth, cuffs, cigarets and spats, is as common now as the front door, and as useful and unconcealed. Most persons buy motor cars on credit. The butcher and baker, the merchant and club, the gas and the electric light company, they are our creditors 365 days a year, except leap years.

In large affairs, credit is more extensive than in small. Give a statistical sharp enough low-down information and pencils, and he could probably prove that, the wealthier a man becomes, the larger grow his financial obligations. That "bourgeois fear of owing money," to which the person who ought to pay his debts blithely refers, is as strange now to the poor man as to the rich. The tenant and the landlord meet there on common ground. They merely owe to different creditors.

Because everybody wants credit constantly, the machinery for supplying it is available everywhere. The instalment plan, which we once considered the last refuge of the poor is often, nowadays, the first thought of the well-to-do. The most reputable industries have utilized it. The credit unions are spreading everywhere. Massachusetts has a hundred of them, there is another hundred in New York, and even conservative North Carolina possesses thirty-three. At the urge of the Russell Sage Foundation, eighteen states have passed a uniform law, limiting to three and a half per cent the monthly interest on small loans. A rough estimate is that 95 per cent of American business is on a credit basis, and about 90 per cent of that is transacted by check.

In short, credit is about the cheapest thing in the United States to-day. It has been called often the lubricant of business. It is both a lubricant and a fuel.—The Boston Herald, Nov. 16, 1923.

BALTIMORE CAPTURES 1924 CONVENTION

After considering numerous invitations, the National Executive Committee unanimously decided at its meeting in Philadelphia last month, to hold the next National Convention in Baltimore, Maryland, September 24th, 25th, 26th, 27th, with the Belvidere Hotel as the probable headquarters. For a long time Baltimore has desired to entertain the National Convention, because Maryland was among the first states to become organized and see the proper regulation of the small loan business. In Howard Bryant, Esq., Maryland has had a staunch supporter of the Uniform Small Loan Law not only in his own state but in other states where the law has been advocated. He has addressed National Conventions on a number of occasions and each time has impressed his hearers with his earnestness in his desire to see a realization of the ideals for which our State and National Associations stand.

Baltimore in itself is an attractive city with beautiful suburbs and parks. It has good railway and hotel facilities, is situated on the Chesapeake Bay, which affords an opportunity for delightful boat rides. It is the home of many important industries and institutions, and is only about an hour's ride from the National Capital.

Public officials, including the governor down, have testified publicly that they believe in the men and objects which are back of our State and National organizations.

HOW TO EDUCATE YOUR CUSTOMERS TO PAY PROMPTLY.

By Homer O. Stone, Crawfordsville, Indiana.

The subject: "How to Educate Your Customers to Pay Promptly," as having been assigned me by our President, Mr. Davies, is as old as the Loan Business and as yet, unsolved to a great degree of success. Why this subject was given me I cannot say as we have our share of delinquents and past due customers just the same as the rest of you. I have no unique plan or method whereby we can get a customer to pay more promptly other than those being used in all other loan offices to-day.

Getting back to our assignment, "How to Educate Your Customers to Pay Promptly," I am going to deviate from the subject and begin with the making of the loan.

The one thing you should look for in loaning money to any man is CHARACTER. This has been said many times and cannot be said too often. But Character is not everything. The finest and best meaning in the World may be lacking in business sense. Before a loan can be made thoroughly sound, one must feel that the borrower's business record and present assets are such that they justify a complete expectation of getting the money back with interest.

In making a loan, three things are required, viz.: See that the applicant has plenty of unincumbered security, (plenty means at least three and one-half times the amount of the loan). Second: Investigate thoroughly the man's earning power together with his willingness to pay.

Most any man should be able to do these two things as the Court Records stand open to all who take time to investigate them, together with the information one can get from the borrower's employer. But how to educate your customer to pay promptly is another question more difficult than the rest and begins with the making of the loan and continues throughout the life of each individual account.

At the time of making of loan, we come to an understanding with the borrower just how the account is to be paid and no detail is left out; prompt payments can only be expected from a customer who thoroughly understands the loan he has taken out. How same is to be paid, date of payment, amount due, etc. Some men may say on a $100.00 loan, "20x$5.00 interest, $3.50 per month, sign here; here is your money less recording fee; good-day." That customer leaves your office wondering just what you have said to him and is in constant worry until payment time comes, then he sends or brings $5.00 payment, thinking that is what is epected of him. This man brings just the amount he understood you to say, 20 x$5.00.

One should explain that the payment is so and so on principal, besides the interest, and we find it a good idea to tell all customers just what their next payment will be and the date due.

Before the customer leaves we impress on their minds that payments are due on certain dates and that the Company expects and demands that they be made just as they are drawn up in the mortgage, explaining to them that we, as Managers and Assistants, have no power to change a given set of rules.

At all times show an interest in your Customers, counsel with them in matters they may inquire about that they will not dread to enter your office at paying time. "A customer who regards the Loan man as his friend will pay promptly."

We never ask customers if they desire to pay on their principal or how much, thereby leaving the impression that they can pay as they desire, but put payment down as listed, stating your payment will be so and so to-day. The customers admire a man who is friendly yet firm.

In the event of sickness or death, we permit our customers to cut the size of payment at their request, thereby gaining their good will, but informing them that the missed payments will be expected before maturity of account.

We also explain to the borrower that prompt payments will give the Company confidence in them and insure another loan in the future or increase on present account. A little praise now and then of a customer who warrants same is a very good idea, and you will be surprised how he will try and meet his payments on date due or before.

Some loan men may say we refuse payments unless payments are made as listed. I say, take what they have, providing they have a reasonable excuse. In demanding something that they haven't, you either lose their good will or cause them to go elsewhere and borrow, either paying you off or getting deeper in debt. So, if a customer is assured of a cold reception, when he enters your office, unless he has the exact amount of payment due, do not blame him for failing to come on payment date.

We also hear loan men say we have no slow accounts or delinquent customers, neither do we have any trouble in getting our customers to pay promptly. Just mark the reason down as this: That man is too conservative in picking his customers, thereby losing many good prospects or he lives in a Loan Man's Utopia.

When our customers fail to call on payment date, we give a reasonable length of time, then call by phone if possible; if no phone is available, we write. This failing to bring them in, we call in person and continue to do so, until the average customer's pride begins to hurt; they will then call or send payments more promptly.

We never threaten our customers to get them to pay until a last resort, if then they are such that we do not care to carry longer and only desire to shift. "A good customer will pay on or before date due, keeping in mind the fact that any man who meets his obligations before he has to is doing some very valuable self advertising."

In conclusion would say that the one thing that will cause our customers to pay more promptly is: Never make a man a larger loan than he is able to take care of, make the loan in accordance with his earning power, considering the amount of money left after living expenses have been deducted. If we will be more careful in not overloading our customers and investigate character more thoroughly, our payments will come in more promptly.

This paper was discussed by L. L. Bishop and O. J. Parker. The one good point brought out was to be prompt in rendering service to the customer.

GEORGIA LENDERS ASSOCIATION TO HOLD BANQUET.

The Georgia Association is making great preparation for their banquet to be held at the Ansley Hotel, Atlanta, Georgia, Friday evening, January 11, 1924.

Mr. C. G. Mueller, National Chairman, and three of the highest State Officials of Georgia will be present and address this assembly. We will have as guests several other eminent Georgians.

A six-piece orchestra, and the finest quartet in the South will entertain, while we will keep time eating the finest southern chicken dinner to be had—you know—one of those chicken dinners the South is noted for. After this we will adjourn to the dance hall—dance and make merry until the wee hours of the morning.

The Georgia Association extends a general invitation to all you, Association members, who sojourn in Florida and the South to escape the wintry blasts. Surely some of you can arrange to spend an evening with the Georgia members. We promise you a good time, and you will also have the pleasure of meeting several distinguished Georgians.

TIME—Friday, January 11, 1924.
PLACE—Ansley Hotel, Atlanta, Ga.

NOT LIABLE.

Recently we had an inquiry from one of our members asking whether or not persons or institutions making loans on chattel mortgages were liable to a Federal tax as a broker. After consulting the Chairman of our Law Committee we are advised that persons and institutions loaning their own money on chattel mortgages or any other kind of mortgage are not liable to be taxed as brokers under the Federal Act of 1921, and that if any member is asked to pay a brokers' tax they should decline to do so and consult their own local attorneys who can find plenty of decisions in which rulings have been made making all persons and institutions of this kind free of any liability with respect to the brokers' tax.

Mr. George W. Kehr, Secretary, Harrisburg, Pa.

Dear Sir:

I am very grateful to you for the literature on the small loan business which you so kindly sent to me. I am desirous of obtaining a better understanding of this type of business so that I can discuss it with my classes in banking and the information in your literature will be of great value to me in this connection.

Very truly yours,
Montfort Jones,
Instructor in Finance.

INDUSTRIAL LENDERS NEWS

VOL. VIII, No. 7. JANUARY, 1924. Price, $1.00 a year.

1923 YEAR BOOK OUT.

Since the distribution of the 1923 Year Books which occurred before the holidays, many favorable comments have been received from persons and institutions that have received them. One in an editorial position cannot help but be convinced that this publication is of immense value and contributes much to the literature which is available touching the field of industrial finance. According to our custom, all members of the A. I. L. A. in good standing were sent complimentary copies of the book as were public libraries, colleges and universities, editors and public welfare organizations.

With practically no advertising, orders have been received from others who are desirous of having this publication and to date many copies have been sent out at the nominal charge of $1.00 per copy.

The book contains the proceedings of our Ninth Annual Convention held at Louisville, September 19 to 22, 1923, a directory of all the members of the A. I. L. A. with their local addresses, a small loan bibliography, the latest revised draft of the Uniform Small Loan Law and a digest of the small loan laws. While the surplus copies last, they will be sent out to anyone on receipt of the price, $1.00 per copy.

ONE OF MANY YEAR BOOK ORDERS RECEVED.

Legal Loan Co., Marion, Indiana.
December 21, 1923.

Dear Mr. Kehr: Kindly forward (and bill us) at Marion, Indiana, ten (10) additional copies of the December, 1923, 'Year Book of American Industrial Lenders Association."

It seems to us that this is the most ineresting and complete year book that has been published by the Association.

Yours very truly,

LOAN SHARK PROBE LAUNCHED IN WEST TO BE NATION-WIDE.

Kansas City, Mo., Dec. 1—(A. P.) The filing of a $100,000 damage suit in Federal District Court here by John N. Rhodes, a Kansas City (Kan.) switchman, gainst seven men who, Rhodes alleges, onspired to extort usurious interest rom him, launched a nation-wide legal ttack on alleged "loan sharks," according to Anthony P. Nugent, attorney for the plaintiff.

Nugent, also is counsel for 200 other ailroad employes, who allege they have been victimized by loan companies. He asserted that injunction and damage suits would be filed in various Federal courts throughout the United States in an effort to reach "the man higher up."

Rhodes' petition askes $50,000 actual and $50,000 punitive damages for alleged loss of health attributable to worry induced by a conspiracy of loan companies, whom he charged with forcing him to pay usurious interest by threatening to cause him to lose his job.

MORE POWER SAYS NATIONAL CHAIRMAN MUELLER.

Anthony P. Nugent, Esq.,

December 24, 1923.

Dear Sir: It is with great interest that I have read of your reported intention to fight the evil of usurious lending, not only in Missouri but wherever it exists in the nation. As the head of a national organization which for years has been engaged in the same effort to eliminate this evil I wish to express my hearty support of your movement and to assure you of whatever coöperation it may be in the power of our Association to render you.

The cruelty and injustice of usurious lending, which has existed and always will exist wherever the business is not regulated by the state, are all the greater because they are exerted against a class whose necessities make them easy victims of oppression. Your efforts in their behalf are just as truly a championing of oppressed humanity as any I can conceive of, and deserve the sympathetic approval of every right thinking man and woman in the nation.

The business of industrial lending is a necessary one, and, properly conducted, is a humane and useful activity, but extortion and avarice characterize it wherever the state has proved so callous or indifferent to the claims of necessitous borrowers as to fail to protect them by adequate laws from oppressive exactions. These exactions will inevitably obtain in communities where lending is unlicensed and unregulated, leaving to unscrupulous lenders freedom to impose whatever conditions and interest rates on loans their own greed dictates and the necessities, fear or ignorance of their victims will allow.

The American Industrial Lenders Association, with other sociological and civic organizations, (but particularly the Russell Sage Foundation, New York), has long studied the problem of abolishing this world-old evil, and is convinced that experience has demonstrated that the only solution lies in the adoption by the several states of scientific and modern legislation, requiring the licensing and regulating the lending business. Some scores of states have adopted such legislation, and in every instance it has been found effective in doing away with an evil that for years economists, sociologists and humanitarians had almost despaired of abolishing.

I wish you all success in your laudable fight on a system which is uneconomic, anti-social and iniquitous and I hope that it will direct your thought to a demonstrably practical and efficacious remedy which should be of nation-wide application. As Chairman of the Association, I shall be glad of any opportunity to aid you in your fight by supplying you with any information at the command of the Association. Literature and data on the subject is at your disposal upon addressing the National Secretary, Mr. George W. Kehr, 204 Chestnut Street, Harrisburg, Penna.

WINS $1,000 PRIZE FOR USURY THESIS.

Harvard Man Gets Hart Schaffner & Marx Award.

Franklin Winton Ryan, a graduate of the Harvard business school and now instructor in student reports at the institution, has been awarded the first prize of $1,000 in the annual Hart Schaffner & Marx competition which is open to all Americans without restriction.

His subject was "The Economics of Usury and Usury Laws," and it was his expert knowledge of this branch of financial legislation which won for him the Jesse Isidor Straus prize scholarship of $500 during his course in Harvard.

In his thesis on usury he scores the present laws in force in most states governing excessive interest charges as insufficient to prevent abuses by "loan-sharks." He says the laws define legal usury and allow offenders to escape though guilty of moral usury. He suggests a uniform small loan law, which will allow the natural laws of finance to set the market rate of interest and at the same time protect the small borrower. He adds that when such a law is passed the old inefficient laws should be removed from the statute books.

This is the fifth time a Harvard man has been successful in winning a prize in class A. Mr. Ryan has had particularly thorough training in the topic which he selected for his thesis. After three years

Philadelphia, Pennsylvania.

Reference is made to your letter dated November 21, 1923, bearing Symbols IT: JAW, relative to the taxable status of the American Industrial Lenders Association, 305 Flanders Building, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, under the provisions of Section 231 of the Revenue Act of 1921.

An examination of the evidence discloses that the organization was formed for the purposes of improving the small loan business, securing and enforcing uniform legislation relative thereto, and acting as a bureau of information among its members; that its income, excepting incidentals, is derived from dues paid by members; and that none of its income inures to the benefit of any private individual.

In view of the foregoing, it is held that the purposes and activities of the organization are such as to bring it within the provisions of Section 231(7) of the Revenue Act of 1921.

You are requested to make the proper notation on the records of your office and to notify the association that it will not be required to file returns of income.

The exemption herein referred to does not apply to taxes levied under other titles or provisions of the Revenue Act of 1921, except in so far as the exemption is granted expressly under those provisions to corporations enumerated in Section 231 of the Act.

This ruling also applies under the Revenue Act of 1918.

By direction of the Commissioner.

WILLIAM HIRSCH

On Why Persons Fail in Business Endeavors.

The chief cause of persons failing in their business endeavors is maladjustment more than any other single reason, according to William Hirsch, managing director of the Federated Loan Society, an organization formed by a number of wealthy men of Philadelphia for the purpose of helping unfortunate persons to help themselves.

"In considering the matter of business failures," said Mr. Hirsch, "I have in mind not only the small or, for that matter, the larger business man who is unable to meet his financial obligations, but also the working people, employed persons, widows, and very often the professional men as well.

Readjustment Often Needed.

"The great majority of the persons who need assistance in their business affairs are those who have got into difficulties because of maladjustment. Virtually all of these persons have a fitness for some particular line of work, whether it be for themselves or as workers for others; but, unfortunately, they go into the thing which seems to them easiest to do. This naturally does not bring the results which every person of industry may reasonably hope for.

"The first consequence is a lack of sympathy with the work with which th are attempting to do and a resulting inability to adjust themselves to that particular line of work for which they are best fitted.

"On the other hand, we often get the type of man who is located in the right business for the exercise of his best talents, but whose lack of business routine, as we might call it, brings him to the point where an accumulation of ordinary business difficulties so confuses him that he loses not only his confidence in himself and in his ability to make good but also his courage to continue in the face of adverse circumstances.

Not Only the Little Fellows.

"This does not always mean the little penny-candy storekeeper or the two-cent groceryman. I have in mind, for example, a yarn merchant who applied to us for assistance. His rating in both Dun and Bradstreet was from $5,000 to $10,- 000 and his accumulated bills for merchandise were approximately $7,000, all past due.

"This man actually felt that a loan of $300 to pay a few of the most pressing items would pull him through.

"Acting upon our principle to help persons to help themselves, we made an analysis of his business, and this indicated that the man had $3,000 worth of unsalable goods not yet unpacked and $4,000 worth more the market price of which had seriously declined. The thing that had never occurred to him was that he was overstocked and immediately ought to return the $3,000 worth of unsalable merchandise and that his creditors would be glad to extend his payments so that he could settle with them on a basis of 25 per cent of the bills every ninety days, covering each of the creditors in each payment.

"Here was a case where a loan would not have helped the man; on the other hand, it would have been merely an additional rope by which eventually he would have hanged himself in a business sense.

A Place for Every One.

"Now every one whose sole task is to help others to help themselves quickly finds out that there is a nook or a corner for every maladjusted individual or even for what the Hebrew terms the 'schlemiel,' or the semi-fool who never does anything right. This is one great satisfaction in the work—that of finding the right place for the person who hitherto has been in the wrong one.

"The unfortunate thing about most of the persons who come to us asking for help is that they are so close to their own troubles that they are unable to get a proper perspective. They know that something must be done and that usually immediately if they are to be saved from the financial rocks, but they rarely have an idea of just what the trouble is or how to seek the proper remedy.

"It is manifestly foolish, as in the case which I have cited, of making a small loan to a person who within a very short space of time will again be in the same fix with the loan which was made to him added to his troubles. But that is the remedy for which most of them apply.

Where Outsiders Help.

"On the other hand, the outsider who comes into the matter with the purpose of giving the most beneficial and lasting assistance gets not only the immediate trouble of the unfortunate person but gets his background as well. This is invaluable in seeking remedies which will prove to be permanent. Temporary aid, like treating results and paying no attention to the cause, will leave the person in a worse plight than before within a very short time.

"Nine-tenths of the persons in business difficulties who come to us have troubles originating from causes totally unsuspected by the persons themselves. Thus, for example, a man's domestic troubles may be at the bottom of his business failure or his ability to hold a job, and in many cases even the origin of these domestic difficulties may be entirely unsuspected by him.

The Lack of Capital.

"Then again we have the exceedingly capable individual who is handicapped by a small salary and thus kept constantly working for some one else when he might far better be in business for himself. Very often it is the lack of the first $100 that prevents a man from finding himself.

"There have been many instances where the sum required for the necessary start has been a good bit less than $100. Take, for example, the first man to whom a loan of $25 was ever made by our institution. This small sum was entirely invested in material for men's shirts. The wife cut and made the garments and the man went out and sold them as fast as they were made.

"This was almost exactly three years ago. That man today has a retail store in which he carries a stock of about $4,000 and has credit up to $5,000 more. But without this little start he would probably be working today for some one else at a small salary.

The Case of the Immigrant.

"Many an immigrant who in these peculiar times comes to the United States virtually a pauper, with no trade or profession, but with a European business training, is immediately placed upon his feet with a self-help loan of from $200 to $300, which he almost always pays up within the course of a year and does not have to have repeated thereafter.

"When I say 'European business training' I refer to the fact that in Europe, and especially in the more northern countries, business is done on more of a cash basis than here when dealing with the smaller merchants. The immigrant knows this and applies his knowledge. The European manufacturer selling to the small merchants will sacrifice part of the profits in order to avoid losses incurred through extensions of credit.

"The immigrant with this training therefore pays cash for what merchandise he gets. In that way a candy manufacturer in Russia, whose force of workers never ran fewer than 200 hands, manufactures Russian candy in Philadelphia with the help of two workers and supplies about 200 small retail shops on a cash basis with weekly deliveries.

Business Inability.

"Of course, there is a certain proportion of cases of sheer business inability, and very frequently this lack of business initiative or adaptability accounts for failure. The readjustment of such cases is always more difficult than almost any other because of the necessity of weaning the individual away from the thought of being 'his own boss' and bringing him to a realization of the fact that his strong point in life is to be a useful worker for some one else. Yet this must be done and this point of view accepted if this individual is to receive permanent assistance. But often it is a very hard task to make him see what actually is best for himself.

"There is nothing of charity in this work. The individual pays as he goes, and he pays for what he gets, but the price is not so high as it is when the man is forced either to borrow from friends, which places the borrower under a perpetual obligation, or from some unscrupulous law-evading lender from whose clutches the borrower never escapes."—Reprinted from the Public Ledger, November 14, 1923.

INDIANA.

The semi-annual meeting of Indiana Industrial Lenders Association, was held in Kokomo, Ind., November 21, 1923.

The meeting was called to order by the president, Fred Davies, at 10:15 o'clock. Roll call, the following members being present: Commonwealth Loan Co. of Anderson, Brazil, Elwood, Ft. Wayne, Indianapolis, Richmond, Terre Haute, Capital Loan Co. of Frankfort, Franklin, Indianapolis, Shelbyville, Legal Loan Co. of Connersville, Ft. Wayne, Frankfort, Kokomo 2, Lafayette, Logansport, Marion, Peru, Indiana Finance Co., Elkhart, Beneficial Loan Society, Ft. Wayne, Indiana Loan Co., Ft. Wayne, National Loan Co. of Ft. Wayne, Terre Haute, Provident Loan Association, Hammond, Michigan City, South Bend, Elkhart, Beneficial Loan Society, Indiana Colateral Loan Co., Indianapolis Finance Co., Household Finance Co., Sterling Loan Co. of Indianapolis, Howard Loan Co., Kokomo, State Loan Co. of Laporte and South Bend, Green Co. Loan Co., Linton, Central Loan Co., Logansport, Clupper Loan Co., Marion Loan Co., Marion, New Castle Loan Co. of New Castle, Thompson Loan Co. of Shelbyville and Seymour, American Security Co., Shelbyville, Fidelity Loan Co., Sullivan Beneficial Loan Co., Terre Haute, Indiana Loan Co., Terre Haute, First Security Co., Union City, Knox Co. Real Estate & Loan Co. Vincennes, Jacob E. Clark, Washington, Ind., and the convention was attended by the President and Secretary of the Illinois Association—Mr. F. E. Tyson, President and Mr. L. T. Baker, Secretary, of Chicago.

Communication from the National Chairman expressing his regrets that he would be unable to attend on account of the National executive meeting on the same day was received.

Impressions of the National Convention at Louisville, by H. H. Burrell, South Bend, Ind.

The National convention at Louisville was not the largest convention we have ever held. Possibly this was because of geographical location. However, it certainly was one of the best as measured in terms of speeches and papers—and after all, these are the standards by which most conventions are measured. Indiana was represented by something like 24 members. Again considering geographical location, this does not speak so well for Indiana.

The convention was held in the auditorium of the Seelbach Hotel. The first day was given over to registration of members. Something like 112 members were registered. This number plus about 60 guests made up the convention. Sixteen states were represented.

The real business of the convention opened Wednesday with the invocation by Rev. Dr. E. L. Powell, of the First Christian Church of Louisville. The address of welcome was made by Mayor Quinn. To have heard what these prominent men said about us, and to us, was worth the cost of the trip to Louisville, regardless of the distance you may have had to travel. For once in our business lives we were painted white and immaculate and incidentally complimented on the good we have done and the good we may still continue to do in our business. Encouraging words of this kind simply shows the advancement the business has made in the last seven years. The addresses by these two prominent men would have done credit to a convention of Federated Churches, they were so sincere. No man in the Industrial loan business today can afford to miss a treat of this kind. But you must go to our conventions—both State and National—in order to hear men of this calibre.

After the speeches by the above named men, and the response by Chairman Rutherford, the reports from all the committees except that of Law, Publicity and Finance were read. Whether reading of these dry statistics of the different committees at every convention is made compulsory by the constitution, or by-laws, or what not, I do not know. No doubt they are very important, yet they are the least interesting of anything on the program. And the fact that they are eventually printed in the Year Book and perhaps the Lenders News, the time required for their reading might, it seems to me, be more profitably taken up with speeches by men of prominence picked from the community in which the convention is being held. Words of praise or blame, and a boost or a knock, from men of note is sometimes good medicine and may do us more real good in the long run than the reading of the dry reports from so many different committees, which, as stated before, will be given us later on in the Year Book or Lenders News.

Quite often a prominent man looking at us and at our business with a disinterested and unbiased eye will make a suggestion or offer some good advice or criticism that by its acceptance and adoption may prove to be worth its weight in gold. While advice, as a rule, is usually worth just about what it costs, constructive criticism and suggestions, when made by men of experience, are always in order and very often worth many times what it cost to get them. This we may observe today in every community where business men are calling in expert accountants to make a survey of their business in order to determine whether this or that is being done right.

To those who were not present I want to say they missed a big treat in not hearing the paper on "Small Loan Advertising" by Will Pente, of Chicago. This man is an expert in his line. Perhaps the best we have ever had at our conventions. You will no doubt get his message in the Year Book, and possibly the Lenders News, but you will not get his philosophical digressions and the discussion that went along with his paper. Discussions, which are the offspring of most papers and speeches, are seldom put in print. You must go to the conventions to get them.

Our old friend George Farrington, of Indianapolis, was also there with a very able discussion of "Educational Publicity." George illustrated his talk with copies of the Indiana Publicity ads conspicuously placed on a blackboard where all could see them. And I want to say here for the benefit of those in Indiana who cannot see the value of such advertising, that Mr. Pente praised very highly the quality and construction of these ads, and fully endorsed the motive of this campaign of education here in Indiana. As usual Mr. Farrington was very thorough and practical, and showed a wonderful knowledge of his subject. It is to be regretted that some of our Indiana members were not on hand to hear what Mr. Farrington had to say. There are a few members of the Indiana Association who apparently have not the vision to see, and who evidently do not care to acquire the vision to see, the future value of spending money in educating the public, no only as to what we are now doing, but as to who we are today as compared to what the public thought we were a few years ago. The public at large is likely to be a long time in learning that we have been in a business way, born again, unless we tell them. And I know of no better method of educating them, than with these Publicity ads, and no better medium by which we can spread the light than by the daily press. This question of educational publicity is the all important and vital question before every state Association today. And one of the best ways to have this subject properly presented to you is to hear such men as Pente and Farrington. And to hear them you must go to the conventions.

The other papers and speeches were very interesting and educational. I simply refer to Pente and Farrington in particular because each spoke on a subject extremely vital to the welfare of every state Association in this country. The solution of this question of moulding the proper kind of public opinion means more business for everyone—and I guess that's what most of you are always kicking for.

The complimentary luncheon given by the convention on Wednesday in the Rathskeller of the Seelbach Hotel was very entertaining and instructive. Speeches were made by Matt J. Holt, formerly attorney for the Legal Aid Society of Louisville; Judge Baldwin, of Chicago, who was formerly of the Department of Trade and Commerce of the State of Illinois, and Louis N. Robinson, of the Russell Sage Foundation. The main speaker of the day, however, was Louis N. Robinson. However, each man had a message that everyone in the Industrial loan business should have heard. In addition to the fine speeches and the sumptuous lunch, the sight of that old Rathskeller would have done your soul good. It would have done more—it would have made your mouth water. The quaint decorations on the walls, pillars, and ceiling were very apppropriate for a place of this kind. Prior to the Volstead Act, it was no doubt one of the real show places of Louisville. And even to-day, in your fancy and imagination, it is easy to personify the old place as a lonely human exile waiting in vain for the repeal of the 18th Amendment when he can return to his old Bachanalian orgies of the days gone by.

This same day we were treated in the afternoon to a two-hours' motor ride over the city and through its wonderful natural parks. Most cities of this country, as you know, have some very beautiful man-made parks, but it seems that only Louisville has the real God-made variety.

The regular convention banquet was held in the Rathskeller Thursday evening. The souvenirs were small booklets artistically printed in colors and containing a few of the old southern melodies—especially those that reflect and breathe the spirit of old Kentucky. Speeches were made at this banquet by Dr. McVey, president of the University of Kentucky, by Dr. E. E. Eubank, of the Department of Social Science in the University of Cincinnati, and again by Louis N. Robinson, of the Russell Sage Foundation. The banquet was a delightful and informal affair. Music by an orchestra, and some cabaret singers, and a liberal sprinkling of beautiful women handsomely gowned, gave it a charming and picturesque setting in this particular room.

This convention at Louisville was given the best newspaper publicity that we have so far had. The proceedings of each day were given attractive space and setting in both evening and morning papers.

In this paper you have no doubt noticed by this time that I have strongly stressed the fact that you should go to these conventions—whether they be State or National. These meetings are not like a fraternal organization. To be able to say you are a member and that you keep your dues paid is not sufficient. You must go and mingle if you expect to advance in the business in which you are engaged, whether as owner or as a salaried man. So much of real value is said and done in a convention that never gets into a year book or newspaper, and unless you are right on the spot to garner the golden thoughts and ideas as they fall, you will find that you are losing much of the power that drives your business forward.

SELLING LOAN SERVICE.

By George L. Clupper, Marion, Ind.

The sale of any article cannot be accomplished without the salesman understanding how to find the market for his goods. Time and energy is wasted trying to convince a buyer that the article he has to sell is of benefit to him, when the buyer has no use whatever for the article that is being sold. If any salesman sells his goods to people that have no use for them, he has not only damaged the customer, but he has also damaged his business, for no influence is greater for future business than satisfied customers.

To sell money, we must first understand who needs money. Most everyone borrows money, but not all people borrow money at 3½% per month. So the ones that we are interested in, are the ones who are without bank credit, and this includes the majority of the population in most cities. Before we can sell money at 3½%, we must make the customer understand that we are giving to them a real service, and are not trying to charge them more than we deserve. From the fact that the large majority of the population do not secure money from the bank, it gives us a large field from which to secure our business. Some companies are under the impression that the people are compelled to borrow money, but this is not true. The thing for a successful loan man to do, is to create a market for their money and give to the people such service as to make them want to use their money.

When a customer comes to us to secure a loan, we are interested to learn why he has applied to our office instead of some other company, and we find that a majority of our business comes from someone recommending our company who has had dealings with us. I believe that a business rightfully conducted and your name kept before the public in a proper and clean manner is the greatest asset that a company can have. The forms of advertising and wording of advertising has a large part to do with the securing of new business. We might think that the public does not analyze our advertising, but they do. For instance, some people will advertise, "An old established business," some will advertise "honest loan methods," and various forms are used to lead the people to believe that they are superior to other companies. Many times the character of the people connected with the business is shown in the wording of their advertisement. I do not believe that anyone who is in need of money would care very much the length of time that we have been in business, and I am sure when a company brags about its honest methods, the public would be suspicious. Every advertisement that is carried, whether newspaper, circular letters, billboards, or any other form shows the type and character of the people who own the business. To my mind, personality and quality of the business is shown more in the character of advertising than in any other manner.

Another factor that is essential to the selling of money, is the impression that the borrower receives of a business the first time that he calls at the office. A neat and clean office is very important to the loan business. Courteous and cordial greetings are great business builders. The first impression that the customer receives is the lasting impression, and all you might do to erase the first impression from a man or woman's mind is wasted effort.

We have in the world to-day, as we have probably had in the past, the artificial man and woman in business. It has been said that a fool is born every minute, but in a city the size of Marion, if you are not careful, you would run out of fools. In other words, a successful loan man is the type of man who is sincere in his desire to give to the public honest loan service, and he does not have to advertise that he is honest, because the public does this for him. The man who is in the loan business and that has no other desire in the conducting of that business, only for the purpose of making money for himself, will not prosper or get as much from the business as the man who has first in mind, public service. A few years ago, I applied to a gentleman for a job to sell coal. The first question he asked me was, how many people do you know, and I explained to him that I knew several. Then he asked how many people know you, which was a very uncertain number. To secure business it is very essential and a very cheap way of securing business by being acquainted with a large number of people. We have always made it a practice to never miss an opportunity of showing our willingness to help and keep in touch with the people who are prospective customers. Each individual that is connected with our company feels that it is their duty to use their influence and personality to secure new business, and practically all of the new business that comes into our office ask for some certain individual connected with it. It has been said that it is not good business to have men prominently known who are connected with the business, but we feel that this has been a great asset to us. The securing of business, means one continuous effort to please, and nothing to my mind is more essential than to have an up-to-date office, and to have that office open and not hidden.

Nothing impresses the public so favorably as to be waited on quickly and correctly. Nothing will cause people to lose faith in a company quicker than to have an error made in the handling of their account, and especially if the error is made in favor of the company.

A few days ago a man and wife came in the office to make a payment on their account. They had the kiddies with them; as they were being waited on, I stepped outside and talked to the children, a thing I always do when possible. When I went back to my desk, the lady asked her husband who was that man, and he said that was Mr. Clupper himself. They appreciated that little courtesy, didn't they? The children will remember. That's future business. Selling money is not so much the individual nor the company as a whole, but it is the everlasting courtesy of every blooming soul, that wins.

Mr. Fred Circle discussed this paper and brought out the point and effect of mistreatment in handling customers. Mr. F. L. Thompson said service means the performance of a duty.

A motion was made by C. H. Stratton, seconded by Mr. Arnett, that all members refrain from advertising that will cast a reflection on other companies. Motion carried.

DOES IT PAY TO BE TOO EFFICIENT IN COLLECTIONS?

By C. E. Durnell, Sterling Loan Co., Indianapolis, Ind.

I know that a great many of you will not agree with me on some of my remarks and possibly I am wrong, but difference of opinion is necessary and by getting each others' views and experiences we can experiment and find out which is best for us. I believe I could write a better paper if my subject was "Does it pay to be too inefficient on collections?" Efficient means producing results, and producing results on collections in our business these days is most necessary owing to our reduced rate and higher operating expense.

I am a firm believer that one's customers in this business or any other credit business as a whole, are about what one makes them. In other words, it's an education. One can educate them to be prompt pay or slow pay as the case may be. This education must really start at the time application is taken to be effective. Usually terms and rates are asked at that time. Here is the opportune time to lay stress on that payments must be made promptly when due, etc., and again when the loan is being closed. Needless for me to explain to you men in detail as to what to tell them, for you all know that and each of us have a different way and wording of doing it, but no doubt producing about the same results. I believe in sending out notices the next day after payment or account is due on all of them, no matter who they are or how good they may apparently be. I have no pets or favorites. If I do not hear from them in three days from date of notice, I send another marked "second notice," repeating again on third day with "third notice" marked on it and usually some other notation. If the third notice brings no results, I then send a pretty warm letter and refer them to remarks made at the time loan was made which alludes to their agreement and contract. In doing this and getting results depends entirely on your remarks and the stress you put on them at the time of taking application, making the loan, etc. If this does not bring results, 'phone is then used if the customer can be reached by 'phone and if not it is time to send a representative out to see them. The procedure from then on depends entirely on the circumstances. Up to this point same tactics are used each and every month if account is not paid when due. If this is followed closely in most cases, the customer will become trained to pay promptly when due instead of waiting several days afterwards, or when convenient, for he will know that notice will be coming promptly. Kindly bear in mind it is necessary to explain to them when they come in after sending notices, letters, etc., why it is necessary and important, etc. There are plenty of explanations and reasons which you all know. My experience has taught me if this or some similar procedure is not followed, your customers will gradually grow slow and slower from month to month, or from one account to another, and sooner or later become so slow and indifferent that you will not care to handle his account at all, or possibly lay down entirely, in either case losing a possible good customer and possibly the account also. Of course, there are exceptions to this, but I am talking about accounts in general or as a whole. I'll admit that now and then one will lose a customer by sending out notices promptly and insisting on prompt payments, but not very often.

I detest slow accounts, especially those one has to chase, and likewise promisers. I would rather have an absolute deadbeat, one that refuses to pay and tells you so. You can then charge off the account and forget it, and sleep nights.

For your information, my office, which was opened on May 1, 1923, has run as follows on interest collections, and principal collections have been 100 per cent. May there was no interest collections. This is figuring 3½% or 3.50 as 100% taking your bills receivable from the last day of the previous month. June 3.41%, plus; July 3.61%, plus; August 3.46%, plus; October 3.50%, plus, which is an average of 3.49%, plus. Along with this I will state that loans for this six months averaged $112.69 each. Some of you who do not send out notices promptly and keep after them or crowd collections as some would term it, may average as well as the above figures, but I doubt if any better. Kindly understand I do not use or believe in any rough, harsh or bluff tactics on this kind of accounts I have been talking about and seldom on any other kind.

I am a believer of kind, courteous treatment and believe in most cases it will win out if reasoning power and tact is administered along with it in proper proportions.

By the way, I consider tact the greatest asset a Loan Man or Manager can have. If I was hiring a man and had two to choose from, and one had experience without tact, and the other had tact without experience, I would hire the one without experience. He would get by and get the experience, but the other fellow never would. Tact is like music, one is born with it.

Now as to hard accounts where suit, foreclosure, replevin, etc., is necessary. There are so many different angles to these and so much depends on the circumstances of each individual case that I am not going into that. However I do not believe in starting any kind of action unless one has a fair chance to win, but if you do start, go ahead with it to a finish.

Don't forget that full and complete applications are very essential, especially in the larger cities.

I consider good applications as essential as notes and mortgages. They make better customers and better collections, for the customer knows you have the information on him and it will be a hard matter for him to keep his whereabouts unknown, and he is less liable to attempt to skip or avoid payment.

Discussions followed and Mr. Hurry expressed his belief that leniency should be followed and was strongly supported by the convention.

The convention adjourned to the Hotel for Luncheon. The Luncheon was attended by several of the city officials. Talks were made by J. E. Frederick, President of the Indiana Chamber of Commerce on "Coöperation." His talk was very able and interesting; he especially emphasized the fact that all kinds of loans were made some for necessitious purposes and others for luxuries, but who should decide which are necessary and which are luxurious, loans could not be criticized when made for things not necessary as all are entitled to somethings that might be termed luxurious.

Hon. Fred H. Jessup, City Attorney, gave an address showing his knowledge of the necessity of this business, which was very ably given.

Mr. C. H. Stratton delivered a response to the address of welcome which appeared in our November issue.

The chairman conducted a valuable discussion regarding the transferring of accounts in which he emphasized the fact that specific information should be sent with the account, showing address, telephone number, where working, relatives, etc., and that remittances should be made promptly at all times.

OUR ATTITUDE TOWARD THE BORROWER.

By L. T. Baker—Chicago.

These state meetings and National Convention surely are bright spots in the present day loan business. It is, indeed, difficult to understand why every man in the business is not a member of both organizations and it is also difficult to understand why every man who is a member, does not attend every meeting.

By being at this meeting, I am satisfying a long felt desire. For some time I have wanted to attend a real, genuine manager's meeting and knew I would have to come to Indiana to find such a meeting.

You know, you Indiana fellows have a reputation among the various State Lenders Associations and you set a hard pace for the rest of us. You have a reputation for really doing things and all your efforts seem coördinated team work.

You are very fortunate, however, in your line up of personnel, having among your members men who are national figures in the Industrial Loan Business; men of wealth and influence whose first interest is Indiana and men who are energetically alive to the progressive tendencies of your business.

In contrast to the situation in Illinois, you are also fortunate, in respect to the even geographical distribution of members and a corresponding distribution of the volume of business done throughout the state.

Several years ago, we thought it would be a good plan in Illinois, to hold at least one meeting each year down state, so we picked out the next largest town to Chicago, which is Peoria, but much to our surprise we found the ratio of attendance as between Chicago members and down state members about the same as it had been at our Chicago meetings. We have been unable, therefore, to successfully hold meetings in Illinois other than in Chicago.

The advantages you enjoy, of course help, but without hearty coöperation and a general unselfish spirit among your members, you could not accomplish what you do.

When your genial, all round, good fellow member, Broughman, asked me to be with you at this meeting, I told him I would rather not be on the program but he insisted.

There are not many of us Chicago men who have much to say. We have learned how "not to talk." When there is anything to be said, we let friend Napier say it and had he been here today, as we hoped he would be, to speak to you, you would have understood why. So I am here in reality, just as an interested observer.

I will, however, at least suggest a subject that has much to do with the professed ambition of nearly every one of us now in the Industrial Loan Business, which is, to create a favorable opinion in the mind of the public.

That part of the public we are most interested in is first, the borrowing class; second, the business man or employer and third, the legislator. Each of these three classes must, of course, be treated and dealt with in different ways and each is a separate subject. As this is a manager's meeting, we will refer to the borrower only.

Now, Mr. Manager, what is your attitude toward your borrower?

That question has always been of much interest to me and carries a deep significance. I should like to get an individual answer to it from each of you and suggest that every manager make a personal analysis of his attitude, (that is state of mind) toward his borrower. Upon reflection you will find, I think that in spite of the importance of the subject, there is not a great deal that can be said about it. Its chief utility is in its daily application by you managers and therein lies its greatest value.

When I ask, "what is your attitude toward your borrower", I do not mean, what attitude do you assume or pretend, but what is your innermost or natural attitude, toward an application for a loan? Are you aware of any sense of superiority because he wants to borrow your money? Do you throw up a wall of cold formality between you and your customer? Do you look upon him with suspicion or doubt? Do you feel at liberty to treat him with any less consideration than if he were buying a home or an automobile from you?

I do not believe the training of any man here would cause him to do these things, but the question is, do you do them?

The man who is financially independent to-day is a no better man socially or morally, because of his financial independence, than he was ten years ago, when perhaps, he had no bank account at all. Most men of wealth to-day, were poor at one time and all of you have seen borrowers grow financially beyond the need of your further help.

As an illustration of borrowers being helped over the hill and onto the road toward success by the many opportunity loans which are made by licensed lenders, I will cite two cases within my own experience. Several years ago our office made a widow a loan to complete the purchase price of a rooming house near the Chicago University where she expected to accomodate the students. About a year after the expiration of the loan she came to me with one thousand dollars she had saved, offering to invest it in my business and further stated that she could probably add to the investment about five hundred dollars every six months. She was advised, however, to purchase real estate mortgages. In the other case, several different loans were made to a man and his wife who made candies at their home and were sold through drug store agencies. This fellow developed to be quite a genius and was one of the principal factors in the famous Eskimo Pie enterprise from which he profited handsomely, proven by the fact that about ten days ago he called at my office offering to sell his seven passenger Lincoln Sedan as he is going to Denver to open a chain of candy stores.

So we who lend are just man-to-man to him who borrows and we cannot justly deal with him in any other than an informal, warm, friendly manner.

And why should any of us look upon an applicant with suspicion or doubt? How can his best qualities be brought out or discovered by such an attitude? If your investigator goes out to discover something bad about an applicant, he is very apt to find it, but why not send him out to discover the good, for surely if there is no good, it must all be bad. The bad seems to just creep in anyway and if more good was looked for, more loans would be made by us all. If the truth were known many good loans are turned down because the manager or outside man lets a little bad spot eclipse all of the good qualities of an applicant.

Now if you were in the real estate business you would look upon each prospective buyer with an eye of appreciation and would show him every consideration. But you are in the loan business and does not the applicant for a loan bear the same relation to you as would a buyer if you were selling real estate? Exactly—and he is entitled to the same respect.

You are not favoring a man by making him a loan any more than he is favoring you by giving you his business. The favor idea on the part of the loan man and the humiliation idea on the part of the borrower seem to be deeply rooted but both are entirely fallacious.

The logical way to get your mind in the right frame toward the applicant is to realize that he is in many respects your equal and may score above you on other points; to bear in mind that the great majority of borrowers live respectable, orderly lives, maintain the best homes they can afford and raise their families properly and are generally good American citizens. Hold this attitude toward him so that he may have an opportunity to prove that he is entitled to the credit for which he is asking.

No advantage should be taken of his temporary financial condition and I have found that you can put an applicant at ease by assuming the proper attitude toward him. Ones private finances is a delicate subject and an applicant for a personal loan is usually quick to sense the spirit behind your methods.

To try to act one way, when you feel another way in a matter; is like treating the effect of an illness rather than the cause, we must create within ourselves the correct attitude which in turn will cause us to receive our applicant cordially, deal with him patiently; by our manner and by what we say we will let him know that his making a loan from us is a regular business deal and need not be attached with any humiliation, embarrassment or obligation (other than contractual).

If you get the right slant or viewpoint on the borrowers situation, you will help your business and the loan business in general by creating a first good impression upon each potential customer, when he applies to you for a loan, and this impression will be passed on to others and that is advertising and advertising is education.

Mr. Elmer Johnson, from the State Bank examiner's office told the convention what splendid coöperation the State Department was receiving from the Association in law enforcement.

The Indiana Publicity Campaign was recapitulated by Mr. R. C. Clark. Letters were read from members from the various parts of the country, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Virginia, commending the Indiana Association on the position they had taken regarding publicity. A motion was made by the Chairman of this committee, Mr. R. C. Aufderheide seconded by Mr. F. L. Thompson that the convention appropriate one thousand dollars to carry on the publicity campaign for another six months, motion carried unanimously. Cities over the state pledged better efforts to use these adds in the future.

Some very humorous experiences were given by F. J. Schurmann and M. S. Kent of Indianapolis.

Mr. F. E. Tyson, President of the Illinois State Association complimented the Association on the wonderful way in which the convention was conducted.

Discussions regarding the use of automobiles, that they were economical and the service rendered by the automobile could not be supplemented by any other means of transportation.

Mr. A. C. Broughman showed many evidences that the Public was more liberal and sentiment was more favorable to the loan business than ever before.

Mr. Arnett offered a standard mortgage for use in Indiana and offered to supply them at cost.

Mr. F. L. Thompson explained how much and in what manner a wife was responsible for a loan and how to safeguard yourself against loss by having the wife sign the note which would make her responsible in case of death of husband or if she owned property in her name.

No further business, the meeting adjourned at 4:45.

P. S. The American Association's executive committee at a meeting held in Philadelphia on Tuesday, November 20th, authorized the employment of a regular publicity man for a period of six months, to syndicate articles for publication in various newspapers over the country.

The next National convention will be held at Baltimore, Maryland.

PENNSYLVANIA BANQUET SPEECHES.

MR. C. H. WATTS: (Toastmaster)

To those who are our guests this evening, we extend a most cordial welcome. We are happy that you are here with us, and are hoping you will come again next year.

To those who are members of this association, and who have attended the business sessions of to-day, it is needless for me to welcome you. You have been thrice welcome this day. We have one more year added to our list, one more star in our crown, one more testimonial as to the efficiency with which we are conducting our necessary business, as typified by the presence of the representative of the State who is here with us to-night on this platform. We have truly learned again this year that has just passed that we are indeed wards of the state and that we are conducting this necessary business in a dignified way, in a way that is proper, in a way that is fair to both borrower and lender.

Again I say, we welcome you here once again, once again to dine with us, once again to hold festival with us. We hope you have had a good time and will come again. You will notice that I have here on my left the past and present Chairman, both Irishmen, and both fighters, I understand, so don't pull anything. (Laughter.) But we are all happy to be here, each and every one, and we are happy that you have entered into the spirit of the occasion. I have been searching and looking about to see if there were any long-faced persons in the room to-night, but have been unable to find even one. And we are happy.

Our first speaker, not the first as listed on the program, but our first speaker in the rearranged program—for this is always flexible, always changing, revolution is always here, our first speaker this evening is a citizen of Philadelphia. That is the highest possible tribute I can pay to this man, who has served the City, the State and the Nation.

He comes to us with the greeting of fellowship, the greeting of understanding, the greeting of good will and the wish that we may go on and serve. It gives me great pleasure to present to you the Honorable J. Washington Logue, who will speak to us on "Business Ideals."

HON. J. WASHINGTON LOGUE:

My friends, I was in doubt as to why I was invited to come here this evening, especially when there was some explanation given to me as to the make-up of your organization and as to the purpose of the convention in which you are engaged. When I was told the title of the organization, I decided it must have been the promptings of sympathy or a feeling of fraternity that inspired the invitation, and that it was with a kindly sympathetic feeling that you dug up the industrial borrower, (Laughter) and thought you would entertain him for a few moments.

Mr. Watts has stated to you that I possess one of the greatest privileges given to man, one of the proudest boasts—that of being a native-born citizen of the City of Philadelphia and State of Pennsylvania. I appreciate that, but the chairman to-night, in calling attention to the fact that both past and present chairmen were beside him on the platform, stated that they were both of them Irishmen. I want to add, that in addition to the privilege of being a native-born citizen of the City of Philadelphia and State of Pennsylvania, I also have the proud privilege of being the son of an Irish immigrant. (Applause.)

You folks are engaged in a great enterprise. It is the opportunity of helping, aiding and assisting your fellowmen, and, at the same time, being engaged in a work which brings to you a fair interest on your labor and investment, for every person has the right to get a proper return for his services.

The mere fact of lending money is no longer associated in our minds with the ugly picture usually drawn of the money lender or unkind words heaped on the one who puts out money for the use of those who have been unable to acquire it from any of the larger financial institutions, and the borrower is no longer looked upon as a cringing individual who comes in seeking aid, because the great financial institutions of our country could not exist or pay money in the way of interest on deposits, and couldn't safeguard the money deposited with them, were it not for the borrower who presents himself at the banks and makes it possible for them to earn money in the way of interest.

When you stop to consider, and it is a point that appeals to me very often,—how keenly interested we all should be in our financial institutions, and then look beyond those financial institutions and see the humble borrower or the humble depositor. Where would the great enterprises of our country be were it not for the financial institutions that are able to take up securities, advance money on them, and permit the enterprises to expand? How frequently have we found praise given to the great financial genius that is able, in times of stress and distress, to hand out the millions that are necessary for the preservation of an enterpise and the keeping up of our industries. But did you ever look beyond that? Did you ever see who makes that possible?

Let me illustrate, because your institution appeals to me very strongly: who permits the financial genius to accomplish all these results? Why, the humble man and the humble woman who stop, say, at Seventh and Walnut Street of a night, or at Tenth and Walnut Streets, or perhaps the Beneficial Saving Fund, and put away their five dollars a week, or their ten dollars a month, as the case may be, and enables the financial genius, as he is termed, to gather together the millions that are necessary, and he procures those millions because of their enterprise and hard work.

The servant girl who takes her money down and deposites it is keenly interested in the great enterprises of our country, for her money goes out into the bonds of railroads, and cities are permitted to expand because her money is helping to build up industries, railroads, public utilities, and every enterprise that needs great sums of money. All these look back to the humble, almost despised, small depositor.

And that leads us to a second thought, and what is that? It is the commonality of interest that all people should have in this great republic of ours, where all great enterprises are undertaken by the individual, and where there is very little government ownership (and many hope there will be less government control), so that the man who works on the railroad track and takes his earnings and puts them away in a financial institution is interested, even beyond the procuring of his wages at the end of the month or semi-monthly period, for he is one of financiers whose money has helped to make possible the flotation of bonds that the enterprise might be carried on successfully.

In this land of ours, where every person can be equal, and where the inheritable right of one born under the American skies and according to American principles is that everyone stands by equal right with everyone else in a common enterprise for the extension of ideals, whether they be governmental, whether they be social, or whether they be business, and business ideals are just as important in maintaining the spirit of our great republic as are theological or philosophical ideals as regards what is the duty of American citizenship. Honesty in your transactions with other people, fair play, the thought that for what you give you will get a proper return, and from what you invest you will get a proper return.

What is the secret of trade and commerce? It is the giving up of something that I do not want and somebody else does want. I sell my home because I am tired of it or because I want to get a better one; I want it no longer, and along comes somebody else and buys it because it is just the ideal of what they want. The merchant sells the goods on his shelves because he wants them no longer, and the retail merchant comes along and buys those goods which he is unable to manufacture himself. All business life is based upon the interchange and the exchange from people, one to the other, of those commodities which are of interest no longer to one and that somebody else desires to possess. Many men and women, starting life in humble surroundings, and in humble circumstances, and not looked upon as the possessor of great wealth, are still found to be the possessors of that which is more important, and that is character and the belief in their honesty, and they are known to be quick to recognize a moral obligation and a moral duty.

I recall something that happened several years ago when I was helping to start a financial institution of this city (the name I will not mention), which has been very successful. I remember attending the board meetings, and one day, after having attended these meetings for three or four months, I said to the president: "Tell me, what does all this mean. We sit here in a board meeting, and John Jones brings in a statement and he says his stock on hand is so much, and his money in bank is so much, and he does so much business, and his expenses are so much, and you grant him a loan. We know nothing at all about it. We don't know what his machinery is worth, we don't know what his stock is worth, and we have no means of verifying this man's word." His reply to me was: "It is the secret of credit." "What is it?" I asked. He said: "The secret of credit is the secret of Americanism, it is the secret of success and prosperity, and it is the secret of peace—the trust and belief we have in a man. I care not what a man is worth, if he be the president of a national bank even, unless that man meets his obligations when due, he is no good, because he is not living up to his promise, he is not fulfilling his undertaking. Let him comply with his promise, let him live up to his word, and he is putting himself in position to come in to us the following week for double the amount he got before."

It is faith in people, it is the credit of people, and what a great work you are doing, engaged in the business you are, bringing the ray of hope to the one who despairs of meeting his present need. You are helping to upbuild. You have faith in men, you believe in men, and you are willing to advance your money on the faith of a promise to pay, to take a man's word that he will comply with his obligation. There are those poor unfortunates who seem to have nothing but distress and misery as their lots, and they come to you for help for the sick wife, for the crippled child, or perhaps they are temporarily out of employment, and you give them that aid which is so necessary, and you extend that aid to them by reason of the faith you have in the one applying to you. Business ideals!

Business ideals permit of transactions between men who are fair and honest. Business trickery can never reach the point of business ideals. Ideals are those things on a higher plane which one seeks to reach, even if one cannot acquire those things that are pleasing to him.

We here in this great republic of ours must be a coöperative people, and must, at all times, be ready for service,—service in no matter what the position is that we occupy in this world. All people are servants, from the highest to the lowest, and the higher the position the man occupies the greater is his obligation; there must be service and coöperation.

Oh, I wish at times that someone would sing a song or hymn to the daily toiler that would put into him a little bit of spirit and self-pride, instead of constantly undertaking to tell him how miserable he is. Oh, if men could be made to realize that in all work and labor there is dignity. What executive of a great city can have a city that stands in a position to be admired by others unless every official connected with that administration working under him is performing his full duty. Who could give praise to the great Pennsylvania Railroad without praise is given as well to the begrimed engineer who steps from the engine after the run and who has carried in safety five hundred or more people, or to the man hidden away in the tower in Broad Street Station, unknown to the public, who with his dispatching orders sends out into the night train after train filled with people. Why go ahead and belittle the private in any enterprise and give praise only to the general? What general ever won a battle without the soldier at his back to carry out his orders? From whence would have come General Pershing's success were it not for the boys in khaki who crossed the broad Atlantic, who left their humble homes and consecrated their lives to carrying out the orders of the chief? (Applause.)

The post office, one of the most important departments in this city of Philadelphia, could not be successfully run were it not for the letter carrier, who goes out into the snow and sleet of winter and the heat of summer and performs his duty. Instill into men, and all men, and I wish that general term to embrace both male and female, the dignity of the particular position they occupy. Where would our moral code be, and where would our young men and women be, if they were dependent only upon theological instruction and didn't have the hard-working mother to instill into their minds what good morals and good behavior mean.

In our great declarations, in our constitutional announcements, we gave forth no new law; we simply wakened up the world as we realized ourselves that it is God's law to be applied to our fellowmen, and that God's law is the fundamental thing that will bring happiness and peace to all men. We declared against what? Despotism, intolerance, tyranny. We didn't proclaim that merely for those who have crossed the Atlantic and settled in the thirteen colonies. We proclaimed that for the world at large, because we proclaimed the recognition of God's law for God created all men equal. And in our declaration, among our inalienable rights, we declared the right to live, the right to liberty, and the right to pursue happiness. And those were the fundamentals with which we started—liberty and free will, with which the mind is endowed; happiness, because God made us to be happy.

So you see this great republic of ours started off with the recognition of truths, and Divine truths, and merely asked they be put into existence, into practice amongst all people, for all were born equal. What right has my boy or my girl to have special privileges, when the children of the man next door to me, who works as hard as I do, have no privileges at all. That would not be equality. That would not be Americanism.

And who gave those strange announcements to the world at large? Why those few people who braved the dangers of the broad Atlantic, and who left the nearest and dearest place on God's earth to them, no matter how humble,—the place where they were born, and who came here in search of liberty and happiness. And what class of people were they: why, in Massachusetts it was the Puritan; in Rhode Island the followers of Sir Roger Williams; in Pennsylvania it was the Quakers; and in Maryland the Catholics; and they all sought this land with one common purpose, and that was, freedom of conscience, and to get away from religious bigotry and strife, and to be able to worship God in such form as their conscience dictated. And the great Omnipotent looked with pleasure upon this new form of government rising in the western hemisphere.

But changes have come about. We have been crazy for a few years. The great World War has turned things upside down. The spirit of brotherliness in the City of Brotherly Love has seemed to have disappeared, and instead there has seemed to be the spirit of Cain and Abel, and the disregard of responsibility as to being one's brother's keeper. We will get better, we will settle down, but we will only settle down when we realize the dignity of the particular position we occupy, and will only settle down when we recognize the rights due to others, when we try to be of service to our fellowmen.

About three weeks ago, I said to my old friend, Governor Stuart: "Governor, how are we ever going to get on the level again and act like sane people?" He paused for a moment, and then he replied; "You will have to get more of the grace of God into the hearts of men; you will have to couple religion with Americanism, and by religion I don't mean going around with a miserable face, making everybody unhappy, and feeling you have religion when perhaps you are only bilious." (Laughter.) "But religion that is live, animated, real, that will bring sunshine into the hearts of those who are downcast, and there is no necessity for a man who goes to church to have a long face and act as if he had just received a sentence from some police magistrate. Because back of it is this, and don't make any mistake: no man can be a good member of any church, and I care not what it is, or have that proper spirit that is associated with religious belief and religious devotion, and at the same time be untrue to the American flag or American principles. I don't care what the church stands for—that America stands for. The church stands, and all churches do, for the equality of the souls of men and the rights of men before the law. They both have the same mission, and we know when we are true to our country, and live up to the principles and are true to the spirit on which America has been founded, we are performing in a great measure the obligations due to the great Father of us all."

So let you and I return to our separate pathways. Many of us will never see one another again, but you and I, loyal to the flag that floats above us, and devoted to the service of this great republic that was founded on such great principles and ideals, will carry those principles out into our conduct with men, with our business associates, in our business undertakings, and perform the duties that we are under obligation to perform. We can say in the words of the song, that "Your ways are my ways, your love is my love, your God is my God."

Your ways are my ways in the endeavor to uplift and equalize the burdens of men. Your love is my love for the great country of which we are all a part, and its ideals and its principles. And your God is my God, the Common Father of us all, the Great Omnipotent who has showered His blessings in unstinted measure upon this great republic and upon each and every one of us. And let us be forever faithful to the Great Omnipotent Father who reigns on high and to the flag that floats above us. (Applause.)

MR. WATTS:

My friends, we have before us a great opportunity for service. Let us go about our business, the to-morrow that come, with a new declaration, knowing that we must give if we are to receive, knowing that brotherhood is, has been, and always will be. Let us keep it within the heart of each one and know that this principle cannot be erased. It is that guiding something within the breast of each one. Let us rededicate ourselves, we lenders, let us rededicate ourselves again to service.

There has been a great desire in my heart for a long time to pay tribute to a man I love—not because he has blue eyes, not because he is a man born up in the North, but because of some peculiar quality within himself, which radiates and attracts, and has the effect of bringing people more closely to the great Infinite, so that it is rather a privilege to avail myself of this opportunity to present to you a man that we Philadelphians have come to know as a great preacher, a man's preacher, a man giving the word of God in a practical way that men can understand, that men run not away from, a man who has the courage to stand out from among his fellows to say what was written in his heart. This privilege is mine now, and I am thankful to the great Infinite and the channels through which this has been made possible. That is quite personal, yet I do not take out a word of it.

I have a friend who comes down here from Washington State, and he always sends the subject of his lectures on in advance, and the first thing he says after he has been presented is, that he never lets his subject interfere with what he is going to say. I should not be surprised if Robert Norwood would not let his subject interfere with what he is going to say, because these two fellows are about alike.

I suppose I ought to be real dignified and present to you Dr. Robert Norwood, of St. Paul's Episcopal church, but he tells me his name is Robert, and I present to you Robert Norwood, the great joy of my heart.

REV. DOCTOR ROBERT NORWOOD:

Charley Boy, Girls and Boys: I came into this room to-night aged with a sense of responsibility, but, by gradual degrees, that sense of responsibility was lifted from me as I grew young again with youth; for there is no one of you to-night among the very young who is incapable of becoming younger, and there is no one of you like myself, among the very old, who is also incapable of becoming younger. For life is a series of returns to that point of beginning which we call 'childhood.' We return to it again and again; and, with each return, we renew ourselves, in order that we may go on to fulfill our obligations on this planet. For we are on this planet because we are in the plan of the Great Infinite—in His plan to this extent; that without us the plan could not be filled; and only as we realize that we are in the plan, will the great dream of the Creator Himself be fulfilled.

Now, I warn you, first of all, that I will insist upon everybody in my audience listening. I will become insulting to that first man or woman, who, by virtue of inattention, is not following me; because it is impossible for me to function apart from the comradeship of souls, impossible for me to think, unless I am aware of the fact that my audience is thinking with me—not because I am a dictator, but because I am a democrat; because I believe that man can do nothing here on this planet, save through the coöperation of his comrades. And that thought, I think, will serve as my first point of departure this evening.

We had a most admirable message from the speaker who preceded me. I am glad that the order of the program was changed that I might have the benefit of the inspiration of his utterance—the utterance of a true American, an utterance that was American because he spoke that word that we most need today in the United States, and that word is "tolerance."

But what is "tolerance," my comrades? Only as we listen to another, only as we have regard for that other, only as we believe that we can learn nothing apart from one another, do we become tolerant. Not by leaning on the counsels of far-away yesterday but by listening to human hearts, by waiting upon human hands, and by attending upon the benedictions of the smiles of human friendships are we able to interpret the task that is before us to-day, and to find the power to fulfill that task.

I was very much impressed (and I am sure you were who heard him not long ago) with what Lloyd George had to say concerning the final test between government by autocracy and government by democracy. Government by autocracy is a thing we presumably have left behind us. We no longer believe in a power that is invested solely in an individual, whether the individual be a person or an institution or a movement. No true American can ever be an autocrat in a sense that he repudiates the authority of the many. And that leads me to the second point in my words to you this evening.

You will notice that I am advertised to speak on a theme called "The Challenge of Life." I want to be consistent, and I want to justify my right to speak this evening on such a title. What is that mysterious thing which we call life, that burden which we are bound to bear whether we find it pleasant or disagreeable, whether it means the treading of paths of pleasure or the paths of pain, the paths of success or the paths of failure? What is it that we mean when we say "life"? To us it means "to be alive," to be conscious of the fact that we are not alone in being alive; for life means, not only our consciousness of ourselves, but our consciousness of others—that wheresoever we are in the world, there is an awareness of others.

A great scientist recently said, "Life is the correspondence of an individual to his environment." Do you know what that means? have you fellows forgotten your first adventure in the old swimming-hole? You had seen the other fellows go in, but you had always been afraid of the first plunge. It looked easy, but you realized that it would be difficult, and that the enterprise of the first adventure would be attended by disagreeable, physical things. But the day came when you screwed up your courage to the undressing point, and then the diving point; and when you made the dive, something happened between the point of your departure and the point of your arrival, for, instead of corresponding to that environment known as the water, you landed upon the portion of your anatomy known as the diaphram, and instantly all the fresh air was forcibly ejected from your lungs. Then you began to swallow all the water in the pond, until one of the fellows, being afraid you might swallow all the pond, dove in and grabbed you by the heel, and towed you ashore. There you sat, with the world reeling around you, and the fellows laughing at you, and you feeling as I felt some time ago, when I went up on the ferris wheel with my little girl, and something happened to the wheel, and we remained up in the air. But you came back at it the next day. Some of you even played "hookey" in order that you might be able to correspond to that new environment; for you knew that you would never really live as a boy until you had mastered the challenge of the old swimming pool. And so, day by day, you kept at it, until you found you had mastered it by corresponding to it, by adapting yourself to the law of gravitation.

Several months after that, Jack Frost came and did something to the pool with his beautiful brush, made from the comet's tail and dipped in the great splash that is known as the "Milky Way." He painted the surface of the swimming pool, and one of the fellows said, "We can skate on it." And you said to yourself, "I mastered the environment of water this summer; now I am going to skate." And you remember how confidently you put on your skates; and then, when you assayed the new environment called "ice," the ice was so eager to greet you, it ran up and kissed you on the back. Then, perhaps it was, you took your first lesson in astronomy, and became acquainted with all the stars with which the skies are filled.

But you were not discouraged; you kept at it from day to day, until, by slow and painful and humiliating degrees, you began to learn how to skate; and you only did it as you learned how to swim—by keeping at it, by keeping at it; and you found joy in the mastery of it.

I am asking some of you fellows if you remember your first experience on that most diabolical of all enemies—the golf course, and how often you sliced, how you put badly, how sometimes you were even tempted to kick the ball (and I have done it several times when the other fellow wasn't looking). But you kept at it until, by slow degrees, you learned to play golf as well as I do—135! (Laughter.) But you weren't discouraged; in fact some of you are so brave and so fine that, in your determination to adapt yourself to the environment of the golf course, you haven't time to come to church on Sunday morning. (Laughter.)

Now, I use these as parables to illustrate what I mean by this challenge of life. Each one of us to-day is surrounded by environment. First of all, it is the environment of our immediate family, our home, the environment of our friends, the environment of the people with whom we do our business, the environment of citizens, such as constitute our cities.

There was a time when I believe that Halifax, Nova Scotia, my native city, was the greatest city in the world. In this, of course, I was mistaken, as any man is bound to be mistaken, who is born in a small environment, and who runs away with the idea that that is the ultimate environment. We heard a great deal to-night about Irishmen. I am going to tell you of the finest kind of Irishman. He is in this room to-night. His name is Charley Watts. He is the kind that gets born in Canada and then, by slow degrees, wins his way to American citizenship, as I did four months ago. It was in those far-off days that I considered Halifax, the love of my boyhood, as the best thing in the way of cities. Sometimes, in those boyhood days, when I went to church and heard the great cry of the Babylonian captive, "If I forget thee, oh Jerusalem, let my hand forget its cunning," I said, "I always feel that way about Halifax." But now, the strange thing is, that I say to myself, "That is the way I feel about Philadelphia;" (applause) because I have been forced to adapt myself, not only to a new environment but to a larger environment—the difference between an environment of some 60,000 people, and the other of nearly 3,000,000 people. But I am always incorrect when it comes to statistics. The only time I ever get figures correctly is when I discover Mrs. Norwood has been through my pants pockets when I was asleep. (Laughter.)

You cannot live without some kind of an environment; and you cannot live unless you are willing to adapt all that you have to that environment. We want to live.

We had a very distinguished visitor from France a few months ago, who told us American people that all we have to do each morning between the greeting of our face with the safety razor and the finding of our collar button, was to keep whispering: "Every day, in every way, I am growing better and better." And it got most of us by the ear, and we believed it for a while, in spite of the fact that it is one of the most blatant errors ever perpetrated by a very kindly soul. Such a method is not true to life. It is not by using some formula, it is not by bowing to some symbol, that you and I live, but in obedience to a greater than Mr. Coue, who said, "It is not every one that saith 'Lord, Lord,' shall enter into the Kingdom of Heaven, but he who doth the will of my Father."

If you want power, it is there for you; but it does not come merely by saying something. Power comes as you have the courage to live. Joy is yours, but joy comes to anyone only as he or she has learned to laugh through tears. Hope comes to nobody, until he has found it in the very path to hell. Wisdom: it comes to nobody except through the mistakes he has made. Love—that greatest of all words, which to say, is to define God; love, the power that moves mountains, because love and faith are two aspects of the same experience—love will never be yours, never be mine, until we have torn out of our hearts hatred, jealousy and suspicion.

What is the purpose of all this? I bring to you to-night the challenge of life, for life wants to use you; and because life wants to use you, life is no respecter of persons; and because life is no respecter of persons, we are all born equal.

I said to a prominent editor a few days ago that the thing we call "genius" is a misnomer; that the so-called clever boy or clever girl at school is an illusion; that there are no graces of the intellect, no charms of personality, that are denied to anyone of us. We ought to give fully and abundantly of our love; we ought to be able to make friends, and to hold them. We are all meant to be happy, meant to be successful, meant to be good, meant to be healthy; and if these things are not ours, it is because we are cowards. We are afraid to accept the challenge of life; because there is not a single thing of value to you or to me that does not come as power came by way of the old swimming pool, the skating pond, and the golf course, even if it happened to be on a Sunday morning. Life is the corresponding of an individual to his environment.

Do you realize what was said to us this evening about Americanism? Americanism means that the people who are in America are here mainly because they have accepted the challenge of an environment, just as a "blue-nose" boy accepted the challenge of environment that eventuated in bringing him here in Philadephia. So you and I to-day are American citizen because it is the greatest environment in the history of civilization, because it is the proudest and widest environment for the human soul. That which gives the greatest room for the movements of the human soul is that which we call 'democracy'; and to be worthy of that democracy, on your part and my part, calls for courage—the courage to turn our backs on whatever we believe to be untrue to America, even though it hurts.

When I came to the United States six years ago, I said within myself: "Now, at least, I shall go among a people where aristocratic snobbery is not." A king has only divine right, as he is hedged about with class privilege. Strike at the class privilege, and you strike at the king. Remove the king, and there is no longer any economic or social necessity for that class privilege. I have traveled considerably in the eastern states of this new country of mine in the past six years, and I have discovered as much aristocratic snobbery as I have found in the old world. America will never be America until she frees herself of her aristocracy—that kind of aristocracy, which, whether based on money or on blood, seeks, for itself and its own, privileges which are denied to the masses. I wondered, while the Honorable Mr. Logue was speaking, how far he would go with me in this matter, how far my audience would go with me in this matter; for I say that America will never be America until the dirtiest little boy in the dirtiest part of the city, and the most ragged little loving Mary in the most miserable cottage, will have the same opportunity for culture as the boys and girls, whose fathers can afford to send them to highly select schools and expensive colleges.

We are being faced to-day by the greatest of all challenges, and it is coming in terms of a new and social democracy. America will never be right, and I will never be satisfied with America, until all special schools, all particular social privileges, have been abrogated from this American land. There must be, for every boy and girl, equal opportunity, providing that that boy or girl wants the highest opportunity; and you cannot have a democracy that is based on cash, or a democracy that is based upon a genesis that has authority only because it is still feudalistic, and which though denying the divinity of a king, asserts the divinity of the chosen few, who once upon a time waited upon that king. There can be only one aristocracy in the United States, and that is the aristocracy described by Tennyson:

"Howe'er it be, it seems to me,
'Tis only noble to be good.
Kind hearts are more than coronets,
And simple faith than Norman blood."

And so I charge you American men and women to accept the challenge of life. There can be no doubt about it that the business man of the United States to-day has a greater opportunity for expression of his genius than any other business man elswhere in the world. What will you do with your opportunities? What does it mean that you are prosperous? Does prosperity mean only good roads, or the good accruing to certain social or civic conditions; or does prosperity include also the opportunity for the boys and girls of America to rise up to the very highest pinnacle of their dream in the fulfillment of the challenge that is coming to them through their great democratic environment

I do not think that speakers like myself can do much. I do not believe that the people who write books can do much. I do not believe that even the churches can do much. I do not believe that even educational institutions can do much; but, apart from the lawyer, and the teacher, and the consecrated man, are the business men of the United States. You business men are the real custodians of democracy. You are the real aristocrats. You are the real guardians of a new opportunity that is coming to us to-day in terms no man can mistake.

I want my message to-night to be one of confidence as well as conscience. I will not rest content—I must not say, until you men, old and young, of this city, have taken advantage of your opportunity; for this is the thing that you must do—but I must say to every woman in my audience, young and old, that only as the woman of to-day meets the challenge of life that is coming to her in terms of a higher comradeship as a result of that which she, struggling through the ages, has won (her right to vote and participate in the affairs of this great nation) will she fulfill her destiny.

I do not care whether some of you smile at me or not; I do not care whether some of you think I am taking advantage of an opportunity to preach or not. I say, hang your smiles, and I care not a whit for your confounded cynicism. It seems to me that the hour of destiny is so great upon America that the whole world is waiting for every American man and woman to realize their opportunity.

When the war was on, and President Wilson said: "This is to make the world safe for democracy," he only touched the truth. The truth is, and we know it to be, that the world will never be safe until democracy is true, until American men and women have become democratic in character; in their social, business, political, and spiritual relations. Only as every man and woman in America to-day feels the challenge of life—the challenge of life coming over the centuries, the centuries of crosses, the centuries of dungeons filled with great heroes suffering for the truth, the centuries of broken homes, the centuries of disappointed dreamers—only as America is true to this challenge out of the past, that becomes our own in face of the present opportunity, will America stand permanent and fixed among the nations.

America can never live unless she corresponds to her environment, and America is the only country on the face of the earth to-day that is setting itself apart from the task of lifting democracy so high that it becomes a star on the torch of the Goddess of Liberty—a star that shall send its light out into the darkened ways of the world, guiding the feet of the weary, that at last they may find, in this new environment, an opportunity for the fulfillment of that promise which was made when the poet sang: "And I, John, saw the holy city coming down out of God." That holy city is democracy; that democracy is America, and its sanctity and permanence can only be final and lasting and real as you and I accept the challenge of life.

I thank you, my comrades, for a most gracious attention to my words. If I have seemed to preach overmuch, if I have rebuked a bit, it is only because there is no faith that I have in any future that can compare with the faith that I have in America. When I became an American citizen, I became it because I believed life was challenging me; and only as I, the individual, in this United States, seek to adapt myself to the opportunities that you present to me, can I be worthy of that gift—a gift that to me is so unspeakably precious that I sing within myself, as I conclude: "If I forget thee, may my tongue turn to water and I speak never word more, may my heart beat no longer, and may my eyes be dust in the sleep of death." Not to be alive in this wide, appealing environment of democracy, as America is interpreting it, is to be dead; but to be alive in it is to be aware of opportunity, is to fulfill our dreams, in happiness, in relationship of friends—dreams that more and more will bring to pass the vision of the Gallilean, and of the prophets who went before him, who sang of a time when the earth should be filled with the knowledge of the Lord as the waters cover the sea.

If there is in any soul to-night some apprehension of to-morrow; if there is anywhere among you one little note of pessimism, or tendency to discouragement, or sense of defeat, let me tell you these are trumpet-blasts to your souls from the Most High—the affirmation of God in your Godhead, of the Christ that is to be manifested in you, in your character individually, in your character collectively, as America is a nation among nations, of those who wait for the manifestation of the sons of God. (Applause.)

PAWN BUSINESS GROWS TENFOLD IN TEN YEARS

Paris Municipal Shops Do Annual Trade of Three Billion Francs

Paris, Jan. 6.—The business of the Paris "Monte-de-Piete," or municipal pawnshops, has increased ten times since 1913. The amount of loans, which stood at 325,000,000 francs the year previous to the war, reached 3,375,000,000 last year.

"Nothing could show more clearly the difficulties of Paris life, in spite of the apparent prosperity," was the comment of M. Edmond Maze, general manager of the pawnshop system. "Not only has the amount of our loans increased tenfold, but our customers now are recruited mostly from the middle classes, the petit bourgeois families parting with their heirlooms to meet the increased cost of living.

"The branch of our pawnshops in one of the most fashionable wards of the city is doing twice the volume of business done in the so-called poorer districts. The classes that used to be regarded by labor as privileged now furnish our most frequent visitors."

ADDRESS WANTED

Sol. H. Vogel, Treasurer of the Trenton Loan and Realty Company 414-415 American Mechanic Building, Trenton, New Jersey, will be obliged to anyone who can locate a skip by name of Albert or Bertram Hoppack and Mary his wife who formerly lived in Trenton and left there owing Mr. Vogel's company an unpaid balance.

As they are reported to have gone to Chicago, perhaps some Chicago member has some information that will assist Mr. Vogel's company in collecting the balance due it. What do your records show?

SOME INTERESTING LOAN EXPERIENCES BY MEMBERS OF THE N. F. OF R. L. A.

Given At Their Fifteenth Annual Convention, Sioux City, Ia., June 7-9, 1923

MR. PALMATIER: We all, of course, have interesting experiences in the loan business. Recently we were called upon for an immediate loan of $150. It is our usual method not to do things in a hurry, and I went out and appraised the security. They had a nice home, better than the ordinary. This man had been employed by Swift & Company, in South Omaha. He had only recently decided to sell his home and move his family back to Colorado to her folks—that was the story he told to me. I made the loan of $150, and a month later, when the first instalment was due, no payment having been made and no word received from them after a few days we sent a notice. The notice was returned unclaimed. Going out to the house I found that he had sold his equity in the home and had left the city the day after the loan was made, and nobody knew where he had gone. Bootlegging, it was found, was his principal business at that time.

His wife had left him and was going to get a divorce. Well, I finally located a remnant of the furniture in a storage house after visiting them all. I sort of had some faith in her naturally, she being a woman, although I had little in him, but I found out afterward she was as bad as he in some respects. I had on my original application the address of her people in Colorado, and naturally I concluded she had gone there. We addressed several registered letters to her, and the registration card was returned apparently with her father signing her name per his own. She aferward claimed she knew nothing about it and it wasn't his signature. Anyway it ran along from May to the latter part of October, and we had traced him around to different places, and finally decided to dispose of the remnant of the stuff. The principal item of security had been a parlor suit costing something like $400 originally, as they claimed, but that had been disposed of and we couldn't find any trace of that. It happened, however, that I hadn't filed my chattel mortgage as I had no reason to believe they weren't all right, and I didn't file it until I found the furniture had been disposed of and there was no chance of getting hold of it any way. For some reason our attorney didn't submit the notice by publication as required in our state, and because of the principal items of the furniture having been disposed of, we sold some pieces in the house to the people who bought the house, we didn't itemize every piece as required by law. In a general way we did mention them, but not specifically.

Well, she returned the latter part of October and appeared at our office, and after considerable parleying—she was at the office two or three times and I won't go into all the details regarding that—she at first was very penitent and made excuses and all that sort of thing. To go back, in selling the furniture I bid it in, as there were no bidders at the warehouse, and put it in a local auction storage warehouse and told them they might sell off the rough stuff, but I intended to keep the personal effects as I knew there were things of value they would naturally want taken care of. I didn't tell her right away after her return that these things had been preserved—thought I would let her pant a little, as she had made no attempt to pay up or let us know where she was. After two or three visits I made her a proposition. Out of consideration for our keeping all her personal effects of any consequence, her bedding, etc., and she had very good stuff, better than the ordinary at the time the loan was made and as my appraisal showed, I told her we would return that to her. But she wasn't satisfied, and the reason was that her husband had been back and didn't want her to do this. What she did do was to sue us, claiming she didn't know anything about any of the mortgaged property having been disposed of. She got hold of some lawyer—we have some that will take any lawsuit on a percentage basis—and he thought, after going over the situation and looking up the notice published, that he had a case, which, of course, he did to our sorrow. Well, the case came to trial and we were beaten, and we got a nice little judgment of several hundred dollars against us — seven or eight hundred dollars. Ninety per cent of the furniture was returned, but she claimed any number of items that were never there. This all happened because my schedule wasn't itemized. I learned something, of course—but paid dear for my experience. They claimed we took articles we had no mortgage on and had no right to dispose of it, that it wasn't properly advertised and was improperly sold. If it had been properly sold, of course, they wouldn't have sued us, but because it was improperly sold it prevented us from winning the case. We felt there was no use appealing the case, as the schedules weren't according to law, and we took our medicine. However, we have different attorneys now.

Mr. Ryan: We opened a pledge department on March 7th of last year, and made arrangements with a jeweler on the floor above us to do some appraising for us. He was in the office with another man who was just starting in business for himself; he had left the employ of one of our directors who was a jeweler. He was a sort of manufacturing jeweler in a small way, setting diamonds and making rings. We made arrangements with the two of them that if we got anything in the diamond line they were to give us a price at which they would be glad to take the diamonds off our hands at that price, plus ten per cent. Things went along in nice shape until about October, when a fellow came in and wanted a loan of $200 on a diamond ring. We took it upstairs for appraisal and it was appraised at $175. I cut it $10 and made the loan. The fellow was a follower of the ponies and had a string of horses, and was just temporarily down and out. I rather regretted making the loan after he had the money, but I let it go. He told a long story of his life. Later on I found that he had come while I was away and got another loan of $155 on another diamond ring—I saw the same name but let it go. Well, our business took a sudden jump, for at the start we had few large loans, but I laid it to the fact that we were becoming better known and were advertising loans on diamonds. Along in January, I believe it was, we had made by that time a number of large loans—we made a loan of $330 to a lady and shortly thereafter a loan of $550 to the same lady. And shortly after that a loan of $825 to another lady who was brought in by the person we had made the two loans to, a Mrs. Hart. And later on in January or the early part of February a man came in with a ring. I took it to the messenger whom we sent to get the jewelry appraised, and he said that he had seen this man over in the appraiser's office nearly every day. I thought that was strange so I asked the fellow if he knew our appraiser, Mr. So-and-So, and he said "No." He asked for $185 and when we got the ring back it was appraised at $185. I was a little suspicious and cut the loan down—thinking I would at least have the interest in cash if I got stung. In the meantime the two loans that we had originally made to this horse dealer became delinquent, and we notified him at the address given and the letter was returned "Unknown." I met him on the street one day and got him to pay up. But on March 1st the fellow who had been doing our apraising moved out and was too far away to handle our business, so then we began dealing with the other fellow who was still in the same building. So I took these diamonds to him to have him look them over, and the diamond we loaned $185 on he said was worth $75, and another about $60. They weren't diamonds, but sapphires. Then I asked him if he knew this fellow and he said he didn't know him by that name. When I said he was in his office on the other side of the building with this other fellow, he said that was not his name, his name was Hart. So we had made two loans to his wife of $330 and $550 and two to him of $165 and $185, all in the family. So I went to the house and rang the bell but nobody came to the door. I went back a second time and waited at the door and this man stepped out and slammed the door after him. I said, "Good morning, Mr. Hart or Mr. Cline," and he said, "Or Mr. Brown or anything that comes handy." I asked him what he was going to do about the loans. He said he wasn't going to do anything; that we were in the loan business and would have to look out for ourselves, and I told him I would take the matter to the prosecuting attorney, but he said they couldn't do anything with him. So I went to our former appraiser and he pretended he didn't know anything about the deal—that everything was all right so far as he knew. That was Monday and I gave him until Thursday to take the matter up, and in the meantime I saw our present appraiser, and he said we couldn't do anything. I had our attorney write a letter, and on Thursday we went to see his wife and she said her husband was out of town and asked us to call on Monday. And on Monday a man came over to see our attorney and stated he represented a certain bank—in fact, he represented two banks. It seemed that our former appraiser had our attorney's letter in his pocket and while doing busi- with the bank's cashier he had stooped over and our letter had dropped out on the desk, and after he was gone the cashier picked up the letter and read it, and saw that we were accusing the man of fraudulently appraising diamonds. He then came over to us to explain the situation, and he said he would see that we got our money. Well, he came in next day and brought me in fifteen bright new one hundred dollar bills and took up several of the loans, and assured me that the two loans we knew of as having been made to Mrs. Hart would be taken care of. So I let it ride along and when the $825 loans expired, I went out and told the lady who I was, and she said she had no loan with us, and when I asked if she had not come in and borrowed $825 on a three-carat diamond ring, she said that was Mr. Hart's, and it was. Well, we called up this man and he came the next day and brought over the money for that. I began looking over the books and we had approximately forty large loans, and I venture to say that while the forty loans aggregated $8,000, I could not sell the diamonds for over $3,000. What connection there was between the appraiser and the banker I can't find out. He wouldn't tell and assured me our loans would be taken care of and we wouldn't lose anything. I believe this is the same man who has been working in other places. He goes into a town, has the goods with him, makes connection with some other fellow, and then goes to a remedial loan association and gets the money.

Dr. Robinson: I can't think of any incident particularly interesting, but I have met a number of these old fellows that were loan sharks like Mr. Coffey mentioned, and some of them are very interesting characters. There was one old fellow I met in the salary loan business who was a man of ability and who would have made good in anything—there was no doubt about that. I asked him how he got into the salary loan business and he told a long story that was particularly interesting to me, because of his connection with politics and public officials. He said he happened to be in a certain town doing some kind of work, and had a little part in public life there. This was years ago, of course. They had a pretty hot election in the town, and wanted to get out the workers and to get a little spare cash in the campaign fund. So they levied an assessment on the political office holders and some couldn't pay. This was a common thing in Pennsylvania—I don't know whether it was ever done in this part of the country. So the bosses told this old fellow that if he would pay these assessments they would give him their salary warrants, and that was what he did. He paid their political assessments for these office holders in this city, and the public officials in the city offices turned over to him their warrents for salaries and they couldn't collect them without coming to him. He charged them five per cent to get the warrants away from him, and that was the way he got started in the salary loan business, and made quite a success during his life-time. I thought it was the most interesting beginning I ever heard of in the salary loan business.

GEORGIA.

The Third Annual Banquet of the Georgia Industrial Lenders Association was held in the main dining room, 7 P. M., at the Ansley Hotel, Friday evening, January 11th. There were 69 present and many expressions of a grand and delightful evening were heard. The attractive menu and program cards with the portrait of Judge Richard Russell, Chief Justice of the Supreme Court, "The Abraham Lincoln" of today, and the most beloved mortal in the State of Georgia was on the front cover of the program cards. The tables were prettily decorated with flowers, and beside each plate was placed favors of all descriptions, also song sheets with popular selections.

Immediately after all were seated, a flash light photograph of the banquet was taken, which proved to be a fine picture. During the dinner, we were entertained with classical and jazz selections by the Oglethorpe University Orchestra, songs by Georgia Railway and Power Company Quartette, and the piano solo by Mrs. Abernathy, and during the courses of the dinner, popular songs were sung by all. The dinner and the service was unexcelled.

The Honored guests present were Dr. Charles G. Mueller, National Chairman American Industrial Lenders Association, Philadelphia, Pa.; Judge Richard B. Russell, Chief Justice Supreme Court of Georgia; H. S. Strozier, President Kiwanis Club, Macon, Ga.; B. S. Barker, Secretary Atlanta Chamber of Commerce; E. A. Thompson, Assistant Superintendent of Banks, State of Georgia; Mr. and Mrs. C. K. Ayer, Capitalist of Atlanta; J. Frank Meadow, Atlanta, Ga. There were also many ladies present.

Col. Tillou Von Nunes, prominent Atlanta Attorney and church worker presided as toastmaster. Mr. A. B. Madison, Chairman Georgia Industrial Lenders Association, delivered an address of welcome, which was a very beautiful and touching one. His speech:

Mr. Toastmaster, Members of the Georgia Industrial Lenders Association, Ladies and Gentlemen: If it had not been for the fact that I would have missed a perfectly good time this evening, I might just as well have sent a ten-year-old schoolboy up here to read my address of welcome, for that's what I am going to do—read it. In welcoming you here this evening, the word welcome has a significant meaning to me. Having knocked at the doors of quite a number of cities in my past few years, I can truly say that I know what a true welcome means, it is one which makes you feel perfectly at ease and at home. It is such a true welcome I extend to all of you, and to each of you this evening. The best thing in life is good fellowship and a mutual understanding such as is fostered by organizations like the Chamber of Commerce, Civitans, Rotarians, Kiwanis, Bankers and Grocers and Retail Merchants Associations, the American Industrial Lenders Association, and last, but not least, our own Georgia Industrial Lenders Association.

In my younger days when I was very much younger in experience, and I would read an article in the newspaper where a so-and-so organization had held a big banquet, I was always skeptical of the bunch; in my simple way I figured out, well, these guys are having a banquet and a get-together meeting so as to figure out how to get the best of everybody else, but as years passed by I began to see the light and to get the true understanding of what association really meant.

Hon. Richard B. Russell, Chief Justice Georgia Supreme Court.

I found out that the very heart-throb of such meetings, gatherings and associations was to figure out and devise ways and means whereby they would increase their service and decrease the cost; to make their business vocation or profession a factor in making the lives of others more happy, hopeful and to fill them with sunshine; to break down the cold and austere barriers of the old type or line of business and to conduct it more along the lines of the Golden Rule.

There are, no doubt, young men and women in this country to-day—young in experience—who look upon associations and organizations through the same foolish eyes as I did, and if I can succeed this evening in putting over the message correcting them on this subject, even though only a few, I shall feel very happy, indeed.

The Georgia Lenders Association is founded along the lines of other associations, that is, the doctrine of selling a service, putting across a message, correcting the erroneous idea and misunderstanding that all persons who associate themselves together do not do so from purely selfish motives. We want the public to know that this association stands only for that which is high class, ideal and beneficial to the masses; to put that across; to be understood, is all we ask.

In conclusion I wish to say that at this, our Third Annual Banquet, we want you all to have a good time, to eat, to sing, to dance and be merry, to throw off the yoke of business or profession, to lay aside the responsibilities of State or office and to be just for the night great big overgrown kids again and to seem to realize just what the author meant when he wrote "Backwards, turn backwards, Oh Time, in thy flight, and make me a boy again just for to-night."

Dr. Mueller, our National Chairman American Industrial Lenders Association was then introduced and as per usual his address was a masterpiece, which was as follows:

Mr. Toastmaster, Ladies, Guests of Honor, Members of the Georgia Industrial Lenders Association, and friends: It was with a deep sense of gratification that I as National Chairman received your kind invitation. My presence is expressive of my pleasure at being here on this the occasion of the Third Annual Banquet of your State Association, and I extend you heartiest congratulations.

In the march of human progress for the benefit and uplift of mankind, your Association has taken a very prominent part, notwithstanding its brief existence. Much credit is due your initiative and untiring effort.

It is the spirit of the times that those engaged in the same line of business join forces to make that business better. It is a mistaken conception that those engaged in the same kind of business are competitors. It should not be so. Their relations should not be competitive but coöperative. In this way only can they advance to the highest degree their individual interests and the business in which they are engaged.

The business of lending money to men and women of good character in modest circumstances is a most worthy cause. The ramifications of its service touch more closely the intimate lives of the masses who borrow than merchandizing or any other line of endeavor. It is a big service, widely in demand; otherwise, there would not be employed approximately $150,000,000.00 in this particular kind of financial service to industrial classes. Employers recognize that their most efficient employees are those who are happy and contented and are not having their minds disconcerted by domestic or financial disturbances.

That the need for some such special branch of finance will be permanent, there is no greater authority than the Master Himself, who said: "The poor ye have with you always." I speak in terms of the improvident and not the indigent. The Jeffersonian principal that all men are born free and equal is a beautiful ideal, but unfortunately they do not stay so. Half of the world does not know how the other half lives, nor for that matter does it care; in fact, one-half the world sees no particular reason why the other half should live. The short and simple annals of the poor are: Born, taxed, forgotten. Truly in no other line of business is there greater opportunity to employ the twofold service of successfully admitting sentiment into business.

Occasionally concern is expressed because rumor has it an amendment will be proposed to the existing law, effecting a reduction in the rate of interest now permissible. Our advice is not to dignify that sort of gossip by giving recognition to it.

It is quite true there are many minds trained in economics and practical domestic finance searching for light that will provide the necessary fiscal machinery to enable worthy and deserving borrowers to have their needs alleviated at the very minimum cost to them. For the present, however the Uniform Small Loan Law as it is now written on the statute books of Georgia, represents unqualifiedly the most commendable and efficacious small loan legislation anywhere, without exception.

Through the medium of this modern legislation a number of reforms have come to pass that have failed of this accomplishment through every other legal, social and moral agency. By first enacting legislation that makes secure the investment of capital and offers a fair return thereon, a source for adequate funds is made available, and a monopolistic tendency is overcome which has heretofore had a governing influence on the charge paid by the borrower. Secondly, the requirement preliminary to obtaining a license, that the applicants shall be good citizens, precludes the admission in many states of the type of lenders so universally abhorred. It invites into this business of making small loans to the industrial classes, a grade of business man unexcelled in any other line of endeavor. For often these men of high character engaged in other pursuits became financially interested in the lending business. They do in this way help in moulding the lenders' policy in his relation with the borrower and thus assure a standard of fair dealing not to be excelled in any other enterprise.

This fine type of man of affairs is not always influenced to enter the business of lending money to necessitous persons by desire for personal gain. He has altruistic motives and civic righteousness for his guide. It will be recognized at once that without modern legislative machinery such as is reflected in your existing Uniform Small Loan Law, the entry of this type of leading citizen into the business is out of the question.

Opposition to the present rate usually comes mainly from two sources. The well intentioned but grossly mis- or uninformed, and the over zealous, ambitious legislator, unacquainted with either the extreme necessity for the business or little concerned regarding the actual facts. This is the experience of the Russell Sage Foundation of New York City, (at present engaged in making a comprehensive survey of the small loan business) and many others in a number of states, where the Uniform Small Loan Law has been enacted and efficiently operated. A number of Colleges, Professors of Economics, civic, social and commercial bodies are devoting a great deal of thought to the question of "what is an equitable rate."

In support of this rate, if that may be deemed necessary, a resume of the states having modern small loan laws fails to show a single instance, where the supervising authorities have had opportunity for investigation, examination and audits of licensees' books recommend a lower interest rate or compensation than that prevailing. On the contrary, several states have amended their laws by increasing their rate of interest on small loans on a par with that of Georgia. In this respect the former Commissioner of Banking of Pennsylvania made such recommendation to the Legislature in 1919, amending the small loan act of 1915, raising the rate of interest from 3% and less to 3½% per month on unpaid balances.

In New Jersey where a law similar to your own has been on the statute books since 1914, and where the quality of supervision is unequalled, the law has remained unchanged. There seems to be a growing appreciation by the Supervising Department of the essential Community service rendered by licensed lenders of the State.

In Pennsylvania, where the law is similar and the rate identical to that of Georgia, former Commissioner of Banking Fisher, in addressing the Pennsylvania Association at one of their regular meetings, said in substance:

"It gives me great pleasure to look into your faces and to meet you personally because I want to compliment your Association and its members on the scrupulous effectiveness of their business conduct. It may please you to know that the Banking Department has not had a single violation of the law under which your business is conducted requiring the suspension of a single license during my term of office."

This bespeaks the possibilities attainable where the State Association coördinates its policing proclivities against unconscionable lenders who disregard the law and the supervising authorities. Here is a splendid opportunity for the Georgia Association to emulate the accomplishments of older, more experienced successful State Associations.

There is also that obligation to those who by their courage, energy and confidence in the remedial potentialities of the Uniform Small Loan Law, have made possible your gathering here to-night. Justify and vindicate these pioneers by maintaining a necessary and adequate financial service that will be representative of the highest standard of ethics and human helpfulness, so you too will not be required to employ a High Commissionaire as a mouthpiece, so popular these days, to alibi your business conduct.

We ourselves the better serve by serving others best. This service may be placed in three classes.

Service to the Borrower,
Service to the Merchant,
Service to the Banker.

To render the best service to the borrower does not always call for mere granting of a loan. Proper advice at times is decidedly more essential than actual possession of money. To help those seeking financial relief with constructive suggestion many times relieves anxiety, clears up misunderstanding and lets the sunlight into the lives of heavy hearted folks.

In Baltimore recently a borrower asked for a large accommodation. Inquiry developed existing past due instalments on furniture and piano, along with other bills for groceries, rent, doctor, etc. An analysis made possible the reduction of the loan to a much smaller sum. Instead of paying the entire bills only past due instalments were brought to date. Thus the borrower was relieved of immediate stress of mind and purse.

In another instance in Pittsburgh a borrower was sent to jail because he was drunk and passed two worthless checks, aggregating $10.00. The lender interested himself in the case and when he called at the home found the home barren. It had been stripped of its furnishings by an irate father, who had previously given the furnishings as a wedding gift, but ncensed over his son-in-law's action, came back and took physical possession of the personal property, leaving only a small cot on which his own daughter lay with a four days old child. The Lender mmediately got in touch with the local chamber of commerce, related the facts and through united effort the amount of he two bad checks was made good, the man freed and a position obtained for him immediately. The furniture was also estored to the family, who moved into maller quarters and were made happy once again. These are only several of numerous instances of opportunity for genuinely helpful service that is actually endered daily by legitimate lenders.

There are unrecorded examples where he lender has been instrumental in bringng together estranged man and wife. nstances where intercession with furiture companies have restored furniture o delinquent customers, cases where ound advice has been given with respect o investments and where legal aid has een furnished in times of almost deenceless imposition. There can be no ainsaying that this is truly a meritorious nd necessary service integral with the usiness of making industrial loans not lways compensated for in the cash egister.

Next, there is the lender's service in he community to its merchants. Through he medium of the lender's service it is ossible for embarrassed customers to ay their bills promptly to merchants with whom they have credit. Aside from the eneficial effect in helping the borrower o retain his good credit standing and elf respect, it makes possible a frequent turnover for the merchant, who comes to treasure the customer "as good as cash."

When the National Retail Credit Mens Association put forth its drive for "Pay Promptly Day," such as the merchants of Atlanta contemplate on January 19th, next, the lenders of this fair city will have a splendid opportunity of rendering exceptional mutual service. They will not be found wanting.

Then there is the final classification of the Lender's service to the banker. When it is considered that available statistics show not more than about 8% of the population have checking accounts and that approximately less than 5% of those having checking accounts are eligible to borrow at a bank, it will be seen immediately that there must be a great number of worthy persons who are unprovided for in an emergency. There is that vast body of solid citizens who carry savings accounts and yet a very high percentage of these are unable to be accommodated at banks.

This is not intended as a reflection upon the banks, but merely a statement of fact. It is quite obvious that with the varying degrees of risk involved banks which accept depositors' money cannot afford to take great risks. Neither are they equipped to handle a multiplicity of small transactions at the rate of interest provided for under the banking laws. In consequence the industrial lenders fill a very great need by alleviating the financial needs of many thrifty, worthy and deserving persons without bankable collateral, who would otherwise suffer great inconvenience and mental agony. Approximately 88% of the population are without bankable security but eligible as a prospective borrower at industrial loan institutions. Only by providing a fiscal agency to help them in their hour of need can contentment be brought to this great mass of American people and their families.

One of the finest tributes to the business of Small Loans as conducted under state license and supervision, is the recognition by many local chambers of commerce of the essential service rendered by lenders. Their sympathetic encouragement and coöperation have made possible accomplishments that would have been deemed impossible but a few short years ago. When merchants and lenders join the same forces they eliminate miscarriage of effort and multiply the power of concentration for commercial, civic and economic betterment.

A fine example of the power of cohesion of these forces is manifested by the Philadelphia Chamber of Commerce. A few years ago, after the enactment of modern small loan legislation in the State of Pennsylvania, a group of legitimate Philadelphia Lenders became members of the Philadelphia Chamber of Commerce. They were not content with membership alone, but asked for the privilege of active participation in the affairs of the Chamber of Commerce, which was granted. Soon merchants and lenders found that there was a great advantage to be gained from joint membership in the merchants' credit bureau of the chamber. This amalgamation of interests was formulated and to-day the chamber bureau has on file approximately six hundred thousand names, or about one quarter of the entire population of the city.

Supplementing this credit bureau, Mr. Smith, the active secretary in charge, coördinating his effort with the Philadelphia Lenders created an adjunct in the form of what is known as the Philadelphia Lenders Exchange Bureau. This bureau functions after this fashion: At the close of each day, every subscribing lender sends to the bureau a complete list of every applicant for a loan, in the form of specially prepared filing cards containing certain specific information concerning the prospective borrower. This information is received the following morning by the Chamber of Commerce Bureau which immediately checks its files and clears the respective names, advising each member lender every morning before ten o'clock the status of the small loan applicant. The exchange bureau has prevented prospective borrowers from obtaining loan accomodations from more than one lender at a time, and at the same time, from borrowing in excess of $300.00 in amount, as prescribed and intended by law.

To-day there is not a single borrower or prospective borrower in the City of Philadelphia whose status is not known or available to all member lenders. Neither is it possible for confidential or single-signature loans to be contracted. By that is meant loans obtained by either spouse without the knowledge of the other. In former days, it was a common practice of unscrupulous lenders to make confidential loans to married women without their husbands' knowledge, reserving this information as a club for effective collection methods in the event of delinquency. Investigation has disclosed that in instances of this kind the wife almost invariably would have to "rob the table" or resort to other ruses in order to meet the agreed monthly installments. While on the other hand, married men have frequently endeavored to obtain loans without the knowledge of their wives; to pay drinking, gambling and other foolishly contracted debts. In either instance, it has not made for a happy state of felicity, and certainly not condoned by present-day legitimate, licensed lenders. The borrowing public also came to know quickly that it is more advisable for them to make frank, truthful statements than to attempt to equivocate or resort to subterfuge. There has also been a marked lessening in bankruptcies and other loss entailing devices so much abhorred by merchants and others who extend credit to the general public. The effectiveness of this Bureau prevents borrowers from sacrificing themselves by becoming hopelessly involved. Its elevating effect can hardly be appreciated except by observation and experience.

It is through the aid and development of such agencies as the Lenders Exchange Bureau that there is hope for a reduction of losses with their attendant heavy expense of collection, and this will make the operation of lending less costly, thereby, eventually contributing to the economic advantage of the borrower. A lower rate, however, requires the smooth operation of essential machinery and the general coöperation of merchants, bankers, legislators, sociologists, and others interested in the human family, in order to minimize the cost of handling a great number of small transactions.

The expense involved in attracting the borrower, recording the information on his application, investigating the statements made, searching the title to the security offered, if any, and the bookkeeping necessary to record the periodic installments of the loan, which is vital to the convenience of the borrower, and maintaining proper records required by law, all must be substantially modified before there will be the least justification for a reduction in the present rate of interest charged in the State of Georgia.

It must be remembered that lenders furnish their own capital and cannot accept deposits. Many lending organizations employ the modern corporation as a vehicle. This usually requires the sale of securities, a process essential but costly. As time goes by and the business of making small loans becomes better understood, appreciated and more stabilized then it is to-day new devices and the evolution of business practice by licensed lenders, plus competition, will make another contribution to a very definite objective, namely a lower rate for borrowers in urgent need. For the present, however, the prevailing rate of 3½% is amply justified bv its proponents.

It is a far cry from the time of primitive barter when man exchanged part or all of his possessions for what he needed or wanted most. The enactment of the Uniform Small Loan Law makes it possible for the humblest worker in the land to retain his modest possessions and yet obtain what he needs or wants most. Certainly, here is a conveyance that will bring sunshine into the lives of wage-earners, deserving more than a mere passing notice. It is commended to your active and unselfish prosecution for the best interest and service of mankind. I thank you.

As the applause had quieted there suddenly arose a young man from his chair, apparently intoxicated and insisted upon making a speech. He informed the toastmaster that he was sent by the Governor of the State to make an address. After creating much disturbance and scaring the convention half to death, especially the ladies. The master at arms, Mr. C. Y. McCollum, leisurely walked over to this drunkard to eject him.

He had him nearly to the door, struggling and still insisting that the Governor had sent him around to make a speech and that he was going to make it. They were stopped by the toastmaster for a moment and he informed the convention that there are three things that a drunken man wants to do; tell a funny story, cry, or sing, and as he did not want anybody to tell funny stories but himself, and as he did not care to have him cry at such a joyous occasion, suggested that he might sing to compensate for his dinner. He agreed to do this and Mr. John Hinton, known as the McCormick of the South then sang "Ten Thousand Years From Now" in a beautiful, rich, high tenor voice, and was encored until he sang two other beautiful selections. It all proved to be a great surprise, and needless to say that everyone present with the exception of those that had arranged for it were taken in and actually frightened.

This was followed by H. S. Strozier, prominent attorney and president of the Kiwanis Club, Macon, Ga., whose address was immensely enjoyed, and in part was as follows:

There is one thing of practical import I want to say to you and that is that I believe that you people who are in the Small Loan Business are filling an absolutely vital economic necessity. I believe that your business is absolutely necessary to the community and the community cannot get along without you. The Small Loan Business is necessary, and that's the reason why I am interested in it. Dr. Mueller has given you the economic rule upon which the law is based, and I am not going to have anything to say about that. The majority of the members of the Georgia Legislature come from the country counties and do not know what the Small Loan Law is and what its object is. All they see is that you are allowed to charge a high rate of interest, and the only remedy is to do what you people are doing with this dinner and this meeting to-night—creating a public sentiment that will make everybody realize that you are engaged in a business which is absolutely vital to the economic life of the community. The people of this State ought to be made to realize it is that kind of a business, and that it ought not to be wiped off the Statute Book of the State of Georgia. I am with you and will do all I can and work all I can and help you to do all you can to keep that law on the Statute Books in order that it may continue to fill the vital needs which it fills at this time. (very much applause.)

The toastmaster responded that you can go down to Macon, Ga., and bring a man up to Atlanta and he will certainly have something to say. This was followed by a selection rendered by the Quartette. It was encored by everybody and forced to sing two more songs.

The main speaker of the evening, Judge Richard Russell, Chief Justice of the Supreme Court was then introduced. In introducing Judge Russell, the toastmaster told a true story about the Judge; A circus came to town and the Judge who has a big family, 9 boys and 8 girls, (Judge corrected and stated that there was 10 boys and 8 girls, (an exact dozen and a half took them to the circus. He purchased tickets for one of the side shows. The ticket seller congratulated the Judge for bringing the orphan asylum to see the show. Judge Russell informed the ticket seller that it was not an orphan asylum, but his own children. This amused the ticket seller so much that he told the Judge it was not necessary to go in to the side show, that he would bring the side show out to see them.

The most beloved man in Georgia then spoke. His speech in part was as follows: Governors can speak and attorneys will argue until you feel like a piece of furniture, but judges are expected to be bosses and say what the law is, and I ought to be sitting here looking wise as an owl and decide to-morrow whether you are foolish or not. I want to take a hand in everything, and I want to say that I approve of your business. I approve, as Mr. Strozier said, of your Money Lenders Association because it is not the work of the loan sharks that were not satisfied even though they might get 32 per cent a week. This is a reputable business that fills an absolute want, an absolute need. There are thousands of people that we don't know how they live. It is no sin to be poor, because the poor have been my friends; they have always been my friends; they have always loved me when few loved me, and with my dying breath I never expect to deny my sympathy for them when in this world a kind providence has given me treasure, though he has denied a bare existence to many of my more unfortunate brothers. I look upon your business, properly conducted by honorable men, as affording to a large class of our people who cannot elsewhere obtain in the time of very direst distress that accommodation in business that others who do not need it half so badly can so easily achieve, with such a large class of people where their character is good and their small property put to some value as a pledge and pawn to enable them to tide over a hard time, and properly regulated by law, the business of the money lenders of this Georgia Money Lenders Association, as I understand it, especially in view of the talk so comprehensive as has been made by the President of the National Association, is destined to grow, to increase, and to extend new accommodations, lower rates of interest and more accessory advantages to the very people among all our population who need at various times money accommodations and extension of credit. That is what I think of your Association.

I love everybody in this world, because, you know the same worm that eats the pauper will eat the prince. Alexander Stephens told me that when he was living, when I was quite a young man, and it rings in my ears to-night as it has for forty-five years, when he said "Richard, my son, one thing I want you to remember, when you shall from your condition rise, act well your part; there all the honor lies, and don't forget, my boy, if you have success, that you must not get proud, for the same worm that eats the pauper eats the prince." And, therefore, in the progress of your business you must carry it on with a tenderness that loves your fellow man. If your Association accomplishes any good even in a financial way, if you make a success, it has got to be because you love your fellow man and that your purpose is not to oppress and distress your fellow man to get back money at usual rates, while you cannot afford to do it for nothing, but are prepared with all the tenderness of the Good Samaritan to put a hand to the support of your weaker brother and help him across the path when he needs assistance, that's the business of the money lending association. I have said about all I want to say, but I want to impress one sensible thing; in all the fun I have tried to have, and I hope you have had, and that is that this Association has a high and vital purpose, and if it has that every class of citizens as well as you yourselves, doing your duty, should get behind it. For, we don't live to ourselves; we live in deeds—not in thoughts, and each one of us should not only be a real Georgian that loves the poor as well as the rich, but in this great commonwealth of our good country, I thank God that the flag of the Union floats forever and we go onward as the last hope of republican institutions as a light for all time for all nations has been established on this earth, overruling the mistaken idea that might is right, the greatness of these institutions, its blessedness to those people one hundred and fifteen millions in number, is a preservation of our people, and we have machinery for business and for government for all time, handed down by our forefathers to us as a priceless heritage, and with no lock or tie stronger than a spider web, there is no force on earth that can crumble the molds or shackle the steps of that very proud emblem of eternal government.—Columbia Free.

After very much applause Mr. E. A.

Thompson, the Assistant Superintendent of Banks of the State of Georgia, was then introduced. He expressed himself as very happy to be present but he would have to be excused as he had not prepared a speech and that it would be impossible for him to follow the Judge.

The toastmaster then made two propositions; that the one receiving the most applause would be the one to carry; A selection by the orchestra or a song by the quartette. The applause was about equal, so the orchestra played and then the quartette sang.

The meeting adjourned at 11 P. M., followed by a dance until midnight, and everyone enjoyed themselves to the fullest extent. F. B. Snyder, Secretary.

CREDIT UNIONS.

Bank Commissioner Allen of Massachusetts in His 1923 Annual Report Makes the Following Reference to Credit Unions:

"Credit unions are now in operation under laws of the Commonwealth which do not give the public the protection which, in my opinion, they have a right to expect. Supervision of these institutions has been and is very expensive, owing not only to the inadequacy of the present laws, but also because of the lack of financial experience among those in charge of many of the credit unions, as well as frequent changes in management. Careful consideration of all phases of this subject has made it quite apparent to me that the statutes regulating this business should be revised in many important respects. Changed conditions have, I believe, led the credit unions away from the original intent of the framers of the law. Although at the present time performing a meritorious service, they should, in my opinion, remain true to the purpose for which they were originally established. Unless there are radical changes in the laws governing them, it is my judgment that a situation is very likely to arise which will subject the savings of members to unnecessary hazard.

In order properly to safeguard this business and to insure its operation in the proper direction, I strongly recommend that consideration be given to corrective legislation. Therefore, I respectfully urge that a committee be appointed to study and recommend changes in the present laws. In this connection I particularly call attention to the unrestricted deposit privileges and the lack of regulations covering the loaning of funds. In view of the good work being done by these institutions, I believe that they are entitled to the benefit of remedial legislation."

CHICAGO TAKE NOTICE.

Dear Mr. Kehr:

Will you kindly coöperate with me through the Industrial Lenders News in locating the address of Louis and Anna Ruda, formerly of 49 Ivy Street this city, and from most recent reports now located in Chicago, Illinois.

The addresses we have received were as following: 519, 1913, 1490 or 1940 Peoria Street or Avenue, and 1319 Irving Street or Avenue. We directed registered mail to these addresses but have been unsuccessful in locating them, although we are absolutely certain that these people are now located in Chicago, as their furniture was shipped via the N. Y., N. H. & H. R. R. Company to that destination.

Mr. Ruda is a tailor by trade and was formerly in the tailoring business in this city. He is a man thirty-eight (38) years old, medium height (5′ 6″), stocky build (165 pounds), black hair, dark eyes, and clean shaven with a heavy beard.

Very truly yours,
T. C. O'Brien, Manager,
Equitable Industrial Loan Society.

PLAN OF BUYING WAGES HELD CONTRARY TO LAW.

Judge Rules Against Baltimore Finance Company in B. & O. Case.

Purchasing of part of the salaries of employes of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company by the Baltimore Finance Company was held to be contrary to law in an opinion filed yesterday in the Circuit Court. The case was heard some time ago by Judge Carroll T. Bond.

The finance company had been buying the rights in earned wages before pay day. In the case before the court W. L. Miller had been paid $20 for his salary of $21.50.

The finance company, according to the opinion, denied the constitutionality of the statute, which makes invalid any attempted assignment of wages or salary not in conformity with its provisions. Baltimore Sun, January 24, 1924.

FIGHT ON LOAN SHARKS WILL BE PUSHED.

Association Lends Support to Victims in Nation-Wide Campaign.

By Cosmopolitan News Service.

Philadelphia, Jan. 24.—Anthony P. Nugent, of Kansas City, attorney for about 200 alleged victims of "loan sharks" in that state, will receive the full support of the American Industrial Lenders' Association, Charles G. Mueller, national chairman, said to-day.

In a letter to the attorney, Mueller stated a nation-wide campaign to eliminate the evils of extortionate interest rates on small loans would be launched by his association. The latter is composed of individuals and corporations engaged in industrial financing in those states where the business is licensed and regulated by law.

Money-lending becomes an instrument of cruelty and oppression wherever the state, through indifference, has permitted avarice to impose usurious interest rates, Mueller's letter said.

Mr. Nugent's clients are mostly railroad men. In their line evil of usurious lending is said to be particularly acute. Interest rates on small loans run from 240 to 480 per cent a year, according to the stories of some of them.—Baltimore News, January 24, 1924.

SMALL LOAN LENDERS NOW LICENSED.

Beginning with next month, money lenders, who come within the scope of the law-enacted by the General Assembly at its last session, those making small loans must obtain licenses from the Bank Commissioner in order to legally transact business in this State. The law effects all persons, firms and corporations making loans of $300 or less, for which the rate of interest is greater than 12 per cent.

This law, which is distinctively favorable to those who are obliged to obtain small loans, received the attention of The Providence Chamber of Commerce, which not only took a rather active part in passing resolutions in favor of the then pending bill, but its representatives appeared at the hearing that was given by the legislative committee to which the measure had been referred, to urge the desired enactment.

Bank Commissioner George H. Newhall has prepared forms for the application, bond and license, and while several requests have been made for the application blanks, none has actually been filed. The name and address of an individual, all partners of a co-partnership and all officers, if a corporation, must be given with their place of residence, and location of the place of business.

Corporations must also show the date and place of incorporation, together with a certified copy of its regulations and by-laws, and if the applicant be a foreign corporation, a certified copy of its articles of incorporation, together with its regulations and by-laws, must accompany the application.

The fee for a license is $100, which goes into the State Treasury. Every licensee must file a bond payable to the State in the penal sum of $1,000 for faithful compliance with the law.—Providence Magazine, December 1923.

SOME MORE INTERESTING LOAN EXPERIENCES BY MEMBERS OF THE N. F. OF R. L. A.

Mr. Phillips: The occurrence of my story was just a year before the incident related by Mr. Palmatier, and in connection with a pledge loan. A young fellow came into the office one morning and wanted to borrow $10. I inquired what he wanted to borrow the $10 for and he said he wanted to get some carpenter tools to go to work with—that he was out of work and could get a job if he had some tools. I said, "What have you got to get the loan on, and who are you, any way?" He pulled a letter out of his pocket and said, "This letter might tell you who I am," and handed it to me. It was very nice stationery and contained two letters. I opened one and it was headed, "To Whom It May Concern" and went on to say that the writer took great pleasure in recommending the young man—he was, as you could tell at a glance, a man of ability, education, etc.—and that any assistance given to him would be greatly appreciated. Enclosed with it was a personal letter beginning "Dear Norman: Your letter of recent date was turned over to me by my Secretary. While it is contrary to the custom of the office to give letters of recommendation, however, you and I are such good friends and have had such good times together, I take great pleasure in giving you this recommendation," and was signed "Your true friend"—who do you suppose? Warren G. Harding, the President! It was on White House stationery and a White House envelope, and mailed the day before from Washington. It was absolutely genuine, there was no doubt about that. I said, "I will tell you what I will do. I will lend you $10 on these two autograph letters." I wanted to find out just what the situation was, and figured the letters were worth $10 any time. He said he was willing to leave the letters with me as a pledge for the $10, and this was done. And I found out everything was just exactly as represented. He was a young fellow who had been through everything in the service, had been wounded, gassed and shell shocked, and while he was absolutely harmless he was subject to a desire for wandering around and drifting from one thing to another, not being able to put his mind on anything, although he had been a man of education, and wanted to do odd and peculiar things, like getting tools to do carpenter work with. His case was very interesting. He came back for the letters. His family were well to do and he was very well connected in Halifax—I believe it was—he didn't really need any assistance. He had married a nurse who was also in the service. It was one of the most pitiable cases I ever heard of. But when the President says that any favors shown a man will be greatly appreciated, whether he needs $10 or not, I am going to let him have it.

Mr. Reid: The incident I have in mind may be of interest and of some help to some of you. A woman came into the office one day and wanted a loan on a two-stone diamond ring. I happened to wait on her and asked her how much she would like to borrow and she said $200. I took a look at the ring and it had a new setting—white gold, Tiffany, with a gold band around. It was the first I had seen this setting, and I made up my mind it wasn't genuine. So I took it to the window and talked the matter over with the appraisers so they wouldn't be deceived. The woman commenced to get nervous because we were talking it over, and so I finally went over to the counter and commenced to talk to her about the new setting. She said it was bought in New York for cash. In the meantime, I had instructed one of our employees to call up police headquarters. My object in doing this was that if she was trying to trick us, we might keep somebody else from getting caught. She was getting more nervous and it was pretty hard to hold her. She kept reaching for the ring but I held it back, and finally she got so nervous her lips were white and she turned and left the office without the ring. So I sent somebody to follow her. The building has a front and a rear entrance, and as she went out of the front door our man went out of the rear door and around the corner and saw her meet somebody. He confronted them, and the fellow started to explain that he had bought the ring in New York in good faith. Our man then told them that if they had been cheated they would probably like to know it, and that our appraisers had found that it was a sapphire instead of a diamond. Well, he got them both back into the office, but the woman wouldn't stay and got out before the representative came from headquarters. They took the fellow to headquarters and talked the matter over with him. He gave his right name and right address, and didn't have anything else on his person. But the funny part of it was that within an hour another dealer on our same street came in and asked if there was a woman in to see us with a two-stone diamond ring that she wanted to pledge. He said she had been in his place and wanted 200, but he wasn't sure whether the ring was platinum or gold and had only offered her $150, and she wouldn't take it.

Mr. Auger: I suppose you have all heard the expression voiced usually by some unfortunate victim of a "loan-shark" that, "they would take the shirt off your back." I had the experience of viewing a literal fulfillment of that remark not so long ago, as did a goodly gathering of men and women in the lobby of our business office.

During the noon-hour rush of a busy day, a gentleman presented himself at one of our appraising windows and asked how much could be loaned on the suit of clothes he wore. He stepped back a few paces in order that the appraiser could give him the "once over," and when told he could borrow two dollars on the suit, hesitated just a moment, and then calmly commenced to disrobe.

You can well imagine the feelings of all of us there, and yet we all were so surprised at the turn of events that all sense of energy left us and we could do nothing but stand open-mouthed and await the climax.

And it wasn't long in coming, either. The spectators, both out in the lobby and behind the windows, had hardly time to realize just what was going on, or to be more correct, what was coming off, before our hero was slipping the suspenders over his shoulders. And here's where the ladies present began reaching for their salts bottles. The removal of coat and vest wasn't so bad, but when it came to the trousers—well, as we remarked when it was all over, we failed to discern any wild rush for the exits! You would think that in a crisis of this kind some one would act, but I guess we were all so busy breathlessly awaiting the next development in the case, that we simply didn't that's all.

And what is more, our hero didn't bat an eyelash but kept right on with the business in hand, and in less time than it takes to tell, he was back at the appraiser's window with his three-piece suit draped around his arm instead of his manly form.

We made him the loan, and in the interim, all the ladies and gentlemen outside had an opportunity to study one another's flushed and embarrassed countenances, the while they dwelt mentally upon that peculiar complex of nature that kept them wide-eyed and spellbound in the face of so delicate a situation as a man publicly removing his outward habiliments.

Fortunately for all concerned, however, our hero had thoughtfully provided for emergencies, in that he had his "second best" under his good suit, and while the final outcome didn't necessitate a riot call to police headquarters, we all agreed that in the few minutes during which he was the center of attraction, he certainly gave us a run for our money.

CAN YOU MATCH THIS?

R. S. Hecht, President of the Hibernia Bank and Trust Co. of New Orleans makes an interesting reference in his annual report to the stockholders just published in which he says:

"All of this has tended to somewhat curtail bank profits generally, and ours have been no exception to that rule. It is gratifying, however, to be able to report that after making full provision for all known losses, setting aside liberal amounts for doubtful accounts, and again writing off on our building and fixture account the maximum amounts permissible under the Income Tax regulations, the bank has paid its usual dividend of 24 per cent per annum.

"In addition, the Hibernia Securities Company, Inc., whose common stock is carried by five trustees for the pro-rata benefit of the bank's shareholders, has declared a 20 per cent dividend on its common stock of $10 par value, thus bringing the total disbursement on the bank's stock up to 26 per cent."

MARYLAND.

The first of the series of luncheons was held by the Maryland Industrial Lenders Association, at 1 p. m. on Tuesday, January 8, 1924, at Hotel Emerson, Baltimore, Maryland.

The guests present were Howard Bryant, president Baltimore City Council; also attorney for our association, William G. Towers, vice-president Baltimore City Council; also prominent attorney, Dr. J. N. Stewart; Pastor Pimlico, Baptist Church, Clinton G. Morgan, vice-president Citizens National Bank of Maryland; Fred Fisher, Collection Manager Beneficial Loan Society of New York City, Mr. C. H. Watts, Secretary Pennsylvania Industrial Lenders Association; E. C. Krichton, Manager Security Finance Company of Baltimore and S. P. Sanderson, of Sanderson & Company, Baltimore,

Among the members present were: Louis F. Eckhart, Roy T. Baseman, L. F. Brust, Peoples Loan Society; W. F. Oliver, Jr., Household Finance Service Company; J. D. Goldrick, Union Loan Company; George W. Holden, Beneficial Loan Society; H. C. Moore, Peoples Finance Service Company; Clifford L. Smith, Bernard Lotz, R. A. Long. T. V. O'Connell and Martin Laur, Master Loan Service Incorporation; E. E. Hougham, Atlas Loan Company; C. A. Gardner, United Finance Security Corporation.

Reverend Dr. Stewart pronounced the Invocation, and after partaking of an old-fashioned chicken dinner, Chairman Gardner introduced Mr. Bryant, who as attorney for our association gave a splendid talk, the main gist of which covered the likelihood of our present Legislature increasing the jurisdiction of the Peoples Court of Baltimore City from $100 to $500. This will be the means of relieving the higher courts of litigation covering small amounts. This litigation is endorsed by the Baltimore Bar Association, and there is no question but what it will become a law.

The next speaker, Mr. Wm. G. Towers gave us an interesting talk covering the efficiency of our Mayor and his splendid staff of assistants, also laid special stress upon the wonderful growth of our city. Baltimore is at present the seventh city in the United States, and if we continue to grow in population and in industry as we have in the past few years, it will only be a short period of time until this may be the second city in America in National importance.

Mr. C. H. Watts responded in his usual good hearted way in talking to the boys as one loan man to another.

Being chairman of the Legislative Committee of the American Industrial Lenders Association, he urged the Maryland Lenders to coöperate most closely with the Banking Department. Live the true spirit of the small loan law, not attempt what some licensee in one state in particular is doing, namely permitting one client to carry a greater amount than $300, by making him three or more loans, different members of his family endorsing the papers or vice versa.

Thinking people and public sentiment in general will force the Legislative Powers to change the law not only in this state but elsewhere if this practice is followed to any extent.

To the knowledge of the Maryland Association, the true spirit of the law is being lived up to by every licensee.

H. C. MOORE, Secretary.

INFORMATION SERVICE.

New York—All possible support to a nation-wide campaign against unregulated money lending and extortionate interest rates will be given by the American Industrial Lenders Association, it was announced here to-day by officials of the organization. The Association is composed exclusively of individuals and corporations engaged in industrial financing in those states, where the business is licensed and regulated by law. The announcement was accompanied by a copy of a letter written by Charles G. Mueller, National Chairman of the Association, to Anthony P. Nugent, of Kansas City, Mo., attorney for some two hundred alleged victims of "loan sharks" in that state.

In his letter Mr. Mueller expressed the association's hearty support of the movement to eliminate the evils of extortionate interest rates on small loans, and proffered its coöperation in it, declaring that the association for years has been engaged in the same effort, which he characterized as "a championing of oppressed humanity" deserving of the approval of every right thinking man and woman in the nation.

The business of industrial lending, Mr. Mueller's letter continued, is a necessary one, and, properly conducted, a humane and useful activity which, however, becomes an instrument of cruelty and oppression wherever the indifference of the state has permitted the avarice of unscrupulous men to impose usurious interest rates upon borrowers. Asserting that cruelty and extortion inevitably result in communities where the business of making small loans is unlicensed or unregulated, the letter states that long study of the situation has convinced economists and sociologists that the only solution of this world-old evil lies in the adoption by the several states of scientific and modern legislation requiring the licensing and regulation of the lending business and fixing the maximum interest rate that may be chargel on small loans.

Attorney Nugent, it was announced, replied accepting the Association's offer of support of his fight against loan sharks which he declares he will carry into every corner of the nation, where the evil may exist. His initial move was made last month when on behalf of John N. Rhodes, a railroad switchman, he filed a damage suit for $100,000 in the Federal District Court in Kansas City, Mo., against seven men, who, Rhodes alleged, conspired to extort usurious interest from him. Nugent, who is attorney for two hundred other railroad men, alleged victims of usurious lenders, says that the evil of extortion is particularly acute in railroad circles where interest rates on small loans run from 240 to 480 per cent a year.

It is estimated that the annual volume of small loans in the United States totals $150,000,000. It is the contention of legitimate lenders that this total amount constitutes only a very small per cent of the credit needs of industrial borrowers, estimated to be about 86 per cent of the country's adult population, and that the absence of protective legislation, which deters necessitous borrowers from hazarding usurious charges, is a denial of their legitimate credit needs.

To remedy this condition, in Kentucky a bill has been introduced in the Legislature of that State, providing for the regulation and licensing of lenders and fixing the maximum interest rate that may be charged, without disturbing commercial banking rates. The proposed law is modelled on the act drafted by the Russell Sage Foundation of New York City, and now in effect in about a score of the states. The bill is sponsored by the Louisville Legal Aid Society and has the endorsement of welfare workers throughout the state.

INDIANA.

STATE OF INDIANA
ATTORNEY GENERAL'S OFFICE
INDIANAPOLIS

December 22, 1921

Hon. Maurice L. Mendenhall, Administrator,
Indiana Securities Commission,
Indianapolis, Indiana.

DEAR SIR:

I am in receipt of your letter of December 17, 1921, asking whether finance companies who had taken out a petty loan license were exempt from the provisions of the securities act.

Division 8 of Section 10 of the Securities act provides that the term securities as used in said act shall not include "stocks, notes, obligations or other securities * * * * of any bank, trust company, building and loan association, society or insurance company organized and doing business under the laws of this state and subject to the examination and supervision of the proper authorities thereof."

If such companies have any claim for exemption it must be under said section and upon the ground that they are societies subject to the examination and supervision of state authorities.

Chapter 125, Acts 1917, known as the "Petty Loan Law" provides that no one shall carry on such business without first obtaining a license and giving bond, it is further provided that "the auditor of state (now bank commissioner) for the purpose of discovering any violations of the act, may either personally, or by any person disignated by him, at any time and as often as he may desire, investigate the loans and business of every licensee and for that purpose shall have free access to books, etc. It also provides that such concerns shall keep their books and records in a certain manner so that the said examiners may readily ascertain whether the concern is complying with the law. The act also provides for the giving of certain receipts and otherwise controls their conduct.

The question arises whether said requirements are such a supervision as to entitle such concerns to exemption under the securities act. A study of the petty loan act shows that the purpose of the supervision, or right of supervision, given thereunder, is to disclose whether such concerns are observing the provisions of such act. There is no investigation as to the nature of the loans, that is as to whether they are amply secured or other facts pertaining to the solvency or other business conduct of such concern. The supervision seems to be for the benefit of the state and not for the protection of the stockholders or holders of securities of such concerns. The manner and purpose of the supervision of such concerns seems different from that exercised over banks, trust companies, building and loan associations, etc.

When all of these matters are considered, I am of the opinion that although petty loan companies technically are under state supervision, that they are not under such supervision as is necessary to obtain for their securities the exemption given by Division 8 of Section 10 of the securities act.

Very respectfully,
ATTORNEY GENERAL.

ILLINOIS.

Your association will again hold its regular quarterly meeting at the La-Salle Hotel, Chicago, on the afternoon and evening of January 25th.

At our last meeting it was decided to hold the business session in the afternoon and turn the evening session of our January meeting over to the managers. This has been arranged for and the business session will be called to order by President Tyson at 3 o'clock in the afternoon. (See announcement board for room location).

Dinner will be served in the East Room of the LaSalle Hotel, at 6 o'clock.

The manager's committee, consisting of Mr. Sanderson, chairman and Mr. Coler, both of Chicago, will conduct the evening meeting in as strict accordance as possible with the program, copy of which accompanies this announcement.

There is always important business to be taken care of and vital questions to be discussed at our business meetings and every licensee member should be present for the afternoon meeting.

Participation in state association meetings by managers is becoming popular all over the country, which is conclusive that such meetings are beneficial and advisable. Like everything else, it takes experience to work a thing out successfully and we all should lend a helping hand and make allowances, as this is only our second attempt at conducting such a meeting.

There is, undoubtedly, ample talent on the program to make this affair a big success, provided a spirit of enthusiasm and willingness to act is exhibited.

The officers and manager's committee vigorously urge that every man in the business be present and come prepared to briefly express his views on the selected subjects.

Trusting you will realize that the success of this meeting depends upon your attendance and your participation, I am

Respectfully,
L. T. BAKER,
Secretary.

OBITUARY.

Members will regret to learn of the comparatively sudden death of Charles H. Harris, owner of the National Loan Co. of Pittsburgh. Mr. Harris was a member of the Pennsylvania and American Industrial Lenders Association from the date of their organization until the time of his death. For two years he was the treasurer of the Pennsylvania Association. He rarely missed a meeting of either association and could always be counted upon to do well any duty assigned to him. He is survived by a wife and daughter to whom we extend our sympathy.

IOWA.

Leslie Whitmer, President of the Provident Loan Association, Sioux City, Iowa, sent each member of the Iowa Legislature now in special session the following interesting letter together with a copy of the annual report of his institution:

"Realizing that the small loan business has its inning in nearly all sessions of the Legislature, you may be interested in knowing the exact workings of this association.

"Under separate cover we are sending you our twelfth annual statement and complete report.

"As you know, the small loan business in Iowa is licensed and bonded, and is under the supervision of the State Banking Department.

"In Iowa and twenty other states there prevails the Uniform Rate Law for small loans. The Iowa rate is 3½ per cent per month on unpaid balances and the loans are prescribed from $10 to $300.

"There has been much discussion about the fairness of this rate. Individuals and organizations who have made thorough investigations have found it a just rate. It has been shown that it is fair to the borrower and to the lender. In loaning his money the lender has no deposits to use as in the case of banks. He must stand the expense of investigations and appraisals of outlying chattels, of heavy collection cost, of frequent losses due to family troubles and borrowers' physical incapacity; of maintaining offices and help and must show a sufficiently profitable business to attract capital with which to run his business.

"Our experience shows conclusively that the smaller loans of $10 to $50 are ofttimes the most imperative, yet at the legal rate of 3½ per cent, these loans show an actual loss—the cost per loan is greater than the income.

"As to the necessity of the small loan business, there is no argument. About 65 per cent of our population, who do not have security acceptable to banks, are compelled to borrow money at some period in their lives. They must seek the small money lender.

"Without the Uniform Rate Law, small loans would be made at exorbitant interest rates. Ten to 20 per cent per month are the rates money lenders are exacting in states that have not adopted the Uniform Rate Law.

"If you will please glance through our report, you will find that only a fair and reasonable profit has been made by this association. You will find that our net profit last year, on a capital stock of $124,005.32 was 7½ per cent, and in this amount is a surplus of $15,000.00, accumulated over a period of eleven years.

"You will also please find in this report that 2,818 loans were made during 1923—an increase of 421 over the preceding year. You will also note that on the first of this month we had 1,885 live accounts—the average loan being $110.80.

"We are calling your attention to this association and to these figures, to show the important mission the small loan business fills in our financial system. And to show also, that in Iowa, at the present legal rate, small loan companies are making only fair profits and that the small borrowers are being taken care of in a dignified and businesslike manner, and are not paying excessive interest rates for this service.

"Taking both viewpoints into consideration—that of the lender and that of the borrower, the present legal rate is working satisfactorily.

"We thank you for your attention."

ONLY THE LOAN SHARKS ARE AGAINST THIS.

If you want to start a poor man's bank, you have to have a State law. Fifteen States now have such laws, and all over those States humble people are being kept out of the clutch of the loan shark and are moving upward by learning, through their credit unions, how to save money and how to lend or borrow sensibly and cheaply. In Massachusetts the credit unions showed an increase in assets during this past year of about $1,250,000. How about your State? Laws to make credit unions possible are now up for action in: Iowa, Mississippi, New Jersey, Maryland.

In Colorado petitions are being circulated to put a credit-union bill on the ballot for vote of the people next November.

Speaking of the failure of the Maryland Legislature to enact a pending credit-union bill in 1922, the Baltimore Sun said:

"Those who would have benefited from it are not powerful politically, and the bill could not have strong support if that support be measured by practical standards. But it was based on a sound and practical theory, and in some form it should have passed."

That hits the nail on the head. Credit-union laws move slowly because there is no selfish motive to urge them. No individual or organization gains directly or indirectly by a penny's worth if a credit-union bill is enacted. But the bills in all the four States listed above will pass if the plain people who have been writing to Collier's about poor men's banks get to work on their legislators. Tell your legislator that here is a chance to vote for a bill that benefits nobody except the small income earners and hurts nobody except the usurer.—Collier's, the National Weekly, Feb. 2, 1924.

SIEGE GUNS OPENED ON LOAN SHARKS.

Friends and Foes Battle Over Measure Before Statutes Committee.

By Robert E. Dundon.

Frankfort, Ky., Feb. 5.—Heavy siege guns were trained on the intrenchments of the "Loan Sharks" this afternoon when the House committee on Kentucky Statutes, of which Harry Miller, of Lexington, is chairman, held a two-hour session to hear both sides argue House Bill 105, introduced by Representative Leon P. Lewis, of Louisville, and which is known as the Russell Sage Foundation uniform small loan law.

The first speaker of the loan shark hearing was Walter S. Hilborn, of New York City, acting director of the division of remedial loans of the Russell Sage Foundation. He said that there are sixteen money lenders in Lexington and thirty in Louisville. He cited cases to show in some instances as high as 432 per cent a year has been charged on small oans while he had ten or fifteen which showed from 75 to 660 per cent a year.

Prospers on $4,000 Capital.

The Kentucky Statutes, he pointed out, now provide for a maximum interest of 6 per cent annually. If more is charged, all that may be legally collected is the principal and 6 per cent, but there is no penalty for charging more. Mr. Hilborn aid that his investigation at Lexington howed one money lender making a comfortable living for himself and family on a capital of $4,000, and another with as little as $2,000 was "doing very well." According to the speaker loss of illegal nterest is the only penalty now, and he aid "it is hardly one case in a hundred hat a customer welches on a loan shark." He said that Indiana, Illinois, Ohio and Virginia had adopted small loan laws imilar to the Lewis bill.

The provisions of this bill prevent any one from engaging in the business of making loans without a license from the banking commissioner. If a person so operating without a license lends a sum of less than $300 at a monthly rate ex- eeding 3½ per cent, the borrower need not pay either the principal or interest. The offending lender also, under the law, ould be sent to jail.

"We have two groups of objectors," he dded. "One is the money lenders who o not think 3½ per cent a month enough, he other group is those who fail to understand the bill. Colorado tried 1 per ent and it didn't work. New York legalized 2 per cent a month with certain fees, ut all of its lending companies are semi-philanthropic. We know by experience that 3½ per cent is the amount a commercial company must get to yield a net annual return on its capital of sufficient to operate."

Would Drive Out "Sharks."

"There is no similarity between the money lender of small hazardous accounts and the bank. The former lends his capital, the latter lends credit. The bank can employ its capital over and over. We know this bill will drive the old-time loan shark out."

Linton B. Swift, of Louisville, general secretary of the Associated Charities, said that he spoke in behalf of hundreds of small borrowers of the city whose "outlook for the future is that of fear."

He declared that the society he represents has 1,200 families in Louisville under its care. He told of the case of one widow in Louisville who had borrowed $150 from a loan shark, had paid back more than the original amount and still owed $169 when she came to the association for help. He said that after being forced to pay 250 per cent a year this woman was blacklisted by the loan sharks of Louisville because she had resorted to the court to get out of their clutches.

"The average small borrower only wants money for one, two or three months," he said. "But he steps into the hole deeper and deeper. This law is the only thing that will save him."

Emmett Field, Sr., counsel of the Legal Aid Society, read a number of communications from other states showing that the law had been beneficial wherever tried. He cited a number of specific cases to show how the public suffers through loan sharks. He described the experience of one man who, from an original loan of $20, has got into the books of seven different loan companies."

Few Borrowers "Welch."

"As a rule borrowers refuse to welch. They come to see us, because the loan sharks make it so difficult for them that they cannot meet their exactions. The representative people of Louisville, Covington and Lexington have indorsed this bill." He said that the League of Women Voters' National Association of Legal Aid Societies, Mayor Huston Quin, Dr. E. Y. Mullins, Dr. E. L. Powell and others are for it. Members of the committees were furnished with pamphlets setting out the aims and purposes of the movement and containing on the cover page an editorial from the Louisville Herald praising the measure.

"What we want is a bill which will attract sufficient commercial capital to run this business, and still hold the cost to the borrower as low as possible," said Mr. Field.

Sigmund Lee, of Louisville, a labor leader, said that the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen had indorsed the bill. "Two years ago," he confessed, "the loan sharks blindfolded me and led me around by the hand. I have found that I was wrong. They fooled me then, with the argument that this bill was not friendly to labor. They said you were trying to discriminate against the working man. Labor does not stand here to-day, saying that as a whole, it is behind the loan shark. We are now sending railroad men into the coal fields. Many of them are broke. They are a mark for the loan sharks. The brotherhoods are asking you to-day to protect the poor who are being robbed by these loan sharks."

Joe Lee Deceived, Too.

Joe Lee, attorney and labor publisher, of Louisville, brother of Sigmund Lee, also spoke for the bill. He also said that he had been deceived two years ago.

He referred to the close alliance between the loan sharks and the magistrates. He praised Peter Campbell and John Schneider for their part in passing the workmen's compensation law.

"Without credit, the poor man is up against it," he declared. "Once in the grip of the loan shark, death alone can free him." John Schneider and Peter Campbell opposed the bill, speaking in behalf of the State Federation of Labor. Mr. Schneider advocated higher and shorter periodical pay-days to relieve labor's distress. He charged that a money-lending trust at Chicago is back of the bill.

Peter Campbell said that he had not altered his position of two and four years ago of unalterable opposition to the measure. He told of the founding of the People's Provident Association at Louisville in an effort to provide relief.

Mr. Campbell read extensively from the report of the legislative investigating committee of 1920 as to the activities of lobbyists trying to pass the present bill here. Mr. Campbell reiterated charges that those back of the bill then tried to bribe him in a room at the Seelbach Hotel. "Don't compromise with the loan shark," was his parting remark.

Huge Monthly Turnover.

During the discussion, Mr. Hilborn estimated that the monthly turnover of loan sharks in Louisville is from $350,000 to $400,000 and that the saving to the poor people of that city by a reduction of the rates might easily amount to $25,000 a month or $300,000 a year.

The committee, after the hearing, went into executive session. It is believed that the bill will be favorably reported.

"SWAT THE LOAN SHARK!"

Introduced by Leon P. Lewis, a Louisville member, House Bill 105 comes to the attention of the Legislature. Its complete title is "Russell Sage Foundation Uniform Small Loan Bill" and its purpose is expressed in the words "uniform small loan."

We were strongly enlisted on the side of this necessary and beneficent legislation when it came up two years ago and, like much else that was worthy and remedial, failed of attaining its full growth. Nothing we have since learned about such matters, and it is a great deal, has changed us in the least unless, indeed, we except the character of opposition it arouses and the cases of cruel hardship which have come to our notice.

Of that opposition the most charitable comment must know it as uninformed if it would not brand it outright as insincere and of a grasping and sordid self-interest. As a specimen of information which is not so and of argument founded in error, if not worse, we may instance the fable, so plentifully supplied to country members of the General Assembly, to the effect that country districts of the Commonwealth would be included in the sphere of the proposed legislation and that country banks could, and probably would, establish offices where money would be regularly and currently loaned at the rate of interest established by the bill. There is no basis of fact for that disingenuous statement. The bill is made state-wide for the reason that it would not otherwise comply with laws prohibitive of class legislation. And that is all there is to it.

The list of its backers is impressive and instructive; the roll of states in which similar legislation has been enacted carries weight; the testimony of those active and experienced in welfare work is positively conclusive. But most of all we are influenced by the first-hand knowledge of those conditions it is sought to remedy and to avert which is ours. To "Swat the Loan Shark" might well be erected into the dignity of a crusade. To curb the pernicious and heartless traffic of this hungry horde is a first-class exercise in citizenship. To license, and thus to have control of, the lenders is to dismiss a cruel usury from our midst and invite in thrift to take its place and keep it. To set up a law, with teeth in it, to secure to the small borrower a minimum charge per month, that is rescue work of a high order.

The small borrower is manifestely unable to take care of himself and his needs make of him the ready prey of those who would exploit his extremity and profit by his hard case. The small borrower can not, however, be handled at all unless on terms which are used as an argument against the bill by those whose exactions are to-day, as long they have been, as the millstone around his neck. Three and one-half per cent per month, the maximum provided for, is a vast improvement on a range of from ten to thirty per cent under the conditions which now govern. And it is precisely this boon which excites the angry and indignant protest of those whose fortunes are being built up at the cost of the needy and the oppressed. The howl the loan sharks raise is intended to divert attention from themselves and their bloated "business."

It stands to reason that, unless money can be loaned at a profit it will not be loaned at all and it has been demonstrated time and time again that loans cannot be handled—with all the investigation and care required; with all the cost of small collections; allowing, as is, imperative, a reasonable margin for losses—at a lower rate than that we have mentioned. But this applies only to the man whose requirements are $300 or less. Above that the charge diminishes sensibly.

It has been well observed that no measure of this character can hope to achieve the ends it has in view unless it be practical. It must embody and set forth the tested experience of those who know, of those whose practice, as their investigation, has covered a wide field and examined varying surroundings.

It is because we have here what is workable and what has worked, which is better, that we raise our voice and lend our influence in support. There is an evil to be combated, a condition of degradation to be removed, men and women and children to be saved from misery and from that sense of injury, that feeling of helplessness which breed unrest and prepare for anarchy.

And so, viewing the whole matter as one of instant need in urban communities we urge upon the members of the Genera Assembly that they consider the plea o the distressed. Pass the law!—Th Louisville Herald, Jan. 25, 1924.

LOAN SHARKS ON THE PAN.

Legislature Discusses a Small Loan Law.

TO LEGALIZE INTEREST.

WOULD BE UNLAWFUL TO CHARGE OVER 3½ PER CENT MONTH.

Frankfort, Ky., Feb. 6.— Heavy guns were trained upon the loan sharks when scores of speakers appeared before a legislative committee considering a bill making 3½ per cent a month the legal rate in Kentucky.

Following the lead of The Kentucky Post of Covington which pointed the way to loan shark victims and showed them how it was possible to get out of their clutches by the payment of 6 per cent interest on the money involved, speakers told of other holdups in other cities.

SMALL LOAN LAW.

The bill which is being pushed through the Legislature is known as the Russell Sage Foundation uniform small loan law. Its provisions were adopted by one Covington loan company, after The Kentucky Post's expose showed that as much as 100 to 200 per cent were being charged by the loan sharks. This company cancelled or refunded several thousand dollars to victims who wanted to settle at the legal rate.

Walter S. Hilborn, of New York acting director of the Russell Sage Foundation, spoke for the passage of the bill, contending that the money lenders of the larger cities of Kentucky were charging in some instances as high as 432 per cent.

MAXIMUM INTEREST.

Hilborn pointed out that the Kentucky statutes now provide a maximum interest of 6 per cent. If more is charged all that may be legally collected is the principal and 6 per cent, but there is no penalty for charging more.

Hilborn stated that the passage of this bill would drive the loan shark out of Kentucky.

Peter Campbell, labor leader, speaking against the bill, said he was still against and sort of a compromise with the loan shark, "Drive them out of the state" was his plea, don't legalize them."

INTEREST AT 3,600 PER CENT

Robbery at Bank of England.

London, Tuesday.—Interest at the rate of 3,600 per cent on loans obtained from money lenders was mentioned at the Old Bailey yesterday in connection with the theft of dividend warrants from the Bank of England, and the money lenders were censured by the judge.

John Joseph Targett, aged 26, bank clerk, and Margaret Scrivens, film actress, pleaded guilty and were sentenced respectively to six months and four months' mprisonment in the second division for stealing and receiving the warrants and forging and uttering them.

It was stated that the woman had received £250 from proceeds of the thefts and the man about £21.

Mr. Travers Humphreys, prosecuting, said that Targett practically on the first day that he was taken into the dividend department of the Bank of England began to steal dividend warrants. Scrivens cashed the dividends for their joint use. She opened accounts at various banks with them and she used the money to purchase goods at various shops.

DEFENCE'S PLEA.

Mr. Frampton, for the defence, pleaded that misrepresentations by money lenders were responsible for the appearance of the man and woman in the dock. Scrivens, he said, obtained a loan of £16 from a firm of money lenders, giving a promissory note for £24. She paid that £24, which represented interest at the rate of 3,600 per cent and was lent £40, for which she gave a promissory note for £60.

The money lenders told her they would lend her £150 if she paid back the £60. She succeeded in raising the £60 and paid it to the money lenders, but they then told her than they could not give her £150 unless she could find sureties. She met Targett at the money lenders, and after some conversation he agreed to steal divident warrants from the bank, and he did so and gave them to her to cash.

The Common Serjeant, in passing sentence, said that the money lenders were deserving of censure, because they knew the position of Targett in the Bank of England, and also on account of the manner in which their evidence was given at the police court.

ELKS BACK LOAN REGULATION BILL.

Louisville Lodge of Elks last night unanimously endorsed a proposed bill for regulating loan agencies prepared by Grover Sales, attorney. Mr. Sales addressed the lodge.

The bill is fostered by the Russell Sage Foundation and its passage by the Legislature is being urged by the Legal Aid Society. It would make the legal rate for loans three and a half per cent each month on unpaid balances. The present rate runs from a minimum of 120 per cent a year to 500 per cent, Mr. Sales said.

The measure excepts banks, building and loan associations and similar bodies.

The State banking commissioner would have charge of the supervision of the loan agencies, Mr. Sales said.

A similar measure was defeated at the last session of the General Assembly.

SMOKERS TAKE NOTICE.

I will send any member of the American Industrial Lenders Association some Red Burley smoking tobacco, just as it grows in the hills of old Kentucky, without a bad smoke in it, upon request. This is the nearest I can come to Old Bourbon.

CREDIT AND LOAN SHARKS.

Austin Carey, president of the Retail Credit Men's Association, Memphis, Tenn., incloses a list of bankrupts for one day, with the names of their creditors taken from the Court Reporter, and with reference to the article says:

"You will note in each case that nearly all of the creditors are loan companies. In fact, it is these companies who usually force the debtor into bankruptcy. He has assigned his salary to them and oftentimes has to take the bankrupt law or lose his job, as railroads and many other corporations do not like garnishments.

"This works a hardship on the other creditors, who have sold him on open account, and who are always willing to grant a reasonable extension. However, their account has to be declared by the bankrupt, and as there is seldom any dividend, the account is lost.

"It is the duty of the Retail Credit Men's association, and all other experienced business men to educate their more ignorant brothers to the fact that it is folly to deal with concerns that extract their 'pound of flesh.'"—The Credit World, Feb. 1924.

BANKING A PROFITABLE BUSINESS.

Philadelphia's national banks last year earned an average profit in excess of 31 per cent. This compares with about 5 per cent earned by railroads.

It is true that a good deal of the bank profit was earned by the accumulated surplus. But it is also true that most of this surplus represents profits of the past which were not distributed directly to share owners.

A noted banker said no honestly managed bank in the United States can fail. If true, that seems to put banking in this country in a preferred class. There are thousands of instances in other kinds of business where failures came on top of a thoroughly honest management.

Since national banks are under the direct eye of the Federal government, their large earnings disprove one Socialistic theory. The commodity sold by banks, on which they earn profits is service. Hence government-controlled service must rule at a high average price in order to show such substantial profits.

Yet there is rarely heard a complaint about the profits made in banking, whereas profits made in many another line are constantly assailed as excessive. Luckily for the banks, they are not constantly assailed as are some other forms of business by such railroad baiters as La Follette and Brookhard.—Phila. Inquirer, Feb. 5, 1924.

OHIO.

I regret that I was unable to transmit to you a report of our Mid-winter meeting in time for the February issue, and my only purpose in sending this brief report of the meeting is to let the readers of your valuable paper know that Ohio is still on the map and going strong, presenting as it always has done a unified front with absolute harmony existing among its membership and always alert for the betterment of the small loan business.

Our annual Mid-winter meeting this year surpassed in point of attendance and general interest manifested, any previous one.

The date, January 23rd, was deliberately chosen as a challenge to superstition and it proved itself to be a most beautiful day sandwiched between blizzard weather and proved so inviting that the seating facilities of the large upper dining room of the Chittenden Hotel was taxed to seat all of the guests at the banquet table.

The afternoon session resolved itself into a more or less free for all discusison of purtenant problems which now confront the loan business, such as methods being employed in some of the larger cities of Ohio by persons attempting to operate the loan business under some other name and thus escaping state license and state supervision.

The question of the recent ruling of the Attorney General that loan companies are hereafter to be taxed as banks, was also discussed and the opinions of several prominent Columbus attorneys rendered as to the legality of such taxation.

We regretted that our good friend Dr. C. G. Mueller was unable to be with us and we missed his genial smile and pleasant greeting, but we know that he is a busy man and cannot be everywhere at the same time.

Two new members were added to our list on that day, namely: The Marietta Branch of The Industrial Loan Company, which has its home office in the city of Columbus, and J. J. Aldrich's Finance Company, also of Columbus, Ohio, which upon motion duly seconded were elected into membership.

The questions discussed before the meeting were left with the Executive Committee with full power to act on the same for the best interest of the Loan Association.

At 6:30 o'clock p. m. the annual Midwinter banquet was served in the upper dining room in the Chittenden Hotel and was attended by 118 diners.

We were honored by the presence of Cyrus Locher, head of the Department of Commerce of the State of Ohio under which the division of remedial loan associations is lodged in Ohio, who delivered an inspiring address.

Music was furnished by the Ohio State University quartet and Mr. F. Carroll McMahon sang two delightful tenor solos.

The prize package of the evening was Dusty Miller, the editor from Wilmington, Ohio, who under the topic of "Explosion" proceeded to explode some of the dreadful theories carried around in our daily walk and conversation, and brought to us a message filled with mirth and optimism, which enthused and delighted all who heard him.

ILLINOIS.

One of the joys of being National Secretary was experienced by a telegraphic call from Fred. Tyson, Danville, Sunday, February 17, for some printed matter by special delivery. The fifty copies of Hilborn's "Philosophy of the Uniform Law" went forward all right as requested but not until "Fred" had a chance to write, was the purpose known nor the curiosity of the National Secretary satisfied. Let "Fred" tell it himself in his own way and each member confronted with a similar problem may learn from this valuable experience.

Mr. William F. Baldwin,
Sec'y. Retail Merchants Credit Ass'n,
Danville, Illinois.

Dear Sir:

An erroneous impression seems to exist in the minds of some of the members of your Association, as to the effect, upon the credit of an individual, of a loan of money secured on his or her household furniture.

This has been brought to our atention by the statements of several borrowers who have been refused credit for the reason that they "had a mortgage on their furniture." This, of course, may not have been the real reason, but it was the one given in the cases mentioned.

We are not members of your Association not because we are not in full sympathy with its objects, but merely for the reason that we have no open unsecured accounts and, therefore, credit rating, in the ordinary sense of the term, is of no value to us. Indeed, often an individual who has no credit elsewhere turns to us and is able to get money to settle some if not all his debts.

People do not borrow money of us to put in the bank—think that over for a moment. What do they borrow for? A large number—a very large number, borrow to pay debts—debts owing to you and to the firms you represent. They borrow expressly to make their word and credit good—they borrow from us and pay interest on the money because they are inherently honest and do not want to "beat" their bills.

Others borrow for various reasons, such as, to make cash purchases from you, to pay life or fire insurance premiums, to make a first payment on a home, to pay the doctor or hospital bill—yes, even the undertaker sometimes demands his money before he will perform the last rites for a member of the family.

Your attention is called to the fact that the small loan bank is now and has been for a number of years conducted on a fair, open and legalized plan, with all the safeguards to the investor and customer that surround the ordinary State Bank. If you have in mind abuses of the past, such as extortionate interest or the effect of drastic collections it might be well to look into the present day condition of this necessary and vital business. It is a business to-day that requires capital, efficiency and responsibility. This is conclusively shown by the fact that the State licenses issued show a decrease of nearly fifty per cent of those issued the first year of operation under the present law.

The Russell Sage Foundation is now engaged in making a survey of the small loan business in this country and they are at work at this time tabulating, from over 10,000 questionnaires, information secured from actual borrowers, such as age of borrowers, accupation, wages or salary received, reason for borrowing and many other questions pertinent to a survey of this kind. This survey when completed will astonish many at the facts presented, such as, the necessity for the business, the capital engaged in it and other facts not generally known, especially among business men who have no occasion to use, the kind of service furnished.

Do you know, for instance, that 86 per cent of the earning population of these United States earn not to exceed $2,000 per year?

Statistics are dry things, but let me quote here the report of the Bureau of Economic Research on the distribution of income for the year 1918, the most recent and reliable yet made. This estimate excludes 2,500,000 soldiers, sailors and marines.

"Of 37,569,060 persons in the United States receiving incomes in 1918 about 14,558,224, or 39 per cent received less than $1,000 per year. 27,056,344 or 72 per cent received less than $1,500 per year and 32,278,911 or 86 per cent received less than $2,000 per year."

Think of it, 86 per cent earning less than $2,000 per year and nearly half of these not earning to exceed $1,000 per year. Where are these people to turn in an emergency? The banks will not accommodate them and some of you think it is a black mark against their credit, at least, if they try to help themselves. However, this is not an argument for the small loan business, but is an endeavor to show the error of a bad credit rating solely for the reason that money has been borrowed on household goods.

Do you realize, gentlemen, that this security is almost entirely exempt property—property that you cannot touch for your bill, and yet these people who borrow practically waive this exemption in your favor by giving us a mortgage for money to pay you? Does this look like dishonesty?

Does this business work a hardship on the borrower, render him homeless, thereby placing him in a position where he is unable to meet his living obligations? Your attention is called to the fact that while no foreclosure of household effects can be prosecuted except in a court of record, the records of Vermilion County Court reveal but two of these foreclosures in the past two years and neither of these cases represented a small loan business.

Members of your Association who sell on installments or time payments ought to be the best business friends the small loan man has, for thousands, yes, literally thousands of accounts are paid installment firms with money borrowed from the loan companies. More often these claims are not paid directly by the loan concern; rather the practice is to give the borrower the money with instructions to settle the claim and bring back a receipt in full and it will surprise you to know that rarely is this confidence abused.

The truth is that credit is largely based upon character, ability and willingness to pay, rather than upon any real assets. This being true is it not a fact that people who borrow from loan companies, as a class, are a better risk than other individuals with no assets that can be attached, for remember the borrower obtains money to pay debts or to put into circulation in some manner, but never to keep. An individual who borrows, if he is a fair customer, can always borrow again and he is an easier person to collect from for he knows where to go to get money when the time comes that he must pay and does not have it.

You may say that this money has to be repaid, which is true, but loan concerns collect it in a way the merchant would not—a small amount at a time over an extended period. It is well known that most merchants have a poor collection system and that, together with the fact that the legal redress is poor in most instances, makes a bad combination.

An extended argument could be made along the lines here brought to your attention, but enough has been written, we think, to show that instead of being bad risk, borrowers are often a better risk by reason of their loans, for such loans show an honest intention to pay.

We think it true, to an extent at least, that the borrower gradually becomes an improved credit risk. We instill the spirit of saving, thrift and regularity in meeting demands. These in themselves necessarily develop the responsibility of obligation in the individual.

Of course, we do not advocate the granting of credit simply for the reason that an individual is a borrower; other things must be taken into consideration as well, but the point is made that by itself, the borrowing of money on furniture, does not indicate a bad risk.

The loan concerns in Danville have nothing to ask of your Association and only place these fundamental facts before you for your consideration in order not only to correct what we believe to be a credit error, but to show as well how every line of business is more or less mutually dependent on other lines of endeavor in the same community, so that only the friendliest feeling may exist and the greatest amount of practical coöperation be had. If it meets with your approval, the writer would suggest an open meeting of your Credit Association where these matters could be informally and openly discussed. I cannot help but feel that such a discussion would end many of the misunderstandings relative to this line of banking that has apparently become embedded in the minds of some of your members.

Wishing you and your organization an effective and productive future, I am,

Very sincerely yours,
Fidelity Loan Company,
By F. E. Tyson.

February 19, 1924.

Dear Mr. Kehr:

Received the booklets this morning—no they were delivered to my house last night. I am herewith enclosing my check for $5.32 to cover cost of booklets and postage.

Good old George; Johnny on the spot when anything is wanted. I am very appreciative and it will interest you to know that they arrived in plenty of time.

We have had just a little difficulty with a couple of credit men belonging to the Retail Merchants Association who went out of their way in refusing credit, to tell the individuals that it was for the reason that they had "a mortgage on their furniture."

Using this as an excuse and a reason, we addressed a letter to the Secretary of their Association, feeling that the time was ripe for us to give these credit men and the merchants a little information about our business.

In this letter we ask for an open meeting at some future date when we could discuss the subject and without going into a lot of detail will state, much to our surprise, that they have arranged such a meeting for the 21st inst. and that is what I wanted the booklets for.

I have always thought that I was in very excellent standing in my community for a loan man, but at the same time realized that few business men had any conception of our business and thought it was a worth while opportunity.

Of course we cannot tell until the meeting what kind of an impression we are going to make, but I thought it important enough to have Mr. Charles R. Napier of Chicago down to give a little talk.

Perhaps the fellows in some other town have this problem, although I imagine all of us have it to a more or less degree and so for that reason am sending you herewith a copy of the letter we sent this local association. You are welcome to make any use of it, either publicly or privately that seems best to you or to put it in your files for future reference.

Again thanking you for your prompt response and with kind personal regards, I am,

Yours truly,
F. E. Tyson.

February 23, 1924.

Dear Mr. Kehr:

Your kind letter of the 21st inst. is at hand and am pleased to know that you think so well of our efforts with our Merchants' Association.

We had the letter, of which I sent you a copy, printed and distributed to each person attending, together with the "Philosophy of the Uniform Small Loan Law."

I am enclosing copy of the printed letter and have a few more of them, if for any reason you should want them, or any of them.

We had nearly fifty at the meeting and from our standpoint, thought it was very successful. Mr. Napier made a splendid talk and told them about the small loan business. We had our local manager at the meeting, as well as one of our stenographers, who formerly worked for a concern that was a member of their association.

After Mr. Napier got through, their other speaker, Mr. H. F. Sehmer, Secretary of the Peoria Merchants Association, got up and in a stem winding talk declared that everything that Mr. Napier had said was all right and that the Peoria Association and the loan men in that city worked in very close coöperation and that they in Danville were making a big mistake if they did not take the loan business into consideration.

We knew this man Sehmer was friendly to us, but had no idea that he would back us up to such an extent and coming from one of their own members, the Secretary of an association three times as large as the one in Danville, it just clinched everything we had told them and a number got on their feet and stated that this gave them an entirely different opinion of the loan business and that they were glad of the information.

After the speaker had finished, there was general discussion in which questions were asked and answered and on the whole we feel very well pleased and satisfied.

We have had no trouble here whatever and no open criticism, but we felt that if we could give these few people a different idea of our business, that it would do us a lot of good eventually.

Personally I feel that it is a very good field, for in the instance you cite in Virginia it would have perhaps done much good to have had this secretary better informed. Then too, the merchants and credit men are the people who come in direct contact with the folks we deal with and if occasionally instead of a knock, we get a boost from them, it would help a lot. Then there is the other angle, of the effect on public opinion if the merchants thought you were all right and a useful member of the community. It would certainly be a factor in helping to sustain the law.

If there is any good in this I am certainly glad to pass it along and I hope it will encourage others to take action when they have an opportunity.

With kind regards and again thanking you for your coöperation in this matter, I am,

Yours truly,
F. E. Tyson.

REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Mr. Oliver of the Membership Committee submitted the name of the City Finance Company, Equitable Building, Baltimore, Md. for membership, seconded by Mr. Goldrick.

The Atlas Loan Society, 111 W. Lexington Street, Baltimore, Md. was elected to membership.

Clarke & Co., Baltimore, Md. suspended for non payment of dues.

Chairman Gardner has appointed the following Committee Chairman to serve in connection with the National Convention which will meet in Baltimore, September 24-27, 1924.

Entertainment Committee, E. E. Hougham; Publicity Committee, H. T. Mattingly; Hotel Committee, W. F. Oliver, Jr.; Finance Committee, J. D. Goldrick; Ways and Means Committee, L. F. Eckhart.

NEW BUSINESS.

A general discussion as to the form of mortgages the lenders were using took place. Most of the members are using a standard mortgage with a real estate clause printed therein with the additional paragraph as follows:

"And the said mortgagors consent that a decree may be passed, for the sale of said property, (the sale to take place after a default in any of the covenants or conditions of this mortgage shall have occurred) under the provisions of Sections 720 to 732, inclusive of Chapter 123, of the Laws of Maryland, passed at the January session in the year 1898, or any supplements or additions thereto; or upon any such default and sale may be made by the mortgagees or by their duly constituted attorney or agent under Article LVXVI, Section 6 to 10 inclusive of the Maryland Code, (1904 Public General Laws)."

The cost of recording mortgages varies from $2.75 to $3.75. For instance a mortgage containing not over five lines of household furniture to husband and wife, recording feeing being $2.75, if over five lines to husband and wife $3.00, with real estate additional 50 cents, with an extra signature 25 cents additional.

Chairman Gardner called attention to the splendid work a few of the members had accomplished by their close coöperation with railroad companies and other employers of labor in the way of curbing the activities of the so-called salary buying business. We understand State Senate President McIntosh in all his magnanimity of mind has seen the evil that would eventually fall to the community and the hardships the laboring men would suffer provided this matter was not adjusted, therefore, with the assistance of the Russell Sage Foundation, B. & O. R. R. Co., and others who are interested in the uplift and general welfare of the small loan business, has submitted a bill down at Annapolis which if passed will be the means of forcing so-called brokers to do a legitimate business in Maryland.

Mr. Watts explained in detail the value of President McIntosh's bill and the Association went on record as approved and recommended the bill as Mr. Watts outlined.

Mr. Watts was given a rising vote of thanks in behalf of the Maryland Association for his vision and close coöperation in helping those interested in correcting and improving our present small loan law.

Upon suggestion of Mr. Watts that a committee be appointed to call on the advertising managers of the Baltimore newspapers and endeavor to have all Industrial Lenders Advertisements listed under one head not to be classed with Real Estate, Second or Third Mortgages or Pawn Brokers' advertisements.

Chairman Gardner appointed Messrs. Oliver and Holden to contact the newspapers in this connection.

The matter of Incorporating the Maryland Association has been lying dormant for a few months, therefore Chairman Gardner requested Mr. Mattingly to instruct Attorney Bryant to proceed with the matter of incorporating at once.

The remainder of the evening the members discussed, publicity, hotel, entertainment, program and in fact the National Convention in general.

The committees appointed were instructed to immediately get busy.

Upon motion of Mr. Mattingly, seconded by Mr. Watts, the meeting adjourned until Tuesday, March 11, at 7:30 p. m.

H. C. MOORE, Secretary.

RHODE ISLAND.

A well attended meeting of the Rhode Island Industrial Lenders Association was held on Wednesday, January 16th at the Providence Biltmore Hotel.

The meeting was called to order by Chairman Wood and those present were Arthur L. Wick, Philadelphia, Pa; W. G. Wood, W. Delaney and G. Smith of the Citizens Finance Service Co., Providence; J. H. Wickstrom, Peoples Finance Service Co., Providence; S. Moran, Mutual Finance Service Co., Providence; H. T. Chase, Peoples Loan Co., Providence; H. G. Neal, Chester-Neal Co., Providence; F. N. Kennon, Peoples Finance Service Co., Pawtucket; G. E. Rich, Mutual Loan Association, Pawtucket; J. R. Smith, Blackstone Loan Co., Pawtucket; F. A. Pomfret, National Loan Co., Pawtucket; G. F. Lewis, Mutual Loan Association, Newport.

Mr. G. F. Lewis of the Mutual Loan Company of Newport whose application was passed on, was duly elected a member of the Association. Mr. Lewis is an interested and active worker and has promised to attend every meeting.

Mr. Wickstrom was appointed to arrange for the engrossing of the Merit Cards as well as the 1924 Membership Certificates and mail the certificate and card to each member when finished. The framing of the card and certificate to be taken care of by the individual members.

On Mr. O'Neal's motion, seconded by Mr. Rich, a regular meeting date was set. After a short discussion the members favored the second Tuesday of each month. If it should so happen that this day be a legal holiday the meeting would be held the following day.

A motion made by Mr. Wick that an entertainment committee be appointed to arrange for a definite subject to be discussed was favorably received. Mr. Kennon and Mr. Rich were appointed and can be counted on as furnishing the members with an interesting subject at each meeting.

A letter from Mr. Lovegrove, now located at Bridgeport, Conn., representing the Mutual Finance Service Co., of Providence, was read and answered by the Chairman. It is hoped that Mr. Lovegrove will be able to attend our next meeting so as to fully discuss the meaning of his letter. The matter was laid on the table for future hearing.

Mr. Chase made a motion that the Association show its appreciation by giving Mr. Wick of Philadelphia a vote of thanks for his work in connection with the printed matter that was handled so efficiently and at a cost considerably less than it could be obtained if ordered individually. An amendment by Mr. Pomfret was made on this motion to give Mr. Wick a rising vote of thanks. This amendment was carried unanimously.

Mr. A. L. Wick of Philadelphia and Mr. W. G. Wood of Providence again talked of the importance of an exchange bureau and its advantages. The elimination of the repeater, so harmful to the business and the borrowers themselves, could be a reality if every member expressed a willingness to start this exchange of information.

After considerable round table discussion, the proposition was laid over until the next meeting.

Mr. Wickstrom was appointed to ascertain whether it would be possible to secure a reduction in the cost of recording mortgages through having a uniform mortgage and it being printed in the record books of the City Hall instead of having it recopied in full on the typewriter by the clerks, Mr. Wickstrom to report at next meeting.

There being no further business to be transacted the meeting adjourned.

J. H. WICKSTROM, Secretary.

VIRGINIA.

The fifth annual meeting of the Virginia Industrial Lenders Association was held at Hotel Richmond, January 24, 1924.

The business meeting was called to order by Chairman Pope at 10:30 a. m.

The Secretary called the roll and the following members were represented:

Universal Loan Society	Suffolk
Beneficial Loan Society	Lynchburg
Federal Security Company	Lynchburg
Citizens Loan Society	Richmond
United Small Loan Corporation	Richmond
Home Guarantee Company	Richmond
National Small Loan Service	Richmond
Richmond Small Loan Co.	Richmond
Beneficial Loan Society	Richmond

We also had with us V. D. Moss, of Philadelphia, George Hodson of New York, and H. J. White of Washington, D. C.

COMMITTEE REPORTS.

Secretary.

Secretary Bray reported that on Dec. 1, 1922, we had 14 members. Resignations during the year, 1. New members admitted during 1923, 9. Making total membership Dec. 1, 1923, 22, and all members in good standing with dues paid to date in both the State and American Associations. Total licensees in the State, 34. On motion of Mr. Cross, seconded by Mr. Edge, the report of the Secretary was adopted as read.

Treasurer.

Treasurer Cross reported that receipts for the year were $1,019.28. Disbursements, $753.87. Bank balance, $265.41. He had also checks from various members, $122.50, which he had not deposited yet, which made a total cash on hand $387.91. Mr. Cross requested an audit of his books.

Mr. Hodson moved that the chair appoint a committee to audit the Treasurer's report and report back to the meeting at the afternoon session. The Chair appointed Messrs. Moss, Edge and Herbert.

Publicity.

Mr. Bradshaw stated that he had got a report of all the meetings held in the newspapers of the cities in which they were held.

He also stated that they had planned to put on a Publicity Campaign in Lynchburg, such as the Indiana Association had, but the Executive Committee in conjunction with the Publicity Committee, decided to postpone the campaign, owing to the fact that the Legislature would soon be in session.

The different offices in Lynchburg distributed 500 pamphlets "Small Loan Legislation Progress and Improvement," by Arthur H. Ham, and 500 more entitled "Philosophy of the Uniform Small Loan Law," by Walter S. Hilborn.

He said they could have accomplished a great deal more, but lack of funds prevented.

Chairman Pope spoke of what had been done during the past year and was not satisfied with the progress made. He spoke at some length regarding the Clearing House and explained the system they had operating in Richmond and the benefit they had derived in getting away from doubling up.

He told of the special meeting that was held at Richmond by the Executive Committee regarding the conditions at Lynchburg. Attorney Carrington had been retained to go down there and straighten things out, and also supervise all bills introduced during the present Legislature pertaining to our business, and Mr. Carrington had done good work, and they had decided to cancel the publicity campaign in Lynchburg.

Mr. Moss brought up the subject regarding the assessment of each member of $6.76 for the Publicity Campaign in Lynchburg, and the offices made their contribution with the understanding that the money would remain in the treasury.

Upon motion of Mr. Cross that the money be retained in the treasury, seconded by Mr. Moss, this was unanimously carried.

Communications.

The Secretary read a letter received from our National Chairman Dr. C. G. Mueller, regretting that he was unable to attend the meeting on account of having another engagement, but hoped to be with us at some future time.

He also read a letter received from the National Publicity Chairman, Mr. Roy F. Hartz, regarding the booklet containing the address of Mr. C. H. Stratton, entitled "A Business Little Understood." The cost of these is $1.65 per hundred, and $2.00 for name printed on, but the same price for name in lots of 500. The Secretary told the members that he would be glad to receive any orders and forward them on to the National Chairman of Publicity.

New Business.

Chairman Pope called on members of different cities as to how the clearing was working in their respective cities.

Mr. Herbert of Richmond stated that all members with the exception of two were coöperating splendidly now.

Mr. Bradshaw of Norfolk reported that it was not working satisfactorily in Norfolk, and that only five out of twelve offices were coöperating.

Mr. Herbert of Roanoke reported that only two members out of three were reporting and this was not satisfactory.

Mr. Hillman of Lynchburg stated all members in that city were coöperating now and this was very satisfactory.

Mr. Pope read resolutions on rules governing the Clearing House in Richmond.

Mr. Moss asked Mr. Herbert to explain how they were handling bankrupts. One point in the rules stated that no member must make a bankrupt a loan without he gave new papers to the office he had been dealing with, as they had to stand the loss. Of course the loans would be taken up if they didn't amount to more than $300.

Mr. Hodson said that he thought that no bankrupt should be allowed to make a loan without paying off the company that had suffered the loss, and if they owed too much that any company could not take it up and keep within three hundred limit, he should be made go back and do his business with that office he had gone bankrupt with.

Mr. Hodson made a motion that the association go on record favoring a uniform clearing house for each city and that the Chairman appoint a committee of two to act with himself to act for the State, subject to local conditions. Mr. Bradshaw seconded the motion and it carried unanimously.

The Chair appointed Mr. Herbert of Roanoke and Mr. Moss to act with him.

Outstanding Bills.

The Secretary submitted bills from Marcus & Williams for membership certificates, $5.68; expenses of Clifford S. Phillips to Lynchburg, $24.87; American Industrial Lenders Association for 500 copies Small Loan Legislation and 500 copies of Philosophy of Small Loan Legislation, $20.00. On motion of Mr. Moss, seconded by Mr. Edge, the Treasurer was instructed to pay these bills.

Mr. Moss brought up the subject of advertising, and he was in favor of setting a limit of the number of lines used. Mr. Pope was in favor of making the limit 25 to 30 lines. After much discussion, the matter was dropped as the members were too much divided on the subject.

The Chair moved that as it was getting late, we leave new business over until after recess and proceed with other business. This was carried.

Applications for Membership.

Mr. Herbert submitted application of Universal Small Loan of Richmond; Mr. Bray submitted application of Tide water Small Loan of Norfolk; Mr. Cross submitted application of Standard Credit Co. Richmond; Mr. Edge submitted application of Seaboard Security Co. Richmond.

Mr. Hodson moved the Secretary make one ballot. This was done and all were unanimously admitted to membership.

Recess.

The Chair called the afternoon session to order at 2:45 p.m. Mr. Moss, for the Audit Committee, stated that they had examined the Treasurer's report and found it correct.

Mr. Hodson moved the report be accepted and placed on file. This was so ordered.

Mr. Hodson spoke of the necessity of getting every licensee a member of the Association, and the members agreed to make an effort to do so.

The Secretary reported that we had no copies of the by-laws to give out to new members. Upon motion of Mr. Pope seconded by Mr. Hillsman, the Secretary was ordered to have 500 copies printed.

Mr. Pope brought up the subject regarding a Program Committee to act for our next meeting. He thought we ought to have the members write up subjects pertaining to our business and read it at our next meeting. This was acted upon favorably and the Chairman and Secretary were instructed to designate speakers and subjects.

Mr. Hodson moved that a vote of thanks be extended to the retiring officers. Carried.

Election of Officers.

The Nominating Committee consisted of Messrs. Cross, Bray, Edge, and Herbert. L. E. Pope, F. Bray, R. W. Herbert, F. W. Bradshaw, J. S. Edge were elected members of the Executive Committee.

The following officers were elected:

L. E. Pope, Chairman; J. S. Edge, Vice-Chairman; F. Bray, Secretary; W. F. Bradshaw, Treasurer.

Executive Committee, R. W. Herbert, Chairman.

Membership: R. F. Reynolds, Chairman, Messrs. J. A. Hillsman, F. Bray and J. B. Herbert.

Publicity: C. S. Phillips, Chairman; Messrs. J. A. Hillsman, J. B. Herbert and J. E. Burnett.

Legislation: George Hodson, Chairman; Messrs. V. D. Moss and W. F. Bradshaw.

It was decided that our next meeting be held in Richmond, Thursday, April 24th. The other arrangements left to the Entertainment Committee. The Chair appointed Messrs. E. Biel, J. E. Burnett and R. F. Reynolds on the Entertainment Committee.

There being no further business to transact the meeting adjourned at 5 p.m.

Banquet.

We had an enjoyable time at the banquet. Plenty of good speeches and plenty of good things to eat. Mr. Richard Carrington of Richmond acted as toastmaster. We also had with us as guests Mr. F. Briggs Richardson, Vice President of the Central National Bank of Richmond; Mr. Bristow, Chief State Bank Examiner; Mr. W. S. Burnly, State Examiner of Small Loan Licensees and Mr. G. M. Smithdeal. All these gentlemen gave splendid addresses.

It was the unanimous opinion that this was the best meeting ever held in Virginia. Frank Bray, Secretary.

GOING FAST.

Persons who want the A. I. L. A. Year Book for 1923 should send their orders accompanied by a dollar at once to the National Secretary, Box 778, Harrisburg, Pa.

A big demand for the Book kept up during the whole of January and February and it came from all parts of the country, so that few copies are left.

INCORPORATED 1923

Industrial Lenders Mutual Insurance Co.

700 Equitable Bldg., Wilmington, Del.

To All Industrial Lenders:

The industrial loan business has attained sufficient magnitude and importance to justify the organization of a trade mutual for assuming various lines of insurance, such as money lenders are accustomed to carry in stock companies.

The number of industrial loan offices that have taken membership in this company assures sufficient premium income to produce a conservative loss and expense ratio. The premiums charged are at the same rate as stock companies charge, but it is the expectation of this company that there will be sufficient savings to enable us to allow a credit of 50% of the first annual premium for credit reduction of the premium for the ensuing year and in addition thereto, set aside a substantial sum for accumulating a large surplus fund.

The operating expense is small.

The classes of insurance to be effectuated are as follows:

1. Fire (and lightning) insurance on loan office furniture and fixtures.
2. Office robbery (hold-up and safe cracking) of loan offices.
3. Funeral benefits (group plan) for officers and employees.

On funeral benefit insurance (Class 3) premiums are paid by the loan company beginning after three months' employment on insurance of $500, this amount increasing with each year of service at the rate of $100 until a maximum of $1,000 is attained.

Individual and chain office lenders are invited to apply for particulars, stating the class of insurance in which they may be interested immediately or give date of expiration of present policies. Evidence of the coöperative spirit is both desirable and helpful.

Our inquiries show that industrial lenders have collected losses of small proportion only on premiums paid to insurance companies heretofore, while under this plan a large portion of the premiums will be refunded by way of dividends on annual renewal.

Another meeting will be held shortly to elect additional representatives of loan office members of this company to membership upon the board of directors. The purpose of this company is to operate in the interest of all lenders and not for any group or interest, as was explained by Mr. George Hodson at the last National Convention of the American Industrial Lenders Association at Louisville.

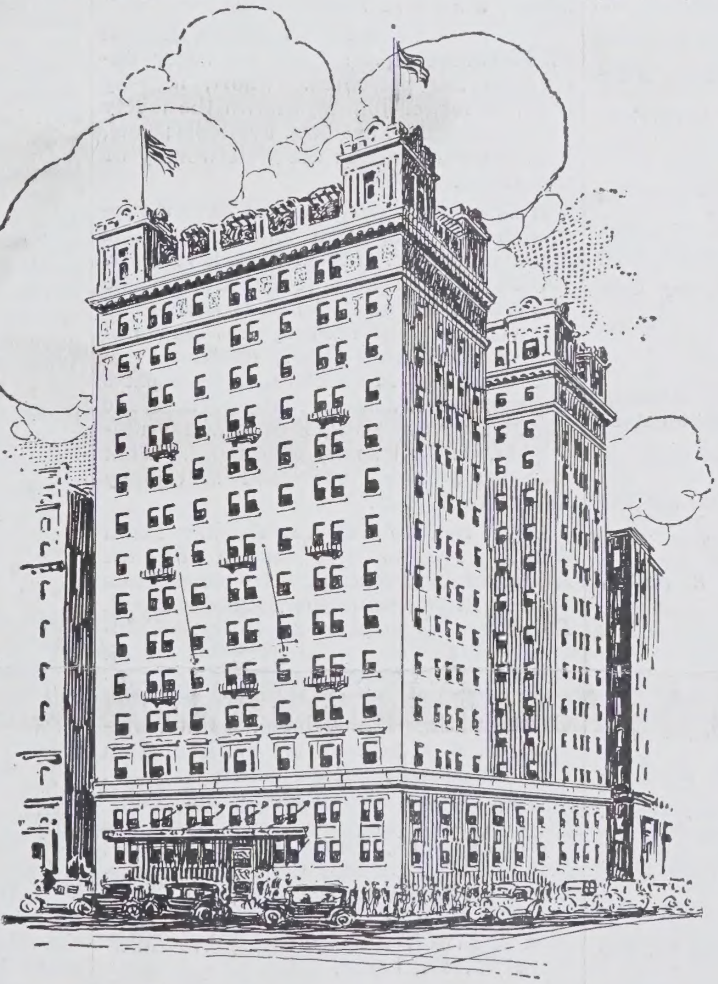
The Ideal Convention City Extends a Hearty Welcome to Lenders

Baltimore is one of America's most delightful convention cities. It possesses the peculiar attributes needed to make a convention city both attractive and successful. It has a fine group of modern hotels, equipped to meet the requirements of a convention session. It has a very marked diversification of business, which opens up the needed points of observation which will help any type on convention. It is an active and progressive commercial city. It is up-to-date in its general development. Its mercantile and industrial units are a credit to any city. Its artistic and structural embellishment make it a charming city to the eye; and its residential lay-out is one of the finest in the country.

If strong and persistent forward strides are an evidence of progress, Baltimore is in the very center of a progressive throb. All three of the angles of her underlying business factors are flourishing. Business opportunities are multiplying. Business harvests of handsome profits are becoming more plentiful. Even the general physical appearance of the city itself is growing more beautiful every day as an evidence of this expanding prosperity.

A city whose wholesale and jobbing activities, as reflected in annual sales, has jumped from $285,000,000 six years ago to nearly $600,000,000 in 1923, certainly shows that it is pulsating with enterprise. A city whose annual industrial output has leaped from $400,000,000 six years ago to nearly $700,000,000 in 1923 is surely demonstrating that it belongs in the top group of America's manufacturing centers. A city whose overseas tonnage movements are the third largest on the Atlantic coast and whose inter-coastal tonnage is second largest on the east coast is beyond all question proving its right to be listed among the most important shipping ports of the nation.

Such is Baltimore! As a wholesale market this city belongs in a category with New York, Philadelphia, Chicago and St. Louis. As a manufacturing city, Baltimore should be ranked with Cleveland, Pittsburgh, Boston and Buffalo. As a shipping port, Baltimore is in the same high class with New York, Boston, Philadelphia and New Orleans. These assertions are not mere propaganda. They are straight, indisputable facts. They are the facts that justify the utterance that Baltimore is one of the nation's commercial, industrial and shipping centers.



SOUTHERN HOTEL, BALTIMORE, HEADQUARTERS FOR THE TENTH ANNUAL NATIONAL CONVENTION, SEPTEMBER 24 TO 27.

When it is recalled that Baltimore's industrial employment list in 1922 passed the 120,000 mark it can readily be seen that manufacturing here has lifted Baltimore to a high rank nationally as an industrial center. Indeed, Baltimore's rating has made it possible for the state of Maryland, as a whole, to be classified as the seventeenth manufacturing state in the Union. This represents in Baltimore City for 1922 an annual pay-roll of $101,000,000 despite certain wage reductions which have marked the year. These activities are predicted upon an industrial capitalization of $510,000,000; and the year 1922 witnessed an aggregate production valued at $654,000,000. Such a wide range of manufacturing puts Baltimore in the buying field in the purchasing of raw material to the tune of $400,000,000 in 1922.

Special Features: Baltimore's climate more closely approximates the ideal average of California than any city east of the Mississippi. The city is located on rolling land, with water facilities and attractions all around it. Smooth streets are superabundant; the drinking water is excellent and in voluminous supply; the sanitary conditions are of the best, with a sewerage system so good that it has an international reputation.

Public Parks: No city has a prettier layout of attractive parks. Big and noted Druid Hill Park is praised by everybody who sees it. The whole park system is interlinked with fine, broad boulevards. All the miscellaneous pleasure features, incident to an up-to-date park development, are here in plentiful supply. Boating on lakes, swimming pools, playgrounds, golf links, tennis courts, base ball diamonds and all else that is attractive! All parks within and without the city are readily accessible by trolley.

Pleasure Parks: Few cities are so fortunate in the number, character and excellent equipment of their pleasure parks. They are in the city and in the near-by suburbs. Beautiful parks are located on the Patapsco River and Chesapeake Bay, thus affording all the diversions incident to deep-water pleasures. Boating, swimming, fishing, hydroplaning and bathing of the best kind. Finely conducted summer parks, with the best and most up-to-date fun-making apparatus and amusements are a popular feature. Light opera in one of the attractive summer

Automobile Rides: Maryland is known the country over for her splendid automobile roads. Baltimoreans enjoy the finest variety of automobile riding in the country. Everything from flat plane to rugged mountains in within easy reach. Baltimore's residential section and suburban environs are beautiful enough to satisfy the most exacting. Washington, the capital city, is less than forty miles distant. Annapolis, the seat of the Nation's Naval Academy, is less than twenty-five miles distant. Within fifty miles is historic Gettysburg. A multiplicity of lovely, wooded, picturesque drives radiate in all directions. And the automobile puts everybody in easy touch with all kinds of seductive spots along the water-front.

Theatres: Baltimore is exceptionally well supplied with "regular" theatres and movies. Baltimore claims some of the handsomest and most attractive moving picture theatres to be found in any of our metropolitan centers. Some of these are equipped with elaborate and well-conducted ballrooms—patronized by the best people in the community. Cabarets of the better type are likewise featured amidst attractive surroundings.

Excursion Resorts: Of course, situated as Baltimore is, all kinds of water excursions are presented. Short, near-by trips, or longer journeys down the lovely Chesapeake Bay, are both available; and, both beyond question are well worthy of enjoyment.

Hotels: Baltimore's hotels have a reputation for fine food and comfortable accommodations. Maryland is a veritable garden for the best food. Chesapeake Bay yields the most delicious seafood in the world. Maryland oysters and fish have a world-wide fame. Eastern shore and Southern Maryland are two parts of the state whose trucking gardens are sought by New York, Boston and Philadelphia, as well as by Baltimore. That is whence comes the food served by Baltimore Hotels.

Begin now to plan for the big Tenth Annual National Convention of the American Industrial Lenders Association which will be held at the Southern Hotel, Baltimore, September 24 to 27. COMMUNICATIONS.

SAINT LOUIS, March 19, 1924.

DEAR MR. KEHR:

I was very much interested in the copy of the INDUSTRIAL LENDERS NEWS, which you sent to me. Industrial banking for some time has been quite a hobby of mine, in fact I hope some day to get up a system, whereby we can close out slow accounts and operate it under the auspices of the Retail Credit Mens National Association.

It has been my personal experience that where credit men use Industria Banks, such as the Morris Plan and other systems, they are greatly benefited, and I am sure that our membership as a whole understands the matter fully, because it has been discussed at our National Convention. I do feel however that they are not making the most of the situation, and I would be very glad to have any thought you have along these lines, so as to encourage industria banking.

Any time you have something we could publish in the Credit World, we will be pleased to receive it.

Yours truly,
D. J. WOODLOCK,
Secretary-Treasurer, The Retail Credit Men's National Association.

FORT WAYNE, IND., March 19, 1924.

DEAR MR. KEHR:

At the last meeting of the Fort Wayne Loan Association held at the Chamber of Commerce of this city, Mr. Baum former chairman of our association made the suggestion which was approved by the members present that the secretary write you giving you a report as to what our local organization had been doing towards boosting the loan business in this city.

The Fort Wayne Loan Association has been in existence now for the past three years. Our name appears on the Bulletin Board at the Chamber of Commerce Building, in this city and we hold our meetings at this place on the first Wednesday of every month. After dinner we thrash out any questions that may have come up during the past months These meetings sometimes are warm affairs but the good feeling is always uppermost and we all feel better more friendly, more brotherly and more determined to keep our little organization going after each meeting.

We had been carrying the publicity advertising forward each week as rapidly as we received the mats from Indianapolis, but this campaign we understand from Indianapolis has been discontinued on the account that they feel that the campaign has accomplished its purpose.

The Fort Wayne Loan Association gave $20.00 to the Japanese earthquake victims for which we received wonderful compensation in the form of thanks in a letter from Mr. Fred D. Shoaff, chairman of the Fort Wayne Chapter of the Red Cross.

Last month all the members of the Fort Wayne Loan Association joined the Retail Credit Rating Association in the Chamber of Commerce Building, in this city. While members of the association we still keep our individuality as the loan companies have their own distinct unit in the Credit Bureau. All loans made must be reported to the Credit Bureau by each member and all applications run through the bureau. If you think that any of the members of the National Association would be interested in the details of how this Bureau is conducted, which we feel is going to be successful and which is bound to eliminate most of our losses and will more than compensate us for the cost of the bureau, we will be pleased to tell them of the working of the bureau here and how they may form the same thing in their city.

Trusting that I may have the pleasure of meeting Mr. Kehr in person at some future date, I remain,

Sincerely yours,
EDGAR L. WANTLAND, Secretary.

BOSTON, MASS., March 20, 1924.

DEAR SIR:

I was referred to you by Mr. Wm. E. Pool, of Boston, who is a member of your organization. He informed me that you were Secretary of the National Organization.

I wish to state herewith that I foreclose mortgages for Mr. Pool, and almost all of the Loan Companies in Boston; therefore if you have any skips in Boston or its vicinity for any loan company, I shall be glad to do everything I possibly can to locate or foreclose.

I also wish to say that if I do collect I shall get my fee from the mortgagor.

If you want any references, I can refer you to any loan company in the city of Boston or to Mr. Pope, Supervisor of Small Loans, State House, Boston, as he has reports of all our work.

Trusting that we can be of service to you in the near future, I beg to remain

Respectfully,
CHAS. F. HALE, Constable,
20 Pemberton Square, Boston, Mass.

ROBINSON, ILL., March 26, 1924.

DEAR SIR:

I would like very much to get in touch with one Lyle Robinson, who formerly lived at Robinson, Ill., and later at Indianapolis, Ind., still later at some point in Illinois.

He is an electrician, also a meat cutter by trade.

Trusting that you can give this matter a small space in the LENDERS NEWS.

Very truly Yours,
C. M. BARRICK.

NASHVILLE, TENN., March 13, 1924.

DEAR SIR:

The Legal Aid Bureau of Nashville is contemplating a movement to secure a uniform small loan law in Tennessee and I am writing you to request that you kindly furnish us with any data and information that you think will help us.

Your paper which we have been receiving for some time has been very interesting indeed and I wish to thank you for placing us on your mailing list and trust that we may continue to be favored and receive this very interesting and helpful news which you are accomplishing.

Very respectfully,
A. G. TAYLOR,
Secretary, Legal Aid Bureau.

ATLANTA, GA., March 6, 1924.

DEAR MR. KEHR:

I am enclosing herewith minutes of our last regular meeting, which I wish you would please publish in the next issue of the LENDERS NEWS.

Wednesday, March 5th, F. B. Snyder, secretary and treasurer of the Georgia Association handed Chairman Madison his resignation, because of the fact that he could not give his business and association affairs the proper attention that he would like. An executive meeting was immediately called and under the circumstances, his resignation was accepted and a rising vote of thanks to him was extended for his untiring efforts in behalf of the Georgia Association.

Mr. Edward M. Steimle, manager of the Citizens Loan Company was unanimously elected to fill the unexpired term of office.

Kindly correct your files and be guided accordingly.

With personal wishes, I am,
EDW. M. STEIMLE,
Secretary and Treasurer, Georgia Industrial Lenders Association.

LOAN SHARKS' FINISH SEEN.

Backers of Hamilton-Lewis Bill Say It Will Become Law.

BY ROBERT E. DUNDON.

Near the top of the list of bills which are to be acted on by the Kentucky Senate this week is Arch L. Hamilton's anti-loan shark measure, Senate Bill 366. When attention was called to this bill Friday by Senator White L. Moss, of Pineville, who opposed it two years ago, Senator Allie W. Young, of Morehead, one of the supporters of the bill, said:

"We are ready to vote on this any time."

Advocates of the bill claim that it will receive from twenty to twenty-four affirmative votes, at least. Opponents are not announcing how many votes they will get, but they say the bill will be defeated.

Labor seems to be divided on the proposition. Pete Campbell is fighting the measure, and has been doing the most effective work of any one against it on the Senate side, while Sigmund A. Lee is for it, and has been a strong contributor toward its present favorable standing.

In the House an influence is apparent that is holding the bill back in the rules committee. Lee L. Simons, of Louisville, is strongly for the measure, and he is a member of the committee. He says that he has obtained sufficient pledges from the membership to bring the bill up for a vote, and that it will not be necessary to take it away from the rules committee, which would require fifty-one votes.

"BEST BILL OF SESSION."

Welfare workers who have been trying to get action on this measure, claim that it is the "best bill of the session." It is, at any rate, the one which most intimately concerns thousands of poor people, especially in the cities of Louisville, Lexington, Covington, New port, Ashland and Paducah.

Hence, the roll call on the bill, which is expected to come to a vote either tomorrow or Tuesday, will be watched with the keenest interest. Many of the members of the Senate have political aspirations, and they will be making a record in this matter which will certainly play a part in any future contests at the polls.

A powerful lobby has been working to block the passage of the Hamilton bill, and a similar measure, introduced in the House by Representative Leon P. Lewis, of Louisville.

The bill provides that in lending sums of less than $300, the lenders shall be licensed under the authority of the State Banking Commissioner, and that they shall be inspected, and not permitted to charge more than 3½ per cent a month. The standard rate now is 10 per cent a month for these small and hazardous loans. So that if the thousands of persons in Louisville who borrow such sums are now on the books for $300,000, and pay $30,000 a month in interest, the proposed law would reduce this to $10,000 a month and a saving to the needy of $20,000.

WHY IT IS RESISTED.

There is no doubt that the bill, which is the law now in about twenty other states, is being resisted, because it will force a considerable readjustment in the loan agency business.

It is said that a "loan shark" can now operate on so small a capital as $5,000, and make an annual income of from $4,000 to $5,000 on that investment. That is, if he keeps all of his capital working, and gets 10 per cent a month on it, and does not have too heavy losses, even making a liberal allowance for expenses, a net return of 100 per cent annually is possible.

Reducing this return, however, to one-third, would mean that he would have to increase his capital to $15,000 to make the same amount. The history of the passage of such bills, its advocates point out, is that in every state where they go into effect, there are consolidations of small loan agencies, and there are fewer loan agents, but they handle more business and are easier to watch, for the responsible department of state government put over them.

The remedial loan corporations, semi-philanthropic organizations, are favoring the bill. The Russel Sage Foundation is promoting it in every state. But the old-line "loan sharks" are all fighting it, and in doing so are employing the argument that the Legislature would "legalize 42 per cent a year" by passage of the bill.

MANY WORK FOR BILL.

Some time ago, The Louisville Herald, editorially, took the initiative in urging the passage of this bill, and the Lexington Herald also has been a strong backer of the measure.

The Legal Aid Society of Louisville, which has had much experience in looking after people who need help from time to time, in their dealings with magistrate's courts, to combat evictions of tenants, collections of sums far greater than the amount borrowed, etc., is leading the fight for the act.

The bill has been indorsed by the Kentucky League of Women Voters, by the Associated Charities of Lexington, the Covington Rotary Club, Mrs. George T. Settle, Mayor Huston Quinn, of Louisville; the Rev. Dr. E. Y. Mullins, president of the Southern Baptist Theological Seminary; J. Robert Kelly, president of the Associated Industries of Kentucky; Dr. Frank L. McVey, president of Kentucky State University; the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen, represented by Sigmund A. Lee, of Louisville; the Rev. Dr. E. L. Powell, pastor of the First Christian Church, Louisville; Lawrence S. Grauman, president of the Jackson Democratic Club, Louisville; former State Senator A. E. Stricklett, ex-city solicitor of Covington; the Family Service Organization of Louisville and many others.—Louisville Herald, March 9, 1924.

We congratulate the "loan sharks." They have at least two years more in which to pile up unholy profits and lay aside a fund to take care of the campaign upon which they must enter when the Legislature meets in 1926. And so we bid them adieu for the present, and wish them a short life, knowing they will themselves see to making it merry—Louisville Herald, March 12, 1924.

TRADE MAY PUT BYERS' BILL THROUGH.

Republican Aid in Death of Loan and Police Acts Held Significant.

By Robert E. Dundon.

Frankfort, Ky., March 11.—Were the Jefferson County police bill and the Hamilton anti-loan shark bill, traded off for sufficient votes in the Senate to pass the Atwood (Byers) bill?

That is the question which observers of the course of legislation are asking tonight, on the eve of an expected showdown on the measure which is calculated, if enacted into law, to displace Joseph P. Byers from his position as commissioner of the Board of Charities and Corrections. It is evident that the Atwood bill cannot be passed without Republican support. The fact that eleven Democratic senators joined thirteen Republicans to kill the Bax County police measure and that the bill directed at loan sharks was slain by practically the same lineup, is held to be significant.

As the writer pointed out in yesterday's dispatches, however, the killing of the Jefferson County Democratic bill and the Russell Sage Foundation Small Loan Act, may prove a boomerang. It is said that Louisville Democrats are showing quite a spirit of hostility toward the attack on the Board of Charities and Corrections. They do not relish the position in which the vote on the Bax mesaure put them.

To-night the Senate Rules Committee met at the Capitol Hotel, to hear further arguments on the Bright Bill creating Fields County from portions of Pulaski, Whitley, Laurel, Knox and McCreary counties. This bill is on the Senate Blackboard for a vote to-morrow. The Atwood Bill is several numbers below it, but seems likely to be reached the same day, unless sent back by the committee. If the Democratic senators who were most vitally concerned with the effort to pass the county police and anti-loan shark measure, vote against the Atwood Bill, it will be defeated. Those who are fighting any change in the law as to the Board of Charities and Corrections, consequently, are very hopeful that Senators Perry, Dacher, Duffy and Hamilton will line up on their side and bring about the side-tracking of the measure which has aroused more public feeling than any one matter now before the Legislature.—Louisville Herald, March 12, 1924.

GEORGIA.

The regular meeting of the Georgia Industrial Lenders Association was held in the Directors Room of the Atlanta Chamber of Commerce, Friday evening, February 29, 1924.

Chairman Madison called the meeting to order at 7 p.m., but not being well and because of the absence of vice-chairman, Sharp, Mr. Steimle was appointed to take the chair. There were ten men present, representing six offices.

Under report of committees—Secretary and Treasurer Snyder reported a balance of $19.89, with all bills paid, with the exception of $7.00 due for Banquet flowers.

Membership Committee—Mr. Lassiter, Mr. Snyder reported that they had not been able to get in touch with the manager of the American Discount Company, which made loans on Automobiles at 3½ per cent, but would endeavor to make definite report at next meeting.

Publicity Committee—Mr. Steimle, Mr. Lassiter, Mr. Otey. Mr. Steimle reported that he had corresponded with National Secretary Kehr, relevant to state wide publicity through an Atlanta News Agency. After reading the correspondence, the matter was freely discussed by all, and it was the consensus of opinion that inasmuch as the Atlanta papers covered the whole state that it would be best to consider only these papers, and to conduct the campaign along the lines of the Indiana Association.

It was moved by Mr. Madison and seconded by Mr. Davis that a special meeting be held at the office of Chairman Madison, Wednesday the 12th, at 3 p.m. to further consider the publicity campaign.

Mr Steimle then read a letter written by President Tyson, of Illinois Industrial Lenders Association addressed to Mr. W. F. Baldwin, President Retail Merchants Credit Association, Danville, Ill., entitled "Some Facts About Small Loans in Relation to Credit."

This letter was greeted with much applause. Being confronted in a small way with the same state of affairs in Atlanta, and that this same letter addressed to the Association Retail Credit men of Atlanta and Atlanta Association of Credit Men for their consideration and believed it would accomplish much good and a better understanding of the Industrial Lenders of Georgia. It was Properly moved and seconded and unanimously carried that Mr. Steimle write Mr. Tyson for his permission to use this letter, and that at special meeting of the Association on the 12th the matter be definitely decided. (Since then Mr. Steimle has obtained the permission of Mr. Tyson to use this letter.)

National Chairman, Dr. Mueller's address delivered at the Banquet of the Georgia Industrial Lenders Association, held at the Ansley Hotel, January 11, 1924, now in booklet form was taken up.

It was moved by Mr. Madison, duly seconded and unanimously carried that 500 copies be ordered, and equally distributed among the Georgia members at the expense of the Georgia Association.

The Question Box, which at one of our previous meetings was not completed was again opened up. Every one present entered into the discussion of the following questions:

What are the best reasons for having all endorsers sign at the office?

Can any legal charge be made against a customer for moving security without consent of company?

What can be done to collect an old 5 per cent account?

Has a renting agency the right to hold furniture that a loan company has bill of sale against? If so, why?

Is it advisable to loan women without husband signature or visa-versa?

Which is the better plan when taking an application—To take the parties name, address, etc. to begin with, or talk the matter over and not take the application unless you are going to consider it?

Edw. M. Steimle, Secretary.

A special meeting of the Georgia Industrial Lenders Association was held in the office of Chairman Madison, 212 Healy Building, afternoon of March 12, 1924.

The Atlanta members of the Georgia Association met 100 per cent in attendance at special meeting called to order by Chairman Madison at 3 p.m. to discuss and definitely decide the following business.

1. Publicity in the form of "Ads" Atlanta Members of the Georgia Industrial Lenders Association as a whole, similar to that of Indiana Association.

2. Whether or not to make use of letter addressed to Retail Merchants Credit Association, Danville, Ill., sent to them by President Tyson of Illinois Industrial Association entitled "Some Facts About Small Loans in Relation to Credit."

3. Finances of Georgia Industrial Lenders Association. Time and date of the regular meetings of the Georgia Industrial Lenders Association, in order to induce larger attendance.

Chairman Madison called the meeting to order promptly at 3 p.m. The following members were present: Chas. T. Dismer, F. B. Snyder, Henry Sharp, W. L. Adair, C. Y. McCollum, R. F. Davis, B. L. Lassiter, J. B. Otey, A. B. Madison, E. M. Steimle, representing 100 per cent of the Atlanta Members. W. R. Sanders of Macon, Ga., and A. J. Turner, of Savannah, Ga., could not attend.

After the secretary read Mr. Tyson's letter, much discussion followed. It was moved by W. L. Adair that the letter with the necessary changes to fit the Georgia situation be sent to Mr. McLewis S. Gilbert, President of Credit Service Exchange, No. 12½ W. Alabama St., as an association matter, and that the Secretary make necessary changes and get letter off immediately. This was seconded by Mr. B. L. Lassiter, and unanimously carried.

The matter of publicity, similar to that now being conducted by the Indiana Association was favorably discussed. It was finally moved by Mr. B. L. Lassiter, properly seconded and unanimously carried that the ten companies of Atlanta representing the Georgia Industrial Lenders Association, individually pay $12.00 per month as payment for Publicity "Ad" not to exceed 18 inches and to appear once each week in Constitution, Journal, and Georgian on Friday.

The finances of the Georgia Association was then discussed. The Secretary and Treasurer informed the members that the Association could not properly function without funds, that at the present time there was but $20.00 in the treasury, and after two bills now due were paid, the treasury would be depleated and urged that a special assessment be made. It was moved by Mr. Sharp, seconded by Mr. Adair and unanimously carried that each member be assessed $5.00 and immediately sent to the Secretary and Treasurer and placed to the credit of the Georgia Industrial Lenders Association.

The final business of the meeting—that of changing the time and day of holding the regular Association meetings, as an inducement for a larger attendance. It was brought out in the discussion that a few of the members did not find it convenient for various reasons to attend meeting in the evening. After much discussion, it was moved by Mr. Henry Sharp, seconded by Mr. R. F. Davis, and unanimously carried that the regular meeting of the Georgia Industrial Lenders Association be held on the afternoon of the 3d Friday of each month at 2 p. m.

Edw. M. Steimle,
Secretary-Treasurer.

The first of the series of announcements that the Georgia Association intend running in the three Atlanta newspapers appeared recently. The copy was set in display type and occupied six inches, three columns wide. It will be run once in each of the three papers selected. The purpose of this educational publicity is obvious and seems necessary to win the confidence of the community. The copy is patterned after the Indiana campaign and is as follows:

DID YOU KNOW

1—There is a Georgia Industrial Lenders Association? Organized July 7, 1921, for the improvement of Industrial Loan Conditions.

2—That the members of this Association operate under the act known as the "Small Loan Law of the State of Georgia"—Enacted by the General Assembly August 16, 1920?

3—That they operate under the direct supervision of the State Banking Department?

4—That each member is licensed by and bonded to the State for their faithful operation under the law of the State?

5—That sums up to and including $300.00 is loaned by the members of this Association, secured by the furnishings of one's home, and on endorsements, repayable in small monthly payments at the rate of 3½ per cent per month on the unpaid balances for actual number of days money is used?

6—That any honest and worthy person may obtain a loan from any one of the members of this Association for any legitimate purpose, such as; Doctor's bill, hospital, operations, paying up past due acounts, educational purposes, taxes, 1st payment as purchase price of home, etc?

7—That this Association was organized for the sole purpose of improving Industrial Loan conditions, and for worthy folks to have a place where they can obtain financial assistance in time of need at an interest charge fair to the Lender and Borrower, and where one may be advised and counseled free of charge.

MARYLAND.

The monthly business meeting of the Maryland Industrial Lenders Association was held in the Board Room of the Merchants & Manufacturers Association Building, No. 22 Light Street, Baltimore, Maryland, March 11th.

Members present were, E. E. Hougham, Atlas Loan Co.; Leroy Busch, Community Finance Service Co.; W. F. Oliver, Jr., Household Finance Service Co.; H. T. Mattingly, The Master Loan Service Inc.; H. C. Moore, Peoples Finance Service Co.; Lewis F. Eckhart, Peoples Loan Society; C. A. Gardner, United Finance & Security Corp.

Guests present were, N. E. Field, Classified Advertising Manager, Baltimore Daily Post; N. H. Miller, Advertising Department, Baltimore Daily Post; and A. L. Wick, Philadelphia, Pa., Supervisor of Peoples Finance Service Co., and Household Finance Service Co.

Owing to the inclement weather the attendance was poor.

Mr. Fields gave the members a fifteen minute talk upon the value of constructive advertising, particular stress being laid upon the Baltimore Daily Post as an advertising medium.

The Post is delivered by carriers daily to 50,000 house-keepers in addition to having a daily circulation on the street of 20,000.

Several members substantiated Mr. Field's assertion that the Post was a good advertising medium for the loan men as the results they were obtaining were most satisfactory.

Chairman Gardner thanked Mr. Fields for his able talk on the value of advertising.

Chairman Hougham of the Legislative Committee reported progress. A detail report covering the activities of this committee will be given at the April business meeting.

Chairman Gardner explained that the main purpose of our meeting to-night was to contact those members of our association who were really interested in enjoying the benefit of an exchange with the thought of putting the exchange in operation by April 1, 1924. The exchange is to run under the supervision of the Retail Bureau of the M. & M. Association.

Mr. Wick gave the members an interesting talk as to how successful exchanges were being run in Philadelphia, Pittsburgh, and Indianapolis and other cities.

Upon motion of Mr. Wick, a committee consisting of three officers were nominated to control the affairs of the exchange. The following officers were elected:

E. E. Hougham, chairman; L. F. Eckhart, secretary; H. T. Mattingly, treasurer.

The exchange is to be known as "The Exchange Bureau of the Maryland Industrial Lenders Association." Any licensee in Baltimore may become a member of the exchange provided they respect the rules and by-laws. One does not necessarily have to be a member of the Maryland Industrial Lenders Association in order to enjoy the benefits of the exchange.

Chairman Hougham of this committee was instructed to immediately get busy in order that prospective members may have a copy of the rules and by-laws within the next few days. Should any one desire advance information about the exchange, they are requested to 'phone Mr. L. F. Eckhart, secretary of the exchange, Plaza 3548.

Mr. Mattingly advised that Attorney Bryant had taken care of the matter of incorporating the Maryland Association, therefore in exchanging information through the exchange, the lender will be protected in a legal way.

Next Meeting, Tuesday, April 8, 1924.

H. C. Moore, Secretary.

MICHIGAN.

Michigan has new officers as follows: F. E. Stroup, 507 Commercial Savings Bank Building, Grand Rapids, chairman; Norman Buckner, 31 Crofoot Building, Pontiac, vice-chairman; E. I. McCuen, 417 Rogers Building, Jackson, Secretary; J. A. Macbeth, 516 Penobscot Building, Detroit, Treasurer.

At the last meeting held in Grand Rapids there were elected to membership of the State Association the following: Peoples Loan Company, 204 Home State Bank Building, Grand Rapids and represented by George B. Dinsmore; The Industrial Loan Company of Flint, represented by Benj. Goldstein; The Confidential Loan Company, 116 Armory Building, Flint, represented by Sidney Buckner and The Citizens Loan Company of 500 Murphy Building, Detroit, represented by Chas. E. Macbeth.

In the future regular State Association meetings will be held at semi-annual intervals, the third Thursday in April and October. With the added members I believe in the future you will hear considerable more from Michigan than you have in the past. Our last meeting was indeed a most interesting one and with a thing of this sort it takes a considerable number meeting at regular intervals to put enthusiasm into the meeting.

J. A. Macbeth.

NEW JERSEY.

The Ninth Annual Convention of the New Jersey Association was held at the Robert Treat Hotel, Newark, March 19th.

A business session presided over by Chairman Vogel was held during the day at which a number of important subjects were discussed and interesting papers read.

Col. Clarence Hodson acted as toastmaster at the banquet held in the evening. The speakers were: Hon. A. Harry Moore, Director of Parks and Public Property of Jersey City and Professor Edward R. O'Brien, of Roselle, whose subject was the "Psychology of Business." Vaudeville and dancing followed the banquet.

PENNSYLVANIA.

The regular meeting of the Pennsylvania Industrial Lenders Association was held in Parlor No. 3, Hotel Casey, Scranton, Pennsylvania, at ten A. M. on Thursday, February 28, 1924.

The meeting was called to order by Chairman W. S. Herron.

Twenty-five members were present at the morning session.

REPORT OF OFFICERS.

Secretary Watts reported a membership of 99, 92 in good standing as of June 30, 1924, six being overdue since January 1, 1924 and 1 since July 1, 1923. Fifty-three of our members are also members in good standing of the American I. L. Association as of August 1, 1924. There are 215 licensed lenders in Pennsylvania.

REPORT OF COMMITTEES.

Executive Committee Chairman Webster's report was received and on motion of Mr. Hendrickson, seconded by Mr. Bachofer, was approved and ordered spread on the minutes.

"A regular meeting of the Executive Committee was held at the City Club on Wednesday, February 13, 1924, with the following members of the Committee in attendance: Messrs. Watts, Herron, Mueller, Hart, Ezekiel and Webster.

The matter of loans being made by certain unlicensed lenders in Philadelphia at illegal rates was taken up and thoroughly discussed, and it was recommended that the Association arrange for the fullest coöperation with the Banking Department to abolish this nuisance. Messrs. Watts and Herron were appointed a committee of two to employ counsel and make all necessary arrangements towards coöperating with Attorney Pusey of the Banking Department. The results of their action to be reported at the next meeting of the Executive Committee.

It was also recommended that the Association have printed 1,000 copies of the Loan Booklet written by Mr. Stratton, of Indiana, for distribution to the various members of the Pennsylvania Association who desired same.

The matter of some of the lenders in Philadelphia resorting to action in the Magistrate Courts in the collection of their delinquent accounts, was referred to Mr. Herron after considerable discussion, to be taken up with the Philadelphia members at the next regular meeting of the Exchange Bureau to be held at the City Club, on Friday, February 15, 1924. It is to be hoped that this practice will be immediately discontinued as it can mean no good to either the individual resorting to it or the business as a whole.

The Banking Department's request that the use of the phrase "under supervision of the Banking Department" be discontinued on all stationary and other advertising matter, was gone into in detail, and suggestions were requested of all members for the substituting phrase. Mr. Watts reported having received probably a dozen, but it is to be hoped that more of our members will send in some suggestions that we may select one that is satisfactory to all concerned.

Respectfully submitted,
EDWARD B. WEBSTER.

Publicity Committee Chairman Moore reported through Mr. Wick that the article covering the Scranton meeting had appeared in newspapers in Reading, Scranton and Wilkes-Barre.

Mr. Young reported for Membership Committee Chairman Mueller two new members for the attention of to-day's meeting.

UNFINISHED BUSINESS.

Secretary Watts reported progress in the salary purchasing test case in Maryland. This was commented upon by Messrs. Hart and Holloway and on motion of Mr. Young, seconded by Mr. O'Neill, the officers were urged to lend their sympathetic coöperation in the Maryland Industrial Lenders Association's test case and to closely observe the workings of this business as it is conducted at this time in Pittsburgh.

Treasurer Ezekiel reported having opened a bank account in the Girard Trust Company of Philadelphia in the name of the Pennsylvania Industrial Lenders Association with his own signature good against it.

NEW BUSINESS.

On motion of Mr. Young, seconded by Mr. Bachofer, the applications for membership of the Penn Loan Company, 514 Pittsburgh Life Building, Pittsburgh and the Peoples Investment Company, 26 W. Broad Street, Hazelton, were approved and they were duly elected.

Chairman Herron reported the visit of the Committee, consisting of Messrs. Herron, Kehr and Watts to the Bank Commissioner with respect to the use of the word "supervision" in advertising and other printed forms and following a discussion by Messrs. Hart, Holloway, Ezekiel and Young, the Committee's recommendation that the following phrases be submitted to the Commissioner for his approval was on motion of Mr. Young, seconded by Mr. Bachofer, approved

1. Interest charges subect to Banking Department examination.
2. Under Banking Department regulation.
3. Business regulated by Commissioner of Banking.
4. All interest charges under State regulation.
5. All interest charges under Banking Department regulation.
6. Bonded to the State. Licensed by and under regulation of the Banking Department.
7. Bonded to the State of Pennsylvania. Licensed and inspected by the Banking Department.
8. Bonded to the State. Subject to regulation of the Banking Department of Pennsylvania.
9. Interest charges supervised by Banking Department.

On motion of Mr. Young, seconded by Mr. Hart, the Executive Committee was authorized to use such necessary funds from the treasury as may be necessary for the employment of legal advice to assist the Banking Department in the prosecution of unlicensed lenders in Philadelphia and elsewhere.

On order of the Chair the address of Mr. Stratton, of Sullivan, Indiana, published in booklet form "A Business Little Understood" was on motion of Mr. Wick, seconded by Mr. Young, ordered distributed to the members and the Chambers of Commerce and similar organizations in their respective communities.

On motion of Mr. Ezekiel, seconded by Mr. Young, the following communications with replies were ordered spread on the minutes of this meeting.

November 23, 1923.

Mr. Chas. H. Watts,
1011 Chestnut Street,
Philadelphia, Pa.

DEAR MR. WATTS:

Let me place my self on record in regard to the state conference of the Pennsylvania Industrial Lenders Association, and incidentally pay my respects to those who were directly responsible for the working out of the details of the day.

The papers read, in every case, were not only instructive to the commercial lenders, but I found them of great value and applicable to the work of this office. The men who contributed by the writing of the various theses, showed uncommon good sense and thorough knowledge of the business. But above all, I feel that the greatest compliment that could be paid your profession, was the constant search for new avenues of service which you, as a body, wish to render the public you serve. It is quite evident that the Lenders want to be more than mere changers of money, and that they want to dignify their profession by giving more than cold cash on ample security, and the question of dollars and cents, if not secondary, at least is not the all important work you want to render.

I do not know what the trend is among lenders in other states, but surely in Pennsylvania, a higher development of the business along ideal lines may be anticipated. Many thanks indeed, for the opportunity afforded me and for the courtesy shown throughout the day.

Sincerely yours,
William Hirsch,
Managing Director.

Resolved, That we the Pennsylvania Industrial Lenders Association express our continued regard for him, and to his widow and family, a sincere appreciation of his many sterling qualities.

W. S. Herron, Chairman.

On motion of Mr. Hart, seconded by Mr. Wick, the Chair was authorized to appoint a Vigilance Committee of three, to effectively check up and otherwise police the operation of certain so-called outlaw companies, reported to be operating in this Commonwealth.

The Chair announced the appointment of the following Committee Chairman for 1924:

Executive Committee, E. B. Webster, 1237 Market Street, Philadelphia; Publicity Committee, E. F. Moore, 1011 Chestnut Street, Philadelphia; Legislative Committee, G. W. Kehr, 204 Chestnut Street, Harrisburg; Membership Committee, C. G. Mueller, 305 Flanders Building, Philadelphia; Entertainment Committee, A. V. Hart, 714 Denckle Building, Philadelphia.

Educational.

The Chair called the members' attention to reports of lenders failing to require the customers to reduce the principal of their obligations, and accepting payments on interests only, and that this practice should be discontinued.

Further, that members should be encouraged to comply with the Banking Department's wishes and the law in the prompt return of all notes to the customers.

Further, that there should be no withholding of payment cards or books from the customers at the time of the closing of the accounts.

These matters were fully discussed by Messrs. Young, Wick, Zimmerman, Hart of Philadelphia and Holloway.

Mr. L. C. Perkins, Manager of the Wilkes-Barre office of the Beneficial Loan Society, addressed the meeting at the afternoon session on the subject of "The Reception and Treatment of Applicants and Customers at the Office" and on motion of Mr. Ezekiel, seconded by Mr. Allgaier, a vote of thanks was tendered him and the Secretary ordered to forward the paper to the Lenders News for publication.

Mr. Paul Huenkemeier, Manager of the Scanton office of the Community Finance Service, Inc., read a paper on "A brief sketch of the small loan situation in Scranton" which was most enjoyed and on motion of Mr. Watts, seconded by Mr. Bachofer, a vote of thanks was extended to him and the Secretary ordered to forward this paper to the Lenders News, for early publication.

On motion of Mr. Bachofer, seconded by Mr. Zimmerman, a vote of thanks was tendered to the Scranton and Wilkes-Barre Committee for to-day's entertainment.

C. H. Watts, Secretary.

At the luncheon, served in the parlor of the Hotel Casey, Wallace Moser, Esq., of Scranton, gave a most interesting talk on "The small loan business ethically and socially." A rising vote of thanks was tendered Mr. Moser for his inspiring address.

RHODE ISLAND.

One of the most successful meetings ever held by the Rhode Island Industrial Lenders took place on Tuesday evening, February 12th, at the Biltmore Hotel, Providence.

In the absence of the regular chairman, Mr. Rich of Pawtucket called the meeting to order.

The Association was honored by having several visitors at the meeting among them being Dr. L. N. Robinson of the Russell Sage Foundation, New York City. Mr. A. L. Wick of Philadelphia and Mr. E. F. Moore of Philadelphia also contributed largely to making the evening one to be long remembered.

Those present were: Dr. L. N. Robinson, New York City; A. L. Wick Philadelphia; E. F. Moore, Philadelphia; G. F. Lewis, Newport, R. I.; H. C. Bowler, Newport R. I.; A. B. Cascombas, Newport, R. I.; F. H. Lovegrove, Bridgeport, Conn.; F. Daniels, Bridgeport, Conn.; George F. Rich, Pawtucket; R. H. Dansereau, Pawtucket; F. N. Kennon, Pawtucket; R. A. Ring, Pawtucket; F. A. Pomfret, Pawtucket; L. Pomfret, Pawtucket; W. Delaney, Providence; C. Smith, Providence; S. S. Moran, Providence; Jas. S. Dwight, Providence; J. H. Wickstrom, Providence; A. E. Ballou, Providence; R. Richards, Providence.

A suggestion was made that the individual stationery used by several of the officers could be vastly improved upon if the names of all the officers were printed on top or on each side of the letter head.

On motion of Mr. Moore, seconded by Mr. Pomfret, it was decided to have a supply of letter heads printed similar to that now used by the Pennsylvania Industrial Lenders Association.

Mr. Wickstrom was appointed to arrange for the printing, a copy to be submitted to the members at the next regular meeting for their approval.

Mr. R. H. Dansereau of Pawtucket read a paper on "Methods of Investigation I have obtained best results from." Mr. Dansereau was complimented on the thoroughness of the subject covered and considering the short time he has associated himself with the Industrial Loan business, he did remarkably well.

Mr. F. H. Lovegrove of Providence, read an interesting paper entitled "Educating the General Public to the Small Loan Business through Advertising of Character."

Mr. Moore of Philadelphia supplemented on Mr. Lovegrove's letter and added that service was the keynote of success particularly in our business and its value in getting business and holding it cannot be underestimated.

On motion of Mr. Delaney, properly seconded, it was moved that Mr. Lovegrove's paper be spread on the minutes.

On account of the regular meeting date, second Tuesday of each month, conflicting with other engagements with many of the members, it was regularly moved and seconded to change the date from the second Tuesday to the third Tuesday of each month.

A very spirited discussion took place among the members as to what would be considered appropriate and permissable as a phrase or sentence to be used in our newspaper ads as to banking supervision.

Four or five different phrases were suggested and on motion properly seconded the Association went on record as favoring the phrase "under the supervison of the State Banking Department." The resolution passed on using the phrase is in no way binding and the few members not in favor of changing their ad in conformity with the resolution will not be asked to do so.

Dr. L. N. Robinson of the Russell Sage Foundation, who at the present time is making a country wide survey of the loan business, addressed the members and said in part. "Meetings of men engaged in the Industrial Loan Business was an excellent thing as it helped the men to get better acquainted and also to discuss and dissolve some of the problems that come up from time to time. The day of the individual loan man working for himself only is a thing of the past. His association with other men engaged in the same business makes it possible to keep in touch with the loan business of the whole country."

Dr. Robinson spoke of the tremendous development made throughout the country of the installment business which is bound to have some effect on our business. Heretofore, the installment plan business has met with little success owing to the collecting part of the business not being as highly organized or developed as the selling end, but through literature in the form of several books being distributed on the subject it is fast becoming a science.

He was very glad to see that the members of the Rhode Island Association were open minded on the problems of the day and said that they in time would feel that the Uniform Small Loan Law recently enacted would move them forward into a new era and that their sentiments within a very short period would act in harmony with the lender, who remarked, "If we have to go back to the old way of doing business after operating several years under the Uniform Small Loan Law, we wouldn't go back at all."

The regular meeting of the Rhode Island Industrial Lenders Association was held at the Biltmore Hotel, Providence, Tuesday, March 18th.

Chairman W. G. Wood called the meeting to order.

The association had the pleasure of having C. H. Watts of Philadelphia at this meeting.

Responding to the roll call there were but two members absent.

Those present were: C. H. Watts, Philadelphia; W. G. Wood, Providence; W. Delaney, Providence; C. Smith, Providence; J. H. Wickstrom, Providence; A. B. Ballou, Providence; R. Richards, Providence; F. H. Lovegrove, Bridgeport, Conn.; S. Moran, Providence; H. Neal, Providence; F. N. Kennon, Pawtucket; F. G. Pomfret, Pawtucket; L. Pomfret, Pawtucket; P. Ring, Pawtucket; G. F. Rich, Pawtucket; R. H. Dansereau, Pawtucket; G. F. Lewis, Newport, R. I.

A committee composed of C. H. Watts, W. G. Wood, H. Neal called on the Bank Commissioner for the purpose of getting a report as to just what kind of a phrase would be permissable to place in the ads of the newspapers pertaining to the supervision of the Banking Department.

The members of the association realize that the small loan business is under supervision of the Banking Commissioner only to the extent of the interest charged and that the department does not, in any way guarantee or stand back of the business so far as individual investors are concerned.

The committee are glad to report that the recent investigation by the Banking Commissioner of the Eagle Loan Company developed the fact that this company had in no way violated the Small Loan Act under which they are licensed.

The matter was referred by Mr. Newhall to Attorney F. L. Hinckley for further conference.

Mr. Wood, Mr. Neal and Mr. Wickstrom are to place the matter before Mr. Hinckley, but owing to Mr. Hinckley's absence from the city the committee was not able to make a report the same night as the meeting was held but will do so on Mr. Hinckley's return.

C. H. Watts of Philadelphia in his usual whole hearted way gave us a splendid talk on coöperation.

The entertainment committee furnished the members with a reading by R. Ring entitled "Methods I use in locating a Skip."

A playlet by A. E. Ballou, R. Richards, and J. H. Wickstrom brought out the importance attached to the outside man's part in making a successful deal. Mr. Ballou's part in taking the applicant through the usual questions was unusually well done.

An entertainment committee composed of six members was appointed by Mr. Wood to make preparation for the annual banquet to be held at the Biltmore Hotel Tuesday, May 6th.

As this will be our first banquet to be held under the Uniform Small Loan Act we want to make it one that will long be remembered. The committee has promised to have the speeches broadcasted through one of the local broadcasting stations and the beneficial publicity derived from this source alone should be more than worth the price of the dinner $4.00. We must get one hundred people to our banquet and it is up to every member to bring along his entire office force as well as his friends and relations.

Please arrange to buy at least ten cards as we are depending on you to make this banquet a success. You are charged with the responsibility to get your gang out for that night. The committee asks you to roll up your sleeves, throw your hat in the ring, and determine to make this banquet do justice to the men in the loan business.

J. H. Wickstrom, Secretary.

WEST VIRGINIA.

The regular semi-annual meeting of the West Virginia I. L. A., was held in the Old Colony Club rooms of the Ruffner Hotel at Charleston, West Va., February 21, 1924.

The business session was called to order promptly at 10:30 o'clock and the business of the Association taken up and disposed of in the usual manner.

Following the business session, a delightful luncheon was served to the members and their guests. Mr. H. L. White of Wheeling W. Va., who presided as Toastmaster, introduced the Hon. W. W. Wertz, Mayor of Charleston, who delivered a very interesting talk, using as his subject, "The Moral Mission of the Small Lender." Mayor Wertz has made a study of the small loan business in the past year and is well posted as to the merits of the Uniform Small Loan Law. Mr. D. W. Taylor, prominent attorney of Charleston also gave a short talk in which he paid a high tribute to the worthy and conscientious lender.

At the afternoon session which convened at 2:00 o'clock, several important subjects pertaining to the loan business in general was taken up and discussed. The main speakers on the afternoon program were D. E. Earnest of Parkersburg, W. Va., and F. W. Withrow of Charleston. Both talks were very interesting and to the point.

Application for membership from Mr. P. Wells of the Wells Loan & Jewelry Co., was accepted. Mr. Wells is a prominent business man of Charleston, being interested in no less than five different lines of business, and the Association feels greatly strengthened through the membership of Mr. Wells, who is a staunch booster for the Uniform Small Loan Law.

The members of the Association unite in saying that this was the best Association meeting ever attended in this State. The net attendance was 80%.

Wm. B. Grimes, Secretary.

WAYS TO LOCATE A SKIP.

That little booklet known as "Ways to Locate a Skip" with 225 practical suggestions of the most resourceful sort, has been so popular among persons and institutions granting financial and merchandise credit that the first edition of a thousand copies has been exhausted and a second edition of the same amount has been printed, the book being constantly called for in dozen and fifty lots. A. L. Wick of Philadelphia who was one of the prime movers in the collaboration of this work owns the copyright of it and the book cannot be reprinted without his consent. The A. I. L. A. is pleased to continue its position as sales agent for this book which is sold at 10c per copy, and the proceeds above the actual cost for printing, are diverted into the general treasury for the good of our work.

GOUGING THE SMALL BORROWER.

No State has a better law for the protection of the small borrower than Pennsylvania, and the State Banking Department, which has supervision of its operation, does well to proceed against the "loan sharks" who are fleecing customers in spite of it. This law not only fixes the interest at a fair rate, but provides for a proportional reduction of principal and interest in a series of monthly payments, so that the loan is, as it were, automatically repaid. Thus one of the chief evils of the unregulated loan business, the payment of exorbitant interest for month after month with no reduction in the principal, is eliminated.

The licensed companies, as Secretary Cameron of the department is careful to point out, are living up to the law. There is every reason why they should be as carefully and honestly conducted as the banks. It is all the more important, therefore, that they should not have to meet illegal competition. The gravamen of the charge against the unlicensed lenders is that they take notes for a sum in excess of the money the borrower gets and, if he falls behind in his payments, "pyramid" charges to such an extent that in the end he may have signed his name to notes for something like double all he has received. This is usury of the most shameless sort, practiced for the most part upon those whose immediate need for money is so great that they will sign almost anything to get it.

It is difficult, of course, for the law to protect the foolish from the consequences of their folly. So far as that goes, high interest is legitimately charged in certain cases on short-term notes. If one man has the money to lend and another is in urgent need of it, the lender is in a position to exact a higher interest than the prevalent rate. The point is that a rate which might not be excessive in the case of a note to be repaid in a week or a month is distinctly usurious if the note is to run for a long time. The borrower can then repay more than the whole sum borrowed, and legitimate interest on that, and still owe as much as he did at the beginning. The shifts and devices which make this possible are what the State Banking Department is trying to suppress.—Philadelphia Inquirer, March 7, 1924.

Baltimore, Maryland

THE LIBRARY OF THE
JUN 5 1924

The "Monumental City"; named for the proprietor of a large tract of land in Maryland, Cecil Calvert, Lord Baltimore, who settled the province in 1635.

It is situated on an estuary of the Patapsco River, at the head of navigation, about fourteen miles from Chesapeake Bay, and is on the Baltimore and Ohio, the Philadelphia, Baltimore and Washington, and other railroads. A good harbor and fine geographical situation give Baltimore unusual trade advantages, and it has become one of the great export centers of the United States.

The city is roughly divided into two nearly equal parts by a small stream, Jones Falls, which flows entirely through the city. The portion of the city northeast of the stream is called "Old Town." Baltimore Street is the chief longitudinal thoroughfare.

The natural center for the visitor is Mt. Vernon Place, a small square, prettily laid out and suggesting Paris in its tasteful monuments and surrounding buildings. In the middle rises the Washington Monument, a column one hundred and thirty feet high, surmounted by a colossal statue of George Washington.

At the northeast corner of the square is the handsome Mt. Vernon Methodist Episcopal Church; at the southeast corner, Peabody Institute, for the encouragement of science, art and general knowledge.

On the south side of the square is the house of Henry Walters, connected by an overhead bridge with a new picture-gallery containing the celebrated Walters Collection, one of the finest private collections of art in America.

Charles Street one of the chief thoroughfares of the City, leads to the north from the Washington Monument past the Union Station, near which, at the north end of the B. & O. tunnel, is the Mt. Royal Station. Following Charles Street to the south we pass (right) the First Unitarian Church and the back of the Roman Catholic Cathedral which faces Cathedral Street. The latter is surmounted by a dome one hundred and twenty-five feet high, and contains some interesting paintings. Adjacent is the residence of the late Cardinal Gibbons now the home of the Archbishop.

Farther on Charles Street passes the Masonic Temple, intersects Baltimore Street, the chief business street of the city, and is continued to South Baltimore. In east Fayette Street, to the left, is the Court House, a handsome white marble building, and the Post Office, in front of which rises the Battle Monument, erected in 1815 in memory of the struggles of the war of 1812-1814. The interior of the Court House is adorned with admirable mural paintings. To the east of the Post Office is City Hall, a large and handsome building, with a dome two hundred and sixty feet high.

To the south of the City Hall, in Gay Street, between Water and Lombard Streets, is the imposing new Custom House, which was damaged by the fire of 1904, but has since been repaired and completed.

A little to the west of Mt. Vernon Place, between Howard St. and Eutaw St., are the unpretentious buildings formerly occupied by Johns Hopkins University, one of the foremost institutions of learning in the country. It was endowed with over three million five hundred thousand dollars by Johns Hopkins a Quaker. In 1902 a suburban site about two miles north of the Washington Monument was secured for this famous university, and the first of a fine group of buildings was occupied by it in 1914.

The Johns Hopkins Hospital, opened in 1889, is also due to the liberality of Mr. Hopkins, who bequeathed over three million dollars for its foundation.

Both as a scientific and charitable institution, this hospital is an important adjunct to the University; and in the completeness of its equipment and excellence of its system, it ranks with the foremost hospitals in the world. The buildings of the Medical School of Johns Hopkins University adjoins the hospital.

Druid Hill Park, a pleasure ground of about seven hundred acres, owes its beauty in great part to the fact that it has been preserved as a private park for one hundred years before passing into the hands of the city. Its hills afford beautiful views. Druid Lake, one-half mile long, is one of the reservoirs of the city waterworks.

Baltimore is an important center of the traffic in breadstuffs, and is also the seat of extensive and varied industries—cotton and woolen goods, flour, tobacco and cigars, glassware, boots and shoes, iron and steel (including machinery, carwheels iron bridges, stoves and furnaces, etc.), clothing, pianos, organs, and the canning of oysters. Shipbuilding has become an important development and Sparrows Point, with its immense steel plant, is a place of great industrial activity.

The construction of the first important line of railway in the United States was begun in Baltimore in 1828 and carried on by private enterprises, and the first telegraph line was constructed to, and the first message received in, Baltimore. In 1904 Baltimore was visited by a fire which consumed fifty million dollars' worth of property.

Our city can boast many other places of interest and Industrial Lenders from the Atlantic to the Pacific, and from Canada to Mexico will know more about Baltimore, with its southern hospitality and its northern push after September 27th.

EDUCATING THE GENERAL PUBLIC TO THE SMALL LOAN BUSINESS THROUGH ADVERTISING OF CHARACTER.

By F. H. Lovegrove.

Advertising has always been a very interesting topic to me. I believe it to be the first important step in building up most any business and more especially the Industrial Loan Business. The most effective medium of advertising, I think you will all agree, is the daily newspaper and that one with the largest circulation. Did you ever stop to think how thoroughly the newspaper is read by a great many people? What does this indicate. To me it indicates that there are thousands of people very much interested in not only the daily news items but the business of different kinds they see constantly. There are people who read your ad, and my ad that never will have occasion to use our service. Now the important fact is that these are just the people we should make a good impression on. They are the ones who are not especially interested in the fact that you and I are in the Loan Business. They are however interested in a general way. They, no doubt, often wonder how we conduct our business and what rate we charge and if they see the rate advertised, they begin to wonder how we get away with it. All of these thoughts are very natural ones for the outsider. The question comes to mind how are we to advertise our business with the best results and still leave the correct impression on the general public. In the first place we are now working under a fixed rate which eliminates all competition from that source. You cannot advertise any better rate than I can or any other competitive lender, so why advertise rates at all. Newspaper advertising is very expensive and the space that is generally used does not allow one to elaborate on terms, condition, etc. Take for instance when you advertise that the cost of a $20.00 loan for one month is 70c, immediately the first thought that comes to the mind of Mr. General Public is "Hm., 70c a month, let's see, that is $8.40 a year. That's a pretty stiff rate." You see right away the impression is created that the individual borrower pays $8.40 for the use of $20.00 for one year. When in reality this is not the case. By paying $4.00 monthly the loan cost is only $2.10, or if paid at the rate of $2.00 monthly the cost is only $3.85. Even if you try to explain this in your ad, the chances are ten to one that the reader of your ad will not get the true meaning of the wording.

Assuming that we eliminate rates from our ad, what is the next thing to appeal to the reader of our ads? Does it not sift itself down to the question, why are we in the Loan Business? We, of course, are not philanthropists, but are in business for profit. But in order to realize a profit we have to first do the business, and in order to do the business, we have to deliver the goods. In our case goods in a literal sense is the money we lend, but it also means a service rendered in selling our money, and sincerely believe in that one word, service, anyone's success in business is measured. No doubt we all have our own ideas as to what makes for the best service in our line, but bear this in mind that the days of the bawler out and table pounding tactics are past and the office that has not graduated from such practices is not headed for very great success. In rendering Small Loan Service it is necessary that our service is helpful in every sense of the word. So in advertising our service is helpful in every few helpful suggestions for using it. Why use up a lot of space telling what a fine place your place is to deal with, etc., etc. The borrower will be able to decide that for himself after he has called at your office. It is after you have gotten the prospective borrower into your office that the real competitive test begins. The first impression the applicant gets as he approaches the cash window and makes inquiries is very vital to any company. He should be greeted with a smile and a cordial attitude. Relieve him of any uneasiness or embarrassment which he may feel. Treat him at least as an equal, never take a superior attitude. Always remember that the applicant is doing you a favor by coming to your office. Never take the attitude that you are doing him a favor by lending him your money. Yours is not the only office he can go to, and if you do not give him your best service he will not be apt to repeat his loan or send anyone else to you. I might say here that your second best medium of advertising is your referred business. It may seem that I have drifted somewhat from my subject, but nevertheless I hope that what I have said will help to bring out my point of character advertising. The less you say in small space the more attractive your ad will be. Don't put anything in your ad that is intended as a knock at your competitor. If you can render a better service in any way than some other company, it won't take long for your customer to find it out. First of all then, state what you are selling then make suggestions to the people whom you wish to reach, as to how and why they should buy your merchandise, and in a general way your terms, that is to say state that the loan is payable in monthly instalments thereby reducing the interest each month. Last, but by no means least, state that you are under the supervision of the State Bank Commissioner. This alone will add character and prestige to your business.

THE "LOAN SHARK"—FOE OF INDUSTRY.

Lack of Credit Facilities by Factory Workers Held to Be Employers' Problem from Self-Interest Angle.

H. F. Woods

American Industrial Lenders Association.

Some years ago one of our epigramatic legislators in defending the lavish expenditures of a more than usually extravagant congress, said: "This is a billion dollar country." And truly it is. In fact, it might be said to be an eight-billion dollar country, for the total annual turnover in the nation, according to estimates by Frederick Todd, secretary of the First National Foreign Banking Association, is approximately the figure.

The total money stock of the United States amounts to only $8,700,000,000, of which an average of about $4,000,000,000 is in circulation. Consequently it is only by the liberal use of credit in various forms that it would be possible thus for every dollar in circulation to do the work of $2. But this great use of credit, for the most part, is confined to that part of the population which has banking accommodations—less than ten per cent, according to financial authorities—and it is absorbed almost wholly by the 2,000,000 business concerns in the country. About 95,000,000 people, or about 86 per cent of the population, have no banking accommodations, do not possess the securities or property that would be required as collateral for bank loans and must seek elsewhere for credit facilities.

Where are they to seek for these facilities? For the man or woman who has no collateral acceptable to banks on loans the only possible recourse is to the money lender, of whom there are two classes, the legitimate licensed lender and the "loan shark." The ranks of the first named are limited by circumstances which their national organization is now, and has long been, endeavoring to overcome, but the extortionate lender flourishes wherever the legitimate lender is not doing business. The necessitous borrower, if he cannot obtain credit on equitable terms has no alternative in his extremity of need but to seek it from the extortioner whose interest rates range from 240 to 480 per cent a year and very frequently higher.

Employers have a responsibility in this situation; they also have a self-interest in its correction. While they cannot justly be held accountable for the lack of a general system of equitably providing credit for their employes, they nevertheless share responsibility with the great body of the public wherever the state has neglected to enact laws whereby such credit may be accorded. Their self-interest in the correction of the evil lies in the fact that it undoubtedly is costing them millions of dollars of losses annually in the impaired efficiency of working men. For it is conceded that conditions in their lives outside working hours to a large extent affect the quality of work men do. Sickness, domestic troubles, debts or financial worries of whatever sort inevitably follow the working man from his home to his place of employment and slow up or otherwise mar the quality of his services. And of all his worries, debts are the leading cause, debts in many cases due to circumstances beyond his control and for the alleviation of which credit often is to be obtained only on terms which in the long run will make his last state worse a hundred-fold than his first.

The fact that banks do not supply the credit needs of small borrowers is not their fault. That they cannot do so except at a loss is well known to financiers, but it is doubtful if the average man realizes just why this is so. A $300 balance, it was estimated recently, is carried by a bank at an actual loss of $.70. Of this $300, it was computed 15 per cent, or $45, must be held as a reserve, leaving $255 available to the bank to lend. The yield to a bank in a year on this acount at 6 per cent would be $15.30; the overhead cost to the bank of carrying even an inactive account is $1 a month, or $12 a year; about 200 checks are drawn or deposited on an account of this size at a direct cost of $.02 each, or $4 a year. Thus, the total cost of that account would be $16 for the year, as against yearly interest earnings by the bank of $15.30, leaving a loss of $.70.

This accounts for the existence of small loan companies, that is companies which lend in sums not to exceed $300 at an interest rate higher than that charged by commercial banks for loans. It is estimated that credit is supplied by these small loan companies to necessitous borrowers in an annual sum of about $150,000,000 in average amounts of $100 to some 2,400,000 persons, on an invested capital of about $100,000,000. But a total of $150,000,000 annualy in small loans to this small proportion of the 95,000,000 people in this country who lack commercial banking accommodations will hardly be considered as adequate credit provision for those who need ready cash to meet demands where the limit of credit previously given has expired and for other emergencies requiring cash only, not credit. It is unquestionable that the small loan business is a necessary one, but there is at present a serious obstacle to any adequate extension of legitimate industrial financing.

This obstacle is the absence in all but a score of the states of laws that rigidly license and regulate the business of money lending. This failure by some of the states to enact modern and scientific legislation recognizing the need of industrial credit and protecting borrowers from gross exploitation by lenders has been the one fruitful reason for the survival of the loan shark evil for it is only in such states that extortionate lending exists in exclusive possession of a field into which the lender who will consent to do business only in a legal way and at a fair profit—no more, no less—will not venture. It is this absence of a general system of licensed lending throughout the nation that has limited the flow of industrial credit on equitable terms, and which the American Industrial Lenders Association is engaging in a determined effort to correct.

The importance of the subject has been recognized before this by the Russell Sage Foundation, which some 14 years ago did splendid service in the initial task of putting the lending business on a scientific and humane plane. The Foundation was largely responsible for the only practical device, which through the centuries has been effective to abate the "loan shark evil." But the "loan shark evil" still flourishes, although in greater circumscribed area. It is the purpose of the American Industrial Lenders Association to legalize even this circumscribed area.

Realizing that the credit needs of the industrial workers have not been generally met and under existing conditions in many states cannot be met on any fair terms, the Foundation about two years ago began a survey of the entire small loan field, choosing as director of investigation Dr. Louis N. Robinson, formerly of the Department of Economics of Swarthmore University. In this work Dr. Robinson is being assisted by the American Industrial Lenders Association, which is a national organization of persons and corporations who do business only in states where the lending business is licensed and supervised by the state. This survey is the second the Foundation has sponsored, the first being made subsequent to the establishment in 1910 of a Division of Remedial Loans by the Foundation.

Upon the findings of a commission of eminent sociologists carefully selected by the Division a uniform small loan law was drafted in 1916, providing for licensing by the state of industrial lending, its supervision by the state banking departments and fixing the maximum rate of interest that could be charged on unpaid balances of small loans. The law was strict in its provisions and the maximum rate fixed by it was based on actual calculations to give the lender no more than a fair profit. It was endorsed by many noted students of the problem and has been enacted into law by a score of the states. It has been found effective in its purpose of affording credit to necessitous borrowers on terms fair alike to lender and borrower and in these states where it is in force it is conceded to have abated the loan shark evil. It has never been repealed in any state where it was enacted.

The uniform law resulted in an unprecedented thing. It established as a legitimate business one that for centuries had been regarded with opprobrium and attracted to it the capital of men of fine character and large responsibility, quite in contrast to the type who in an era of unregulated lending had ground the faces of the poor by the most cruel and oppressive actions and methods.—Michigan Manufacturer and Financial Record, March 8, 1924.

PUBLICITY.

New York.—Salaried men and women of the class popularly known as "White Collar" workers form the largest single class of small borrowers and therefore afford loan sharks their greatest opportunity, according to an analysis of the types of necessitous borrowers made public to-day by the American Industrial Lenders Association. That charity is not the solution of the problem of supplying credit to those who lack banking accommodations, and that constructive legislation licensing and regulating money lending under State Banking Department supervison is the only remedy, are conclusions drawn from the analysis.

The analysis was based on a typical report of one month's business by an industrial loan company in New York City, classifying 2,444 borrowers by occupation. This report showed that of these, 1614 borrowers were in the "white collar" class, including in the order of their numbers: clerks, proprietors and partners of business concerns, salesmen, agents, factory operators, managers, bookkeepers and accountants, secretaries and stenographers, teachers, telegraphers and dispatchers, doctors and dentists, and writers.

Of the other classified borrowers, 497 were wage earners, in which class firemen and policemen were included. Of this class, 198 firemen borrowers, and 114 policemen, formed by far the largest proportion. The borrowers in miscellaneous occupations numbered 333.

Commenting on this analysis, the Association's statement says: "Contrary to common belief, the necessitous borrower does not belong to the class of 'bums,' 'down-and-outs,' or even 'ne'er-do-wells,' but for the most part to the ranks of ambitious, hard-working and self-respecting persons of small incomes who are compelled to borrow because of sickness, deaths in the family, pressing debts, or to acquire property, go into business, get a profession, bring relatives to this country, or for some other emergency in their lives equally urgent.

"It is obvious that this class will not consent to resort to charity for relief. They do not ask charity but an equal opportunity of helping themselves. Their needs must be met and their only recourse is to seek a small loan. Their circumstances should not be allowed to form the opportunities for unscrupulous lenders; they should be protected by the state from unfair and extortionate interest rates. This protection is not afforded by the states where the laws do not regulate the business of money lending, prescribing the maximum rate of interest that may be charged. The Uniform Small Loan law advocated by the Russell Sage Foundation, as enacted into law by many states, has been a Godsend to small borrowers."

THE RECEPTION AND TREATMENT OF APPLICANTS AND CUSTOMERS AT THE OFFICE.

By Lyn C. Perkins, Mgr. Beneficial Loan Society, Wilkes-Barre.

It is generally recognized that the big problem confronting the small loan business is to influence public opinion to a more favorable attitude towards us. Much has been done along these lines but there still remains a lot that we can do. If we in the offices can get the proper attitude and spirit it will be a strong factor in accomplishing our aim, for we are the ones who come into daily contact with the borrowing public, and it will be largely our attitude and way of handling our customers and prospective customers which will mould the opinions of those with whom we do business and consequently a large percentage of the public directly and indirectly. There was a time when the only way known to the small loan men to collect an account was to see how rough he could handle it and intimidate the borrower into paying.

We have only to walk into the average office of to-day to see how much has been accomplished in doing away with this practice. Customers are handled more courteously, more consideration is shown for their feelings and as a consequence we are attracting a better class of borrowers, and this means better future business in this field of usefulness and service that is rendered to those that are without means to secure credit, and this includes 85% of the people.

There are any number of people who would come to us for aid if they could be assured that the transaction would and that they would be treated considerately and courteously and all information given gladly without a rebuff.

There exists, as we all know, a certain reflection on the business of to-day because of the old high rate money lender. The public is a long way from being educated to the fact that the business as it is now being conducted is entirely separate and distinct from the man who used to charge usurious interest and did not care what hardships he worked on those who were forced to come to him in an extremity so long as he got his 100% or more, sometimes less, but always higher than was due him for the service he rendered.

I do not mean to say that all people associate us with this class, but a large class believe that we receive more than we should, and it is only by a careful explanation of the facts surrounding our business, how the charges were arrived at, wherein the small loan business differs from the bank transaction, and why it is not possible for us to lend at the same rate of interest, that they will have a clear idea of our position. As a consequence they will feel better satisfied that we are giving them a service at a cost that is fair to them and to the man who invests his capital into it. We all know that a satisfied customer is a booster and a dissatisfied one is a kicker. Usually the kicker has nothing to kick about but he thinks he has and it amounts to the same thing as far as we are concerned with that particular person. It is far better to spend an hour if necessary on that man or woman and show them their mistake than to let them leave the office with the wrong impression. If they are handled right they can see their mistake and will be able to understand our side.

It pays at all times to be frank and above board, subterfuge and trickery are not necessary in the conduct of the business.

A deal should be handled properly from the start, a person given the amount of loan that they can pay without distressing themselves, and the entire transaction explained to them thoroughly so that they know just what is expected of them and the service we are rendering.

An applicant should be received at the office, when they call to inquire about a loan, courteously and shown into a private room where there should be a rate card showing the amount of payments on the different size loans. The rate card gives them an opportunity to study the costs so that by the time the manager interviews them they will have arrived at some idea as to the amount desired. The importance of handling an application cannot be exaggerated for this will influence the future customers conduct to a large extent and often decides the course of the account. The entire transaction must be explained thoroughly, all information possible about the applicant gotten, as it is principally on information that the loan is made.

A large percentage of the demands for the small loans comes from a class of people who have neither real estate, stocks or bonds, and who cannot procure personal guarantors acceptable to bankers. Personal property, mainly household furniture, forms the basis of security upon which the small loans are made, but it is necessary that the applicant has sufficient income to meet the payments and that his obligations at the time of making the application are not large enough to seriously interfere. It is necessary that we learn what the income is, if the applicant's position is permanent and the length of time employed. As the workingman owns little besides his weekly wage it is certainly important that this be steady, for out of this each week or month must come his rent, food, clothing and other household expenses, which are usually incurred for the period that his salary is drawn leaving no surplus for unusual expenses such as sickness, death, marriage or any of many causes. It is one or more of these things which prompts him to leave an application for a loan. Such demands are unavoidable and a fair industrial service ought to be provided for them. This is recognized by modern small loan laws which have been passed in the principal States in recent years.

This should be explained to him at the time the application is made in a courteous manner leaving no doubt in his mind as to the charges, form of payments, conditions and manner in which the loan is made. He should know that the transaction will be confidential throughout and that everything possible will be done to render him the service in a quick and quiet manner.

Applicants leaving a loan institution of to-day should be so well sold modern loan service that they can assure uninformed prospective customers that in turn can take advantage of the opportunities the small loan business affords them at this period.

A well satisfied applicant leaving your office is an asset to the business.

INDIANA.

The annual meeting of the Indiana Association will be held in Indianapolis, Wednesdav and Thursday, May 21 and 22. Please note this on your calendar.

A lower court decision has been favorable in a case where the constitutionality of the Indiana Small Loan Law was contested.

A BRIEF SKETCH OF THE SMALL LOAN SITUATION IN SCRANTON.

By Mr. Huenkemier, Mgr. Community Finance Service, Scranton.

Having received unexpectedly a request to talk on some phase of the loan business, particular to this locality and as this request required an immediate declaration of my subject, I selected one broad enough to cover any phase that I might decide on when time permitted. So this talk will be within the copious boundaries of "A Brief Sketch of the Small Loan Situation in Scranton."

Scranton, the heart of the anthracite coal mining activities and a great railroad center; consisting of five steam and two electric roads, the home of enormous silk and lace manufacturing industries; headquarters of the largest correspondence schools in the world and numerous other business enterprises; employing thousands of men and women; surely is the City of Opportunity. Within a ten mile radius we have about 400,000 persons. The two predominating industries, the two having the greatest bearing on the community are the mining and railroads. As one is dependent upon the other the prosperity of Scranton relies to a very great extent upon both. My personal experience in the loan business in this locality dates back to 1921 and the phase of the business to be featured in this talk will cover from that time to the present.

Usually we think that as long as our car runs smoothly it is only necessary to look after the oil, gas, and water supply, but if the car balks we must get out and get under to find out why it won't go and remedy the cause. Usually the trouble is found to be of some nature that requires slight adjusting to set it right, but perhaps the difficulty is serious. However, if we had taken time to go over the car, tighten a nut here, put a little oil there, that attention would have saved us the inconvenience of being stalled. With proper care the car will not stall. Just so in any line of business and in particular our own, and I will try to show that our car was not only supplied with oil, gas and water, but had been given other little attentions.

For some time after my arrival in Scranton, business ran along smoothly. Loans were made in fair numbers, collections good and delinquents few. Month after month showed a steady increase and a new high mark reached. At this time our community developed the long running anthracite strike which was a little later joined in by the Railroad Shopmen. Here we have the two main-stay industries of Scranton out on strike. The miners were out about nine months and a state of strike is still on in the railway shops, covering about two years duration. The tie-up was general, thousands of wage earners out of employment and their income cut off. The industries not effected by strike could not absorb the vast numbers who applied for work and as the strike grew in time from weeks to months with apparently no settlement in sight conditions generally became serious. All lines of business felt the effects but above all the strikers and their families, many of whom felt the need for actual necessities of life.

Hundreds of these strikers were carrying loans, some for the first time and others may be classed as old customers. Our patrons, by the way, are mostly those who are unable to secure a loan through regular banking channels, but they are self-respecting and worthy and do not hesitate to give as security for the loan their furniture usually the only form of security they possess. This would signify that the borrower, regardless of his straightened circumstances would not risk his only possession unless he had a reasonable faith in the concern to which he applied and faith in his own ability to meet the contracted obligation. So much for faith and ability and for their part these two virtues were sorely tried. Paying bills could have only a remote position in a man's mind when he and his family were experiencing so much difficulty in securing sufficient food and retaining their places of shelter, consequently payments on loans could not be made as contracted. We did not proceed to close the delinquent accounts by selling the security—neither did we harrass the borrower. This situation was met by extension of payments, by advancing additional funds, by renewing expired notes, by arranging credit for new borrowers forced for the first time to seek aid in this manner, and by helping in every way possible to make conditions better. This state of affairs quite naturally checked our rapid progress but while we were marking time in one way we were strengthening our forces by creating good will and faith among our patrons who are now showing their appreciation for the fair dealings and helpful policies by referring their friends in need to us.

Several years ago these facts would have sounded odd and perhaps would have been classed as a fairy tale or a dream but with the legalizing of the business, men of the right kind have been enrolled in the loan service—men who are representative of the highest ideals of business—men who realize that the profit in dollars and cents is not all that is desirable in promoting and pursuing business. Well might we adopt such a motto as "Lend and Do Good."

This concludes my talk and while I feel that perhaps you loan men may have become a trifle bored by having a few of your true virtues brought to light in public, our esteemed guests who for the first time are gaining a definite knowledge of our work may thereby apply comprehensive thought to a business that is operating so extensively around them and which unfortunately is so little understood. It is through our straightforward methods that we desire to be known.

MARYLAND.

The monthly business meeting of the Marylaid Industrial Lenders Association was held on Tuesday, April 8, 1924, at 7:30 P. M. in the M & M Building, 22 Light Street, Baltimore, Maryland.

Those present were: C. A. Gardner, United Finance & Security Corp.; E. E. Hougham, Howard Hood, Atlas Loan Society; Lewis F. Eckhart, Peoples Loan Company; H. C. Moore, Peoples Finance Service Company; J. E. Turner and Herman Lappe, Community Finance Service Co.; R. L. Smith, H. T. Mattingly, Clifford Smith Master Loan Service Inc.; J. D. Goldrick, Union Loan Company; A. L. Wick, Supervisor Household Finance Service Co. and Peoples Finance Service Co.; Wm. Young, Glenn S. Knapp, Supervisors Community Finance Co.; H. H. Larsen, Supervisor People Loan Company.

The meeting was called to order by Chairman Gardner.

On motion of Mr. Mattingly, seconded by Mr. Hougham, the following bills were approved and ordered paid:

Advertisement in Baltimore Magazine for March, April, May, $41.25; printing in connection with the Annual Banquet, $27.00.

Financing the tenth Annual Convention of the American Industrial Lenders Association at the Southern Hotel, Baltimore, Maryland, September 24-25-26-27-1924, was brought up for discussion of which the majority of the members participated.

It was definitely decided that each office was to be assessed $100 and if necessary contribute up to $2 per $1000 according to the investment of his office covering year 1923, in order to meet the expenses of the tenth Annual Convention as stated. Fifty dollars of the above assessment is to be paid by each office to Treasurer Goldrick by June 1, 1924.

The following amendments were adopted by the members to govern the exchange and credit information in general.

Amendments Adopted April 8, 1924.

19. The Officers of the Bureau shall be the Executive Committee, who shall have entire charge of the property, interest, business and direction of the Exchange with full power and authority to manage and conduct the same.
20. A membership, in the Exchange Bureau, shall consist of any office making small loans not exceeding $300, under license of the Banking Commissioner of Maryland. An applicant for membership possessing these qualifications may be admitted to membership upon the unanimous approval of the Executive Committee, such action shall be subject to ratifications by a majority of members present at any regular stated meeting.
21. The applicant shall then pay to the Treasurer the sum of $25 an an entrance fee.
    - (a) Any elected member upon having received proper notice of his election to membership in this Bureau shall file with the Exchange Bureau, a list of all open accounts on his books within thirty (30) days after receiving such notification.
    - (b) No member shall clear names through the Exchange Bureau for any other than the membership licensee.
    - (c) All members must confine themselves to sending in cards furnished by the Exchange Bureau each day, which shall be mailed in envelopes bearing on the outside thereof, the code number of the member, also the code number upon the card, they shall be typed with the surname first, the man's given name or names including initials in full and the wife's name in like manner, including their present address or addresses for at least two years previous. The card shall contain the member's office number and the date of application. Where applicant is not married and the name of a comaker or guarantor is offered an individual card must be made out for each and the same sent to the Exchange Bureau properly designated as above described.
    - (d) Members shall be required not to make any new loans on names not previously cleared until after 10 A. M. of the morning following the date of sending record of application to the Exchange Bureau, by which time the Bureau will have its records searched and compared with the file, where the Exchange Bureau has any information or reference to the applicant or co-maker, or indorser or guarantor, being indebted to other members, the Exchange Bureau shall notify the member by telephone before 10 A. M.
    - (e) In instances where members are so notified by the Exchange Bureau of the applicant having applied to another member, the former shall telephone the office mentioned in the information supplied by the Exchange Bureau to ascertain if the applicant has any existing loans, in the event there is a loan balance, proper information for making settlement should be obtained and if the applicant is accommodated settlement shall be made to the member or members.
    - (f) Where the guarantor of a loan made by a member of the Exchange Bureau applies to another member for a loan, the member receiving the application may exercise his discretion as to the advisability of making such a loan. If such guarantor applicant is required to furnish an endorser or guarantor, such endorser or guarantor must not be the maker of the loan upon which the applicant guarantor acted as guarantor.
    - (g) No member receiving information from members through the Exchange Bureau shall appropriate the information for the purpose of soliciting the business of an applicant of another member, nor in any manner capitalize the information so rendered, at the expense or to the disadvantage of the member proposing the application.
    - (h) Any member having cause for complaint against the operation of the Exchange Bureau or against any of its members, shall make such complaint in writing and file with the Chairman of the Executive Committee, which body shall have power to act unless the defendent is one of the Executive Committee in which case he shall have no vote.

      The Executive Committee shall have the power to summons any member for interrogation on any complaint of another member provided the complainant member appears in person to press the complaint.
    - (i) In the event of the dissolution of the Exchange Bureau, all books, papers, minutes, records, cards, etc., shall be destroyed by the Executive Committee, and any funds on hand or proceeds of any sales of any assets of the Exchange Bureau that may be in the treasury at the time of dissolution shall be given to the general fund of the Maryland Industrial Lenders Association.

(j) Any member concluding his membership in the Exchange Bureau in whatever manner, forfeits all right to the privilege and equity in the Exchange Bureau.

(k) Any member may cancel his membership in the Exchange Bureau by giving 30 days notice in writing to the Executive Committee, and upon the payment of any and all moneys due to the Exchange Bureau.

(l) These rules and regulations may be amended, repealed or altered in whole or in part at any regular meeting of the membership, or at any special meeting where such action has been duly announced in the call, provided that a majority of the entire membership shall vote for such amendment, repeal or alteration.

(m) All cards and records shall remain the property of the Exchange Bureau. No member shall have access to the records.

(n) No loan is to be renewed unless the balance owed another member is paid unless the amount is in excess of $300 in which case the loan may be renewed for the balance only with the consent of the member involved.

22. Section 6 is hereby amended and added to as follows: He shall keep or cause to be kept a separate, distinct and complete record of all money paid in by members for financing of the Exchange Bureau, and also all money paid out for expenses for the Bureau.

The following were elected to membership in the Exchange Bureau: Atlas Loan Company, Household Finance Service Company, Peoples Finance Service Company, Community Finance Service, Peoples Loan Society, Union Loan Company, Master Loan Service Inc., Equitable, Calvert and Fayette Branches.

The members will be notified as to the date of the opening of the Exchange Bureau. H. C. Moore, Secretary.

VIRGINIA.

We quote the following interesting information from the Thirteenth Annual Report of the Banking Division, State Corporation Commission of Virginia, at the close of business, December 29, 1922.

"There were twenty-seven uniform small loan licensees in this State at the end of the year, December 31, 1922, with a working capital of $1,457,468.00 employing ninety persons, caring for 25,720 accounts, making loans ranging from $5 to $300, averaging $54.33. Interest collected for the year ending December 1, 1922, amounted to $458,827.00, from which expenses and losses amounting to $282,482.00 were deducted. The law now in force affecting these companies fixes a single rate of 3½% per month, which covers all charges to be made against the borrower except recording fees. It is believed by many that the small loan law of Virginia as amended by the General Assembly of 1922 is on the whole the best law of its kind in force in any of the States."

Also from the Fourteenth Annual Report, from the same Department, at the close of business, December 31, 1923:

"There were thirty-two small loan licensees in this State at the end of the year, December 31, 1923, with a working capital of $1,826,809.65, employing more than one hundred people, caring for 25,211 accounts, making loans ranging from $5.00 to $300.00, averaging $72.00. Interest collected for the year ending December 31, 1923, amounted to $573,944.56, from which expenses and losses amounting to $387,312.18 were deducted, leaving a net earning of $186,682.38, or an average of 10.22 per cent on the capital invested.

"Since the passage of the law placing the small loan operators under the supervision of the banking Division, forty-four have been licensed, and of this number twelve have discontinued business."

HEISKELL HOLDS LOAN PURCHASES ARE LOANS.

Another Batch of Suits Comes Against Sharks.

Chancellor Heiskell held yesterday that the claims of the loan companies that they do not loan money but only buy earned but not yet paid salaries is but a subterfuge and that the transaction is really one of loan and borrow. Following the last time that the matter went to the supreme court the agencies doing that kind of business have posted in their offices big signs: "We do not loan money; we buy salaries." It was by this means that they hoped to get by, but the chancellor held that these signs were but a subterfuge and that a change in name does not change a fact.

However, the complainant in this case, Alf. Scott, negro, was so ignorant that he could not tell the court what he was entitled to recover and the amount will be small for that reason. Under the court ruling Scott is entitled to recover all over 6 per cent that he had paid for the past two years, the statute preventing recoveries prior to that time. Scott, of course, had no records of the payments, for the loan companies take no chance on letting records fall into bad hands. Nor could the records be obtained from the company. They were ordered from the home office at Nashville of the Union Investment Company and also the home of H. B. Meadows, his son, who claims that the father sold him the business since this suit was filed. The home office claims that all of the records have been burned. The chancellor's reference to that claim were quite sarcastic.

There was an hour's fight on an attempt to get the records from the office of the company here by Charles S. Seay and I. A. Clement, counsel for Scott, and T. F. Kelley, counsel for the company, older almost by a generation in the practice of law than they are. Mr. Kelley threw every possible legal obstacle in the way of the search by an outsider, but the chancellor held with Messrs. Seay and Clements and sent his deputy, Mr. Abington, to the loan office, but he got no records.

Scott had claimed that for seven years he had paid interest at the rate of 520 per cent, a total of 3,600 per cent, but as he will be able to prove but a small portion of that his recovery will be small.

Mr. Kelley stated prior to the ruling that in the event of an adverse holding he would appeal the case. This holding may put the loan men out of business, as the same line of holding would enable the grand jury to indict and the criminal courts to convict the proprietors.

During a hiatus in this case Chancellor Heiskell signed fiats to five bills against other loan companies and against the Illinois Central Railroad Company. I. W. Smith is the complainant in all of these bills. They are against the American, the New York Life, the Boston, the Federal and the Lee companies, with all of whom he claims to have dealt. He claims that they charged him as interest not less than a rate of 260 per cent and sometimes a maximum of 1,040 per cent per annum. Brahan Houston the counsel in this series of cases, asks that they be restrained from collecting any more from the railroads and that the roads be restrained from paying the sharks any more money on Smith's loan on the ground that the usury that he has paid now aggregates more than the principal and legal interest. Memphis Commercial Appeal, March 18, 1924.

VICTIM OF LOAN SHARK FILES SUIT.

A suit for $70.50 was filed yesterday in the court of James J. Shephard, justice of the peace, by David L. Agnew, loan shark victim, against the Santa Fe railroad.

Agnew, in his petition, charged that the Santa Fe is withholding $70.50 due him as wages October 15. The Santa Fe is holding the wages to satisfy an illegal wage assignment filed September 15, by Ben Taylor, buyer of loan shark notes, Agnew charges. The assignment was served on the Santa Fe by Taylor, but never collected, it is charged.

Anthony P. Nugent, attorney for about 200 other victims of the money lenders, is representing Agnew. The case was set for hearing January 31. Two previous cases, similar to Agnew's, have been won by Mr. Nugent on the ground that the wage assignment was illegal. Mr. Agnew also will sue Taylor for damages charging he had caused him to lose his position with the Santa Fe. Agnew was discharged when the assignment was served.—The Kansas City Mo. Journal, Jan. 23, 1924.

HE KNEW HIS CROWD.

A minister in a certain town in Alabama took permanent leave of his congregation in the following pathetic manner:

"Brethren and Sisters: I come to say good-bye. I don't think God loves this church, because none of you ever die. I don't think you love each other, because I never marry any of you. I don't think you love me, because you never paid my salary. Your donations are mouldy fruit and wormy apples, and by their fruits you shall know them. Brethren, I am going away to a better place. I have been called to be chaplain of a penitentiary. 'Where I go you cannot come, but I go to prepare a place for you,' and may the Lord have mercy on your souls. Good-bye."

NEW JERSEY.

During the past month one of our Trenton members received a letter from a negro in which he charged that another negro evidently more prosperous was charging negroes 25 per cent per week on small loans. An investigation was made immediately with the result which may be learned from the following letter from Sol H. Vogel, chairman of the New Jersey Association:

"I am herewith inclosing a letter received by a member which is self-explanatory, thinking you would enjoy reading it. In connection therewith this member and myself called on this party who proved to be one of our prosperous negroes and he confessed that he was making loans in the sums of $10 and upwards but denied that he was charging 25% a week. He admitted, however, that if he loaned a man $10 and the man agreed to hand him $11 back there surely wasn't any harm in it. If on the other hand the man needed $4 or $5 and had no other security he would leave his overcoat with the gentleman. As a consequence of which he was good enough to ask Mr. Blank and myself whether he had a right to sell the overcoat after he kept it twelve months. We advised him that he was breaking the law in conducting the small loan business without a license also conflicting with the pawnbroker's law and the best thing he could do would be to collect his money in and quit the business, which he finally agreed to do on condition that we would not report him. We left him with that understanding and told him we would call on him again in a month or so and find out how he was getting along. If you feel in your estimation that this subject is worth passing along you have my permission so to do."

We say this is another evidence of proof that our members do police the small loan business.

LOAN MEN TO SUPPORT SECURITIES DIVISION.

Coöperation of the Ohio Loan Association with the state division of securities in throttling loan sharks and punishing violators of the state loan laws was pledged by the association at its midwinter meeting yesterday at the Chittenden.

Cyrus Locher, director of commerce, told the association the division is undermanned and that little can be accomplished without the help of the organization. He criticized provisions of the law that permits the major portion of the fees paid by loan men to find its way into the general fund, instead of being spent for their benefit.

He said the securities division never was intended to produce revenue, but was a police regulation and asserted that so long as the division collects $160,000 in fees annually and spends but $70,000, as now is the case, that the spirit of the law is not being carried out. "We need every cent that is paid in to properly administer the law and to give the public protection," he said.—Ohio State Journal, Columbus, O., Jan. 24, 1924.

DIVORCE LOAN BANK LATEST AID TO MISMATED COUPLES WHO ARE BROKE.

Pittsburgh, Sept. 11.—Lack of funds no longer need prove a hindrance to mismated couples who would obtain a divorce if they had money to pay attorney fees and court costs, according to A. M. Custer of Johnstown, of the Community Saving & Loan Company of that city, in an address to the Retail Credit Men's Association.

Custer stated that the newest thing in banking is the extension of credit to couples who seek legal freedom. He described the system and stated that not a dollar had been lost through loans.

He also stated that in several cases where the courts had seen fit to refuse a decree there had been no trouble in securing repayment of the money loaned. Chicago Herald-Examiner, Sept. 12, 1923.

CORRESPONDENCE.

Boston, Mass.
February 12, 1924.

Dear Mr. Kehr:

We know you will be sorry to hear that our very good Supervisor of Loan Agencies, Mr. Frank H. Pope, retires from office early in March of this year, thus bringing to a close many years of efficient and able public service.

Mr. Pope, although his looks belie the fact, has reached the retirement age, and thus both the public and the legal lenders in this state lose a valuable, courteous and pleasant Supervisor of Loan Agencies.

Very truly yours,
New England Equity Corporation,
J. R. Watson,
Assistant Treasurer.

The A. I. L. A. wishes through this paper to extend to Mr. Pope its appreciation of his services as an intelligent and faithful administrative officer and to express the hope that he may enjoy a long and happy life free from official duties. Mr. Pope contributed much to an intelligent understanding of the small loan business. His administration of the Massachusetts small loan law was followed by other state supervisors.

GOING FAST

Persons who want the A. I. L. A. Year Book for 1923 should send their orders accompanied by a dollar at once to the National Secretary, Box 778, Harrisburg, Pa.

A big demand for the Book kept up during the whole of January and it came from all parts of the country, so that few copies are left.

The last order received came from Hon. Frederick N. Zihlman, Chairman of the Committee on Labor, House of Representatives, Washington, D. C., and the reason he wanted it was because of the digest of small loan laws on pages 123 to 125.

WHEN YOU WANT FIXTURES ASK THE COMPANY FIRST.

It is always advisable for a prospective buyer of electrical equipment to consult the local power company relative to the characteristics of current available before making a purchase. The writer of the following letter to a southern power company had this well in mind:

Cincinnati, Ohio, July 10, 1923. Dear Sir I wood like for you to let me now whot kind of lectricey you all have down thire I got a Piano to cen Mattie Jones an the motor whot in it. it mite worke By that lectricey do you have ac. currence or derect currence this motor is a 1.10 bolt oblige to you if you let me know bea fore I send it to Mattie Jones. this is Charley Jones. Bro. Jim Jones in Cincin. ohio my bro is in Indianapolis Im oblige.

916 W. Mound St.,
Cincin. ohio.

The story is also told of a western farmer who bought an electric churn only to be advised by the power company that he could not operate a 25-cycle motor on a 40-cycle system. The farmer wrote the manufacturers of his predicament, resuesting that they ship him 15 more cycles.

PRINCIPLES OF BUSINESS CONDUCT

The function of business is to provide for the material needs of mankind, and to increase the wealth of the world and the value and happiness of life. In order to perform its function it must offer a sufficient opportunity for gain to compensate individuals who assume its risks, but the motives which lead individuals to engage in business are not to be confused with the function of business itself. When business enterprise is successfully carried on with constant and efficient endeavor to reduce the costs of production and distribution, to improve the quality of its products, and to give fair treatment to customers, capital, management, and labor, it renders public service of the highest value.

We believe the expression of principles drawn from these fundamental truths will furnish practical guides for the conduct of business as a whole and for each individual enterprise.

I. The foundation of business is confidence, which springs from integrity, fair dealing, efficient service, and mutual benefit.

II. The reward of business for service rendered is a fair profit plus a safe reserve, commensurate with risks involved and foresight exercised.

III. Equitable consideration is due in business alike to capital, management, employment, and the public.

IV. Knowledge—thorough and specific—and unceasing study of the facts and forces affecting a business enterprise are essential to a lasting individual success and to efficient service to the public.

V. Permanency and continuity of service are basic aims of business, that knowledge gained may be fully utilized, confidence established and efficiency increased.

VI. Obligations to itself and society prompt business unceasingly to strive toward continuity of operation, bettering conditions of employment, and increasing the efficiency and opportunities of individual employees.

VII. Contracts and undertakings, written or oral, are to be performed in letter and in spirit. Changed conditions do not justify their cancellation without mutual consent.

VIII. Representation of goods and services should be truthfully made and scrupulously fulfilled.

IX. Waste in any form,—of capital, labor, services, materials, or natural resources,—is intolerable, and constant effort will be made toward its elimination.

X. Excesses of every nature,—inflation of credit, over-expansion, over-buying, over-stimulation of sales,—which create artificial conditions and produce crises and depressions, are condemned.

XI. Unfair competition, embracing all acts characterized by bad faith, deception, fraud, or oppression, including commercial bribery, is wasteful, despicable, and a public wrong. Business will rely for its success on the excellence of its own service.

XII. Controversies will, where possible, be adjusted by voluntary agreement or impartial arbitration.

XIII. Corporate forms do not absolve from or alter the moral obligations of individuals. Responsibilities will be as courageously and conscientiously discharged by those acting in representative capacities as when acting for themselves.

XIV. Lawful coöperation among business men and in useful business organizations in support of these principles of business conduct is commended.

XV. Business should render restrictive legislation unnecessary through so conducting itself as to deserve and inspire public confidence.

Suggested for adoption at the annual meeting of the U. S. Chamber of Commerce, Cleveland, May 6-8, 1924.

1924 CONVENTION.

Suggestions are now in order from any member, and please do not be backward about writing the National Secretary, who is in charge of the program.

The committees handling the various details of this big annual gathering have been busy for some time and are gradually determining upon important features.

There will be addresses by prominent citizens and plenty of entertainment along with the business of the convention.

If any member has the name of any speaker to suggest, or will say whether he prefers to select his own entertainment in preference to going with the crowd, it will help the committees responsible for these features.

Shall the reports of the officers be read or just printed in the Year Book, and this time taken up by interesting papers and discussions? Let's hear from you with your suggestions.

W. K. PARKER DEAD.

We learn of the recent death at Cleveland of Mr. W. K. Parker, who has been engaged in the industrial loan business for many years, his more recent connections having been with the Beneficial Loan Society and Community Finance Service there.

Mr. Parker was capable, conscientious and accommodating and was highly respected by all who knew him.

SITUATION WANTED.

Position wanted by experienced, old line, loan man, married, can give the best of reference, bond, am 40 years old with about 16 years of Chattel Loan experience that will bear any kind of investigation. This is your opportunity to secure the services of a thoroughly reliable man that can show results. Address 2514 Bellfountain St., Indianapolis, Indiana.

WASHINGTON LOAN SCHEME MAKES POOR PEOPLE FIRST BUY STOCK.

A new twist in the loan business has been dug up by some enterprising promoters who have picked out the District of Columbia for their field of operations. They will loan money to poor people, who are so desperately in need of it that they have to "hock" their household furnishings, but before they make the loans they make the poor victims buy stock in their company. This combination is about as mean and contemptible as any I ever heard of. The very nature of their business precludes the possibility of their customers being anything but really poor people who, for the time being, anyway, are desperately in need of a few dollars.

These birds of prey work from two angles. They have the Commercial Loan and Finance Corp., and the Beneficial Building & Loan Association. The former has advertised through the daily newspapers that it will loan money in small sums on collateral, such as househould furniture and the like. Persons who have answered these advertisements have discovered that they must buy stock in the corporation, in order to obtain a loan. The fact that there have been numerous complaints has brought the enterprise to the attention of organizations who make it a point to investigate undertakings of this sort. Advertisements calling for deposits as low as one dollar, to be made in a building and loan association, and the fact that high pressure salesmen imported from New York have been going from door to door, giving a fountain pen to every person who opens an account, has caused the Comptroller of the Currency to ask the bank examiners department to look carefully into the operations of this enterprise, which claims to be operating under government supervision.

To obtain a loan of $100 from the Commercial Loan and Finance Corp., it has been discovered that a person must subscribe for one unit of stock for $120, and then must sign a note for $220, payable in ten monthly installments of $22 a month. The note pays for the stock and the loan. The person making the loan must also pay $10, which represents the expense of searching the title to real estate, or whatever is offered as security for the loan.

If monthly payments are forthcoming, no trouble is likely to ensue, but if the borrower happens to get behind in his payments, or refuses to go on, he receives a series of letters from the counsel for the company, calling his attention to his delinquency, and noting the fact that his security will be sold at auction, on a certain day, at a certain time. The attorney for the company also encloses a clipping of a published notice to the effect that an auction will be conducted by B. L. Fuller, who happens to be a brother of Frank T. Fuller, the attorney for the corporation, who collects the $10 fee, for searching the title of the property, offered as security.

If the company is forced to sell a borrower's collateral, the borrower discovers that he has agreed that the company shall take out what is coming to it with interest, and also five per cent to cover costs of collection, leaving the borrower what may be left.—Hogan's Financial Digest.

UNION BANK EXPLAINS.

Amalgamated Not to Use Funds to Buy Fuel for Workers.

Leroy Peterson, cashier of the Amalgamated Bank, and officials of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America conferred yesterday with State Banking Superintendent George V. McLaughlin concerning a report that the garment workers' bank would finance the purchase of coal and commodities by workmen.

A statement issued by Superintendent McLaughlin said that the officials declared that the news report, which indicated that the funds of depositors were to be used for the purpose of buying coal, were not correct.

The only relation of the bank to the purchase of coal or other commodities, said the statement, was that the bank proposed from time to time to make loans to credit unions and other coöperative associations that may assist their members in the purchase of commodities.

"In the extension of these credits they do not, however, propose to depart from any of the sound principles of banking," the statement continued. "This service of extending loans to credit unions and other coöperatives within proper limitations is not new, and wherever the banking risk is a good one the credit can be obtained from any of the other banking institutions in the state."—N. Y. Times, April 16, 1924.

HOLDS PAY ASSIGNMENTS VOID.

Justice Shepard Orders Santa Fe to Give D. L. Agnew $70.50 in Wages.

The Santa Fe Railroad was ordered yesterday to pay David L. Agnew, 964 Shawnee Avenue, Kansas City, Kan., $70.50 in wages held by the company on alleged assignments of wages to two loan companies.

Agnew testified he borrowed $40 from the General Investment Company last July, paying $3 for each two weeks.

He said he borrowed $25 from the Midwest Investment Company about the same time, paying $2.50 interest for each two weeks.

Agnew, through his attorney, Anthony P. Nugent, contended he did not sign wage agreements, but admitted he did sign some sort of document.

The assignments were filed by the loan companies October 14th and Agnew was discharged as a trainman the next day, he testified.

Justice J. J. Shepard ruled the alleged assignments were void, because any assignment to secure a debt at usurious interest was invalid.—Kansas City Times, Feb. 20, 1924.

INDUSTRIAL LENDERS NEWS

VOL. VIII, No. 12. JUNE, 1924. Price, $1.00 a year.

CONVENTION NEWS.

Captains of the industrial banking business from all over the country will attend the tenth annual convention of the American Industrial Lenders Association to be held in Baltimore, September 24, 25, 26 and 27. It is estimated that five hundred delegates and their guests will be present at the convention, the sessions of which will be held at the Southern Hotel.

This year's meeting is of particular significance because of the number of important questions that will be discussed, prominent among which are the survey now being made by the Russell Sage Foundation of the entire industrial loan field of the country, and plans for the further advancement of the movement to improve small loan conditions in the nation. It is probable also that the convention will consider the matter of a nation-wide movement against extortionate money lenders particularly in states where there are no regulatory laws. Money lending is regulated in only eighteen states, from among the lenders in which the membership of the Association is made up, and at present the state associations affiliated with the national body are policing the business and bringing to the attention of the state prosecuting officials all instances of illegal money lending of which they obtain knowledge.

While the program of the convention is yet in the tentative stages, it is probable that the speakers included will be the Governor of Maryland and the President of Johns Hopkins' University, besides the Mayor of Baltimore and the Secretary of the Merchants' and Manufacturers' Association.

The annual dinner of the Association will be held at the Southern Hotel, Thursday night, September 25 and will be followed by a dance.

Among those who will attend the convention are Chairman Charles G. Mueller, Philadelphia; George W. Kehr, Harrisburg, National Secretary; Colonel Clarence Hodson, New York; Charles H. Watts, Philadelphia; H. T. Mattingly, Baltimore; Judge J. H. Dyer, Columbus, Ohio; J. H. Aufderheide, Indianapolis; W. A. Zumpfe, Indianapolis; W. P. Woll, Chicago; L. C. Harbison, Chicago; and Edgar P. East, Richmond, Virginia. These men are among the leaders of heads of institutions employing millions of dollars capital in the industrial lending field.

The local committee chairman who will have charge of the preliminary arrangements for the convention at Baltimore are: Financial, J. D. Goldrick, 201 North Liberty Street; Entertainment, E. E. Hougham, 111 West Lexington Street; L. H. Pumphrey, 206 West Fayette Street; Publicity, H. T. Mattingly, 322 Equitable Building, Baltimore; Hotel, W. F. Oliver, Jr., Citizens Bank Building; Ways and Means, L. W. Eckhart, 404 West Baltimore Street.

The conventions of the Association are always attended by many ladies, members of the families of delegates, and the local committee is formulating an entertainment program which will include luncheons, sight-seeing trips, a boat trip on Chesapeake Bay and possibly side trips to Annapolis and Washington.

COMMUNICATIONS.

We beg leave to inform you that the Tenth Annual Convention of The Ohio Loan Association will be held at Cedar Point on Lake Erie July 23, 24 and 25, 1924.

We decided to hold our convention a little earlier than usual this year in order that the different managers and others might arrange for their vacations to follow the convention period.

The program has not been definitely arranged as yet, but will include a dancing party for one evening of the convention and probably a banquet.

The management of the hotel have granted to The Ohio Loan Association the following special convention rates on rooms during the convention period:

Rooms.—$1.25 per day each person, two in a room $2.00 per day, single.

Select Rooms—$1.00 and $2.00 per day each, two in a room $2.50 and $3.25 per day, single.

Rooms with Bath—$2.50 and $3.00 per day each, two in a room $3.50 and $4.00 per day, single.

Suites with Bath—(Limited Number) Two rooms with bath between; 2 single beds in each room $2.75 per day each person, two persons in each room.

It is important that applications for rooms should be made early, as this week will find an unusual crowd in attendance.

Very truly yours,
J. Fred Anderson,
Secretary-Treasurer.

GEORGIA.

The regular meeting of the Georgia Association was held in the office of Chairman Madison, May 16, 1924.

Chairman Madison called the meeting to order promptly at 2 P. M. All of the Atlanta Members were present. Mr. Sutton of Macon and Mr. Turner of Savannah were the absentees.

REPORT OF COMMITTEES.

Treasurer reported $55.49 with all bills to date paid. Mr. Lassiter reported for the membership committee, as making progress. Mr. Dismer of the Publicity Committee had nothing to report. Since meetings have been held in the afternoon and only managers attending, Mr. Maffett of Publicity Committee unable to attend, Chairman Madison appointed Mr. McCollum in his stead and Mr. Steimle to act in an advisory capacity.

Mr. Madison and Mr. Steimle reported much progress in their meeting with the Associated Retail Credit Men, with whom they met in open meeting, and at which time Mr. Madison addressed this Organization on subject entitled—"What is the Relation of Industrial Loan Companies to Credit Managers in Passing Credits." After the address, many questions were asked pertaining to our business. A more friendly feeling and a better understanding of the loan managers and the Industrial Loan Business was brought about through this meeting. A notice from the Credit Service Exchange has already been received by the members of the Industrial Lenders Association, requesting their coöperation in forming Clearing House, handling all classifications of lenders, which was brought about by this meeting.

It was properly moved and seconded that the Secretary write Mr. Gilbert, Manager of the Credit Service Exchange, advising that the Atlanta Members of the Georgia Industrial Lenders Association, as a body, will be glad to coöperate and will do all in their power to bring about such a Clearing House, and a committee will be pleased to meet with them at their convenience.

The decision of the Court of Appeals in the case of S. J. Masters vs. Jobson, was discussed at some length. According to the decision of the Court of Appeals in this case, it appears that all those doing business under Small Loan Law Act of 1920 are not calculating their interest correctly. The decision states we are dealing in months and not days, nor fractional parts of the month; in other words, interest apparently can only be calculated on the unpaid balance for one month at a time (30 days). Should a loan be made on the 20th of the month, and due the 20th of the following month, and it is not paid until the 25th, we are only entitled to 30 days interest (this also applies if paid ahead of time) interest for the particular month payment was due.

This case was won in the lower courts but was reversed in the Court of Appeals, and is now petitioned to be heard in the Supreme Court for a final decision. As the Court of Appeals' decision is ambiguous, it is absolutely necessary that we have a final decision from the Supreme Court.

President Madison urged that as many members as possible attend the National Convention to be held in Baltimore in September—that much benefit is derived from these conventions, and that the expense entailed in attending will be repaid tenfold.

President Madison brought to the attention of the members that the next meeting will be the Annual meeting. Nomination and election of officers for ensuing year, also the appointment of Delegate to attend National Convention to be held in Baltimore, Md., in September 1924, will be the main business of that meeting.

It was properly moved and seconded that the Annual meeting be held Wednesday, June the 25th, 1 P. M., at some hotel and luncheon be served at the expense of the Association.

Edw. M. Steimle, Sec.-Treas.

MARYLAND.

The regular monthly meeting of the Maryland Industrial Lenders Association was held in the Board Room of the M. & M. Building, 22 Light Street, Baltimore, May 13.

Those present were: E. E. Hougham, Howard Hood, Atlas Loan Co.; Louis F. Eckhart, Peoples Loan Society, J. E. Turner, Herman Lappe and Leroy Busch, Community Finance Service Inc.; R. L. Smith, Lee Pumphrey, H. T. Mattingly and Clifford Smith, Master Loan Service Inc.; A. E. Potter, Household Finance Service Co.; H. C. Moore, Peoples Finance Service Co.; Wm. Young and A. L. Wick, Philadelphia, Pa.

Owing to illness in Chairman Gardner's home, he was unable to be with us. Mr. Young presided.

Mr. Young, Chairman of the Membership Committee, reported he will have two companies to submit for membership at our next meeting.

Chairman Hougham of the Legislative Committee reported that Legislature is over for this session, and there is nothing new that would require action of this Committee at this time.

Mr. Pumphrey, Chairman of the Publicity Committee reported that the advertisement in the Baltimore Magazine has not been changed. He was successful in having an article published in the Hagerstown and Baltimore newspapers, re. Dr. Mueller Attorney Nugent, with respect to eliminating the loan sharks in Missouri.

Mr. Pumphrey was instructed to appoint a committee of two to assist him in writing future advertisements for the Baltimore Magazine.

Chairman Hougham of the Exchange Committee reported that the Exchange is about ready to function. A general discussion upon this subject took place by Messrs. Young, Wick, Hougham and Mattingly.

It was definitely agreed upon that offices having an investment of over $30,000 were to pay $20 per month as their share of the expenses in the Exchange, and offices under this amount to be assessed $10 per month.

Upon motion of Mr. Mattingly, seconded by Mr. Hood, Chairman Hougham was instructed to start the Exchange at the earliest possible date, and to call on each member when funds were needed.

Upon order of the Chair, the secretary was instructed to incorporate in the minutes of this meeting the following Committee Chairman to serve in connection with the National Convention to be held in Baltimore, September 24, 25, 26, 27, 1924.

Entertainment, E. E. Hougham; Publicity, H. T. Mattingly; Hotel, W. F. Oliver, Jr.; Financing, J. D. Goldrick; Ways & Means, L. F. Eckhart.

The Committee Chairmen were instructed with the plans for the convention as outlined at our April meeting.

A letter from Mr. Watts, Chairman of the Legislative Committee of the American Industrial Lenders Association addressed to Chairman Gardner was read, suggesting that the Maryland Association have printed for general distribution the amendment to the uniform small loan law as passed by the Maryland Assembly at the 1924 session.

This suggestion having the general approval of the members present, acting Chairman Young appointed Pumphrey, Eckhart and Wick to have 500 copies in book form of this amendment printed.

Upon motion of Mr. Mattingly, seconded by Mr. Moore, the by-laws of our Association were ordered be brought to date and an edition of 500 copies printed in book form. Messrs. Moore, Hougham and Mattingly being appointed to look after this printing.

H. C. Moore, Secretary.

MARYLAND.

The annual meeting of the Maryland Industrial Lenders Association was held at 7:30 P. M., on Tuesday, June 10, in the Board Room of the M. & M. Building, 22 Light Street, Baltimore, Md.

The meeting was called to order by Chairman Gardner.

The following members were present: J. D. Goldrick, Union Loan Company, Lewis Niemeyer, Saml. Masters, H. T. Mattingly, Lee Pumphrey, Clifford Smith, The Master Loan Service Inc.; A. E. Potter, A. L. Wick, H. C. Moore, Household Finance Service Co. and Peoples Finance Service Co.; Louis F. Eckhart, H. H. Larsen, Peoples Loan Co.; Herman Lappe, J. E. Turner, Glenn S. Knapp, Community Finance Service Co. Baltimore and Hagerstown Branches; C. A. Gardner, United Finance & Security Corp. E. E. Hougham, Atlas Loan Co.

Report of Officers.

Treasurer Goldrick gave a following report for the year ending June 10, 1924 which showed a balance on hand of $117.72.

On motion of Mr. Wick, seconded by Mr. Moore, this report was accepted.

Secretary Moore reports as follows:

As our good friend Collier, the street car advertising man says, "There is only room for facts in advertising" so with my report covering the activities of your association for the past year.

Our membership consists of 17, 16 of which are in good standing in state and national dues. There are 42 licensed lenders in Maryland as of June 6, 1924, 36 of which have their offices in Baltimore.

We have collected in state dues $608, and in national dues $925.

During the year 2 companies resigned, 2 companies went out of business, and we received 2 new members. Eight monthly meetings were held with an average attendance of 87% of the members.

I will not dwell upon the good work accomplished by the different committees, yet I desire to call your attention to a few important things the association has accomplished in the past year. The amendment to the present law and the taking up of the salary purchasing matter is indeed worthy of mention.

Those farsighted members who are really interested in having an exchange are to be complimented for their untiring efforts in helping to bring this matter to a successful conclusion.

Your association is being more widely advertised to-day than ever in history.

Few companies are making a practice of recording mortgages or charging notary fee. This is pleasing to the association.

Having served two terms as your secretary I earnestly request the nominating committee not to include my name among the officers for the coming year, yet I shall consider it a pleasure to serve on any of the committees.

The association at all times can depend on my close coöperation for the betterment and improvement of money lending conditions in Maryland.

On motion of Mr. Potter seconded by Mr. Hougham this report was accepted.

Report of Committees.

Chairman Hougham of the Legislative Committee gave a verbal report covering the past session of our Legislature and the beneficial results the members of the association have received in the way of eradicating the so-called salary purchasing people and the strengthening of our present law.

Lee F. Pumphrey of the membership committee proposed the names of the following companies for membership:

Industrial Loan Company, C. Howard Hood, Manager, 455 Calvert Building, Baltimore, Md.

Fidelity Finance Corp., W. F. Oliver, Jr., President, Drovers & Mechanics, Bank Building, Eutaw & Fayette Sts., Baltimore, Md.

Chesapeake Finance Co., F. DeSales Santry, Manager, 111 N. Charles Street, Baltimore, Md.

On motion of Mr. Moore, seconded by Mr. Hougham, the association accepted the above stated companies as members.

Chairman Pumphrey of the publicity committee reported that the Maryland Association has obtained more real publicity during the past year than ever in history. He has been successful in having articles published in the local newspapers throughout the state also the association has had several favorable write ups in the Baltimore Magazine in addition to the advertisement we are running monthly in this periodical.

Chairman Hougham of the exchange committee reports that in all probability the exchange will be ready to start functioning within a period of 10 days' time.

Unfinished Business.

Mr. Mattingly advises that the by-laws of the association have been brought to date and are in the hands of the printer to be printed in book form, also the amendment to the uniform small loan law as passed by the Maryland Assembly at the 1924 session is being printed for distribution among the members.

New Business.

The matter of financing the 10th, annual convention was discussed by practically every man present, and the secretary was instructed to write each member requesting that they pay to Treasurer Goldrick $50, at once, as part of the assessment of each office toward the expenses of the convention.

Mr. Eckhart of the convention committee advised that the committee will meet every Thursday morning at 10:30 A. M. at the old Colony Club, Emerson Hotel. A detail report covering the progress of each committee chairman will be mailed to National Secretary Kehr.

On May 22, 1924, a short meeting of the executive committee was held at Mr. Hougham's office. At this meeting Messrs. Hougham, Goldrick, and Mattingly were appointed to serve on the nominating committee for the election of officers for the year 1924-1925.

The following members were nominated and elected to serve as the executive committee for the coming year.

H. T. Mattingly, J. D. Goldrick, H. C. Moore, Louis P. Eckhart, E. E. Hougham and C. Howard Hood of Baltimore and E. Webster of Philadelphia.

The executive committee elected the following association officers: Chairman, Howard T. Mattingly; vice chairman, Louis F. Eckhart; secretary, H. C. Moore; treasurer, J. D. Goldrick; chairman of the executive committee, E. E. Hougham.

On Mr. Mattingly taking the chair, on motion of Mr. Hougham seconded by Mr. Moore, that the members tender a rising vote of thanks to Mr. Gardner for his able work in serving the association as chairman for the past year, and his untiring efforts in helping put over the top the real things the association has accomplished during his administration.

Owing to the lateness of the hour, Chairman Mattingly delayed appointing the chairmen of the different committees.

No monthly business meetings are held during the months of July and August.

H. C. Moore, Secretary.

MICHIGAN.

The Semi-Annual Meeting of the Michigan Industrial Lenders Association was held at Lansing, Michigan, May 17, 1924. At Hotel Downey.

Roll call was read by the secretary and responded to by 24 members of the Association.

Minutes of the last meeting were read and there being no corrections to same they were approved.

The treasurer made a report of the financial condition of the association which was accepted.

The matter of a suitable card to be issued to members of the association in good standing was discussed and several designs submitted and suggestions made after which it was moved and supported that the matter be referred to the treasurer with power to act. The motion was carried.

Battle Creek Loan Co., Battle Creek, Brooks Loan Co., Detroit, Wenona Loan Co., Bay City made application for membership in the association and all were duly elected.

At this time a general discussion was had upon the merits of the handling of the Michigan law by the State banking department the consensus of opinion being that the membership as a whole was well pleased with the administration of Mr. McPherson and his assistants and a special resolution committee was appointed by the President to formulate suitable resolutions to be sent to the Banking Department by the secretary outlining the very kindly feeling of the licensees toward the department.

At this time State Chairman Stroup read a very interesting paper upon the relations of persons having Chattel Mortgages on their property to general credits as administered by the usual City Credit Association.

At this time the convention listened to remarks from our state banking commissioner Mr. McPherson, his deputy Mr. Morman and Mr. Klench, Department Examiner, all tending to show a feeling of the desire for pleasant coöperation.

At this time an hour was given to a round table discussion of many subjects of interest to the members present after which it was voted to adjourn to meet in Battle Creek the third Thursday in October. E. I. McCuen, Secretary.

PENNSYLVANIA.

The regular meeting of the Pennsylvania Association was held in the banquet room, City Club, 313 South Broad Street, Philadelphia, at 2 p. m., on Thursday, May 1, 1924.

The meeting was called to order by Chairman W. S. Herron.

Sixty members, including guests, were present.

Report of Officers.

Treasurer Ezekiel reported on hand $2,568.11.

On motion of Mr. Wick, seconded by Mr. Gordon, this report was accepted.

Secretary Watts reported a membership of 101—98 in good standing as of July 1, 1924. One of the delinquent members is overdue since July 1, 1923. Seventy-five of our members are members in good standing in the American I. L. Association as of Aug. 1, 1924. There are 228 licensed lenders in Pennsylvania.

On motion of Mr. Ezekiel, seconded by Mr. Young, this report was approved.

Report of Committees.

Executive Committee Chairman Webster's report was received and on motion of Mr. Wick, seconded by Mr. Devine, was ordered spread on the minutes.

"A regular meeting of the Executive Committee was held at the City Club on Friday, March 28, 1924, with the following members present: Messrs. Moss, Hess, Hart, Herron, Ezekiel, Watts and Webster. In the matter of loans made by unlicensed and alleged illegal lenders in Philadelphia, it was agreed to lend every possible avenue of helpfulness to the Banking Department and its representatives in checking up the reports of illegal lending, and to confer with former customers of such lenders, making testimony available for the prosecuting officers.

"Action on the Pittsburgh report of salary purchasing cases,—it was agreed to take the question of prosecution under advisement awaiting the result of the Maryland I. L. Association's activity in the matter of prosecution of salary purchasing companies and the enactment of restrictive legislation on this subject.

"The committee in charge of selecting phrases to be used in advertising and otherwise, which would be satisfactory to the Banking Commissioner, submitted several which had the approval of the Commissioner. It was recommended that the secretary send them out to our members for their use. The committee was discharged with thanks.

"The next meeting of the Pennsylvania I. L. Association is to be held at Philadelphia on Thursday, May 1, 2 p. m., to be preceded by a luncheon.

"It was recommended that the Pennsylvania contract for a $50 space in the special edition of the Philadelphia Progressive Labor World.

"A meeting was held on April 28, 1924, at the City Club, Philadelphia, with the following present: Messrs. Hart, Herron, Moss, Ezekiel, Watts and Webster.

"A complaint, having been made by Mr. Holloway that the American Equity Corporation of Hazleton had violated the regulations of the Pennsylvania I. L. Association in the matter of false representations to his employees and an attempt made to employ his employees, was taken up and thoroughly discussed. After hearing from Mr. Buckman of the American Equity Corporation and Mr. Holloway, it was decided that Mr. Buckman had violated the regulations and ethics of the Association, although he probably did so unknowingly, that he was entitled to the benefit of the doubt and the application of the American Equity Corporation be recommended for membership.

"Respectfully submitted,
"Edward B. Webster,
"Chairman, Executive Committee."

Publicity Committee Chairman Moore, reported through Mr. Watts, that the article covering the Philadelphia meeting had appeared in newspapers pretty generally throughout the state.

Legislative Committee Chairman Kehr reported progress, but called the members' attention to the necessity at this time of acquainting themselves with their prospective legislative members in their home community. The Chair most urgently recommends that you see that Mr. Kehr's wishes are fulfilled.

Membership Committee Chairman Mueller reported three new members for the attention of to-day's meeting.

Entertainment Committee Chairman Hart and the Vigilance Committee Chairman Hart was absent. Messrs. Young and Wick of the Vigilance Committee reported having been attentive to the recent articles in the Philadelphia newspapers of a supposed borrower who had committed embezzlement because of his borrowing and of their having sufficient evidence to disprove this statement and that it would be given publicity in the near future.

Unfinished Business.

Chairman Herron of the Committee of Two, relative to our coöperation in the prosecution of illegal lending, reported the employment of Thomas Raeburn White, to assist the Bank Commissioner's legal adviser in Philadelphia.

On motion of Mr. Moss, seconded by G. R. Lobb, the committee having in charge the conference with the Bank Commissioner on the substitution of a phrase for the word "supervision" and the phrases agreed upon having been sent to the members, the committee was discharged with thanks.

New Business.

On motion of Mr. Young, seconded by Mr. Hess, the Rudolph Loan Company, 201 N. Broad Street, Philadelphia, was duly elected to membership.

On motion of Mr. Lyons, seconded by Mr. Burt, the American Loan Company, 525 Market Street, Chester, was duly elected to membership.

On motion of Mr. Young, seconded by Mr. Dobyns, the American Equity Corporation, 223 Markle Bank Building, Hazleton, was duly elected to membership. Prior to voting on this application the following statement was read by Mr. Holloway:

"When the name of the American Equity Corporation was proposed for membership in the Pennsylvania Industrial Lenders Association, I made what I believed to be a well-founded objection to their name being considered.

"The Executive Committee, I am informed, decided it best to allow the name of the American Equity Corporation to come before this body for consideration to-day.

"As a member of this Association, I wish to go on record as accepting the decision of the Executive Committee, who believe that the interests of the Association will be better served by having the American Equity Corporation as a member.

"I fully believe that it is the desire of the committee to do the greatest good to the greatest number and let me assure you that I know the greatest number cannot be number one.

"Harry D. Holloway."

On motion of Mr. Watts, seconded by Mr. Ezekiel, the sentiments in Mr. Holloway's communication were unanimously approved.

On motion of Dr. Mueller, seconded by Mr. Hess, the Chair was authorized to appoint a Committee of Two to attend the conference of members from every state organization and the national organization, on the matter of recording of salary purchasers. Carried. The Chair appointed Messrs. Kehr and Watts.

Mr. Kehr reported the suit for the recovery of interest, which involves the question of whether interest at 3½ per cent may be collected after judgment has been entered and that in the Magistrate's Court a $50 fine and judgment for such interest in excess of 6 per cent had been given. The case is now on appeal. An opinion from Thomas Raeburn White is being secured by the Association. Messrs. Ezekiel and Holloway spoke at length on this question and on motion of Mr. Ezekiel, seconded by Mr. Young, the Executive Committee was authorized to stand back of the case referred to by Mr. Kehr and if necessary carry it to the Upper Court.

A letter from Mr. Mattingly, Chairman of the Publicity Committee of the Baltimore Convention of the American I. L. Association, was read and on motion of Mr. Moss, seconded by Mr. Erdman, it was agreed that the Pennsylvania members should attend the Baltimore Convention, September 24th to 27th inclusive, and bring back to Pennsylvania the membership cup, which the Association has had for one year.

Mr. S. H. Vogel, Chairman of the New Jersey I. L. Association, was presented by former Chairman Ezekiel in a humorous manner. Chairman Vogel is leaving soon for California and his friend Mr. Ezekiel, lost no opportunity to tell of his many deeds, both good and otherwise.

Mr. H. D. Holloway, manager and owner, addressed the meeting on the subject of "Looking Backward Twenty-five Years in the Small Loan Business" and on motion of Mr. Wick, seconded by Mr. Young, a vote of thanks was tendered him for his having so vividly pictured the condition in the small loan business thirty years ago.

Mr. J. W. Batezel, manager, Philadelphia office of the Household Finance Service Company, read a paper on "Conducting a Small Loan Office for Service" and on motion of Mr. Gatter, seconded by Mr. Hess, a vote of thanks was extended to him and the secretary was to forward this paper to the Lenders News for early publication.

C. H. Watts, Secretary.

At the luncheon served in the banquet room, Mr. O. Howard Wolfe, Cashier of the Philadelphia National Bank, gave a most interesting talk on "Philadelphia As a Financial Center," and on motion of Dr. Mueller, unanimously seconded, a rising vote of thanks was tendered Mr. Wolfe for his address.

RHODE ISLAND.

The Rhode Island Industrial Lenders' Association held their annual meeting and banquet at the Providence Biltmore Hotel, Wednesday, May 6th, the affair closing with dancing until midnight.

The meeting was a jubilation over the passage of the Uniform Small Loan Law by the State Legislature last year and the State Association was congratulated by officials of the National organization including Dr. C. G. Mueller, Chairman of the American Industrial Lenders Association, and Charles H. Watts, both of Philadelphia.

At 6:30 a banquet was served at which some one hundred and fifty persons were seated and at which Mr. Watts was toastmaster. The Providence Biltmore Orchestra furnished music and Frank Bernier led the singing, popular selections having been distributed among the diners. The guests of honor included Governor Flynn, Mayor Gainer, Representatives Harold B. Andrews and Francis B. Condon, Dr. Mueller and Joseph H. Coen, Exalted Ruler of Providence Lodge of Elks.

Both Mr. Condon and Mr. Andrews told of the work of pushing the bill through the legislature, the latter having really been the father of the bill, and Governor Flynn told of his pleasure in signing it and expressed the hope that uniform legislation on small loans would soon become effective throughout the country.

Mayor Gainer told of how he had looked into the matter to a great extent and had come to the conclusion that the act was a good one. The Association was doing good work in coming to the assistance of necessitous borrowers as out of the one hundred million people in the country only about five million had recourse to banks. The Association being at the service of the remaining ninety-five million could do mighty fine work if it carried out the intent of the law.

Dr. Mueller told of the early history of banking, the first bank having been established in Venice about 1300 and even went back further than that by referring to Biblical times when loans were made and cared for. Coming down to the first United States bank in Philadelphia in 1780, he traced the work to the present day. He told of the advantage the loan associations had for the poorer classes and said that they were of more value to that class than the banks. He urged a close following of the precepts of the law, as in no other way can the business be successful and keep the respect of the public.

The business session was presided over by Mr. Rich in absence of the regular Chairman. Those present were F. H. Lovegrove, Mutual Finance Service Company, Providence; S. S. Moran, Mutual Finance Service Company; J. H. Wickstrom, Peoples Finance Service Company, Providence; F. N. Kennon, Peoples Finance Service Company, Pawtucket; H. G. Neal, Chester-Neal Company, Providence; A. L. Wick, Philadelphia; G. W. Delaney, Citizens Finance Service Company, Providence; H. Smith, Citizens Finance Service Company, Providence; F. A. Pomfret, National Loan Company, Pawtucket; G. E. Rich, Mutual Loan Association, Pawtucket, and J. S. Dwight, Providence.

On motion made by Mr. Wickstrom, seconded by Mr. Kennon, the cost of the banquet was approved of and ordered paid.

The treasurer's report was read and it was moved and seconded that it be accepted as read. The treasurer reported cash on hand $187.35.

On motion by Mr. Neal, seconded by Mr. Moran, it was decided to adopt a constitution and by-laws as outlined by the committee of three appointed to draft it.

On motion of Mr. Lovegrove, seconded by Mr. Pomfret, the dues per year will be $20.00 instead of $15.00. The dues are to be paid $10.00 semi-annually in advance.

An executive committee was elected by the members as follows: J. H. Wickstrom, Chairman; W. G. Wood, G. E. Rich, H. G. Neal, F. N. Kennon, F. A. Pomfret, H. T. Chase, S. S. Moran and G. F. Lewis.

During the past seven years, or since the Rhode Island Association was formed, there has never been appointed a regular executive committee and the members just appointed are all live wires whose interest in the association is such that there will be no question but that progress will be made in leaps and bounds in every department.

At a meeting of the executive committee the following officers for the ensuing year were elected; G. E. Rich, Chairman; W. G. Wood, Vice Chairman; J. H. Wickstrom, Secretary; H. Neal, Treasurer; G. F. Lewis, Chairman Legislative Committee; F. N. Kennon, Chairman Entertainment Committee; F. A. Pomfret, Chairman Membership Committee; S. S. Moran, Chairman Publicity Committee.

A list of the licensed lenders in Rhode Island will be sent to the Chairman of the Membership Committee by the secretary and from the reports we hear of Mr. Pomfret, the membership will take a decided rise in members during the next seven months.

Mr. Wick was appointed to attend to the printing of 500 letterheads and envelopes suitable for the needs of the association. Also 100 copies of Constitution and By-Laws.

On motion by Mr. Wick, properly seconded, a vote of thanks was given the Entertainment Committee for the splendid and efficient manner in which the banquet, the first of the Association, was managed.

A vote of thanks was given Mr. Watts, Dr. Mueller and Mr. Wick for contributing to the splendid success of the banquet.

A motion was made by Mr. Kennon that a vote of thanks be sent to the officials of the State of Rhode Island, who so willingly and keenly spoke of the advantages of such legislation as was recently enacted and which should become effective the country over.

J. H. Wickstrom, Secretary.

CONDUCTING A SMALL LOAN OFFICE FOR SERVICE.

By J. W. Batezel,

Manager, Household Finance Service Co., Philadelphia.

Service is a means of developing the good-will of a prospective customer and is necessary to retain the good will of an old one. To the applicant then, is our first opportunity to demonstrate the quality of our service.

The atmosphere of the office should be friendly, for a friendly and capable attitude will attract customers more quickly and effectively than any other asset we possess.

The applicant, upon entering the office and making known his desire for information concerning a loan, should immediately be invited to a seat in one of our deal rooms, where he will feel at ease and free to discuss his reasons for borrowing. The service rendered at this time is where the future customer gets his first and lasting impression of us, and has much to do with the making of a mutually satisfactory account. It is important that the rates and monthly payments be explained thoroughly, assuring the applicant that the account may be settled when convenient.

After securing the application, it is next passed on to the outside representative, whose important duty is to look it up and secure the list and other information in a courteous and efficient manner. The representative must be well trained in his work and have a thorough knowledge of the time and money spent in securing the application. Very often his salesmanship will be taxed in selling our service, and he must be able to so conduct himself as to warrant no hesitation on the applicant's part in calling for the money.

The manager is next to receive the application, and in passing judgment on it must keep before him the good, if any, the loan requested will do the applicant. It cannot be termed a service to make a loan to one who has no ability to apply the accommodation properly and who, in a very short time, will again be in the same fix with the loan added to his troubles. It is possible to force people into the undesirable class by laxness in extending credit, and permitting its abuse by granting unreasonable extensions and overloading them.

After the loan is made, however, we turn our thoughts of service to our customers and their future patronage and the possibility of their recommending their friends to us. Their friendship and respect is necessary in getting new business from this source and important in retaining it. A friendly nod and pleasant remark to those making payments at the office and efficient handling of all mail payments and promptness in returning the properly receipted payment book to the sender, does much to inspire confidence and good will.

Our service is also put to a severe test when an account becomes delinquent. Many times a delinquent payment is due to a misunderstanding and can easily be adjusted by a few well-directed remarks about the promptness with which customers settled prior accounts, or their ability to manage their affairs well, under proper conditions, etc. There are some, who when delinquent, ignore all letters and the quality of our service in such cases may be the means of saving the account. The outside representative again is an important factor, for he must have a certain knowledge of human nature and must be able to discover the real cause for the customer's inability to pay promptly.

We must keep in mind that the loan is made with a desire to render service, and the collection of the account should be handled in the same helpful spirit. Little is gained by the use of antagonistic and threatening methods in collecting slow accounts. To be hasty in recording a note or in resorting to legal methods of collection, shows a lack of confidence in our ability to render a service to our customer when it is most needed. This practice only adds to your customer's troubles and does much to take away the good-will and confidence you may have established by any prior service. When legal procedure is necessary, however, proper methods should then be employed to bring about the desired settlement, but only when commonsense and reasonable methods fail.

AN ADDRESS.

By A. B. Madison,

Chairman of Georgia Industrial Lenders' Association—Delivered Before the Associated Retail Credit Men of Atlanta, Georgia, on Thursday, April 24, 1924.

Mr. Chairman and Gentlemen of the Associated Retail Credit Men of Atlanta.

As Chairman of the Georgia Industrial Lenders' Association, I wish to thank you for the opportunity afforded us in presenting to you for your consideration the question of "What is the relation of industrial loan companies to credit managers in passing on credits?"

It might be well at the outset to tell you that we are not appearing before you in justification of our business—as that has already been justified in the minds of well-thinking men in some twenty-odd States of the Union, but to clarify the subject of "What Is An Industrial Loan Company and Its Value to the Community?"

You have all heard of the station agent's dilemma, when he quoted "Pigs is pigs"; and to a great many well intentioned but misinformed representative citizens, "Loan companies." Mr. Bennett, our State Superintendent of Banks—under whose supervision all legitimate loan companies operate, says that there are at least 250 loan agencies in Georgia, and that only some fifteen or sixteen have qualified. This means that there are over 200 illegitimate lenders in the fair State of Georgia. The companies who did qualify organized an Association known as "The Georgia Industrial Lenders' Association," which is affiliated with and an auxiliary to the American Industrial Lenders' Association of the United States of America, which represents capital of $150,000,000.00 invested in the making of industrial loans at legal rates of interest in these twenty-odd States. Companies who are members of this State Association of ours have pledged themselves to the upkeeping and dignifying of the loan business. They are licensed by the State, bonded to the State, inspected and examined regularly, the same as all State Banks are inspected and examined.

Reasons for Borrowing Money.

If you stand on a street corner and watch 100 men walk by, fourteen of them will have bankable credit, and eighty-six of them have no banking connection. These figures are from statistics gathered by our Government agencies. In the case of business depression, adversity, misfortune, or whatnot, these fourteen can step into their banks and get accommodations that will tide them over—carry them on, so to speak,—and relieve them of embarrassment, bankruptcy, or dire calamity. Are you going to say to the other eighty-six, "You do without—you suffer—you fail in business—you go to the bow-wows?" No,—not as long as there is $150,000,000.00 invested in the business in twenty-odd states of the Union! The Industrial Lenders step in and bridge this gap where the bank leaves off, and carries these people over the same as the banks carry the fourteen over. It is not the downtrodden, the derelict, the rascal who form the clientele of the Industrial Lender, but the average, ordinary citizen, with pride in his bosom, self-respect in his makeup, and manhood of the highest type as his goal.

Perhaps you would like to know for what reasons it is necessary that these people borrow? Well, the answer is simple, sensible and logical. In most cases it is to pay debts and to keep their credit good with you, and you, and you. A table made from fifty-two recent applications in my office shows that my customers borrowed money for the following reasons:

To pay doctor bills, ...	13
To pay furniture and piano balances,	6
To pay store accounts, ...	10
To pay life insurance, ...	2
To pay taxes, ...	1
To pay first payment on home, ...	4
To pay high-rate salary loans, ...	2
To put in business, ...	5
To buy automobile, ...	2
To pay rent, ...	4
To visit the sick, ...	1
To buy a lot, ...	1
To buy clothes, ...	1

Truly, gentlemen, after listening to these figures and carefully analyzing this statement, you will be able to answer the question, "Why the necessity for industrial loan companies?" One of the main things an up-to-date loan company finds out before granting a loan is the purpose for which the loan is desired. If it is a meritorious and necessitous, the loan is granted; and if not, the loan is declined. No loans are made by industrial lenders "simply to make a loan." All good loan managers advise with and counsel their clients in the best way to pay out.

Credit Risk.

And now we come to the topic, "Credit Risk." My main reason for appearing before you this evening is to throw some light on what constitutes a good credit risk from your standpoint of view, especially in the applicant's relation to his dealings with loan companies. I take a special interest in this duty, because it has come to my attention that some credit managers have declined credit simply because the applicant was reported to you by the Credit Service Exchange as "dealing with a loan company." I do not know that this is so; but if it is so, I honestly believe that after having scanned the table furnished you above, of the reasons for borrowing, you will have to admit that you are sizing up your applicant wrong. The thing that put the "risk" in "credit risk" is not the loan companies, but "over-loading"—which is nothing more than the indiscriminate granting of credit without due regard to the applicant's income and outgo. The main thing to look to is, how much a man owes, and not to whom he owes it. I would decline an applicant just as quickly who owed several department stores, out of all reason to his income, as I would one who owed several loan companies. In fact, I have made loans simply to pay a man out with several high-rate companies, and whose monthly payments to us for twelve months (at which time he would be paid out in full) were less than the interest payments, only to the high-rate companies, and at the end of twelve months they would still owe the original principal. People do not come to us to borrow money to put into banks or hide in their old stockings, but to put it into circulation in the community in which they live, and to pay off bills and to keep their credit standing good and be able to hold their heads up and look their creditors square in the face. It worries the laboring man, or the clerk, or the small merchant just as much if he cannot meet his obligations, as it does the big merchant, corporation or individual. "Necessity is the mother of invention" and necessity truly created the industrial loan companies. If you gentlemen could hear the expressions of true, genuine gratefulness and appreciation from thousands of our satisfied customers, you would marvel at the apparent amount of good the industrial lender does for his clients and the community at large. When a man has paid up his bills in full, if he has any complaint to make, that is the time he will (vent his spleen) and tell you about it. I don't suppose there is one out of every hundred who pays up an industrial lender who will express dissatisfaction with his dealings, and a great many are profuse in their expressions of gratitude.

You never hear of the good the loan company does, but you do hear of the harm the high-rate salary loans cause in some instances. There are merchants and merchants—some with a reputation and some without. There are loan companies and loan companies, but there is a vast difference between the Industrial Lender who aims to help people out, and the high-rate salary purchaser who figures on keeping a person "in." Therefore, Mr. Credit Manager, it behooves you—if you are going to pass on credit fairly and impartially to discriminate closely between a high-rate salary buyer and an industrial lender.

Our object in appearing before you is to try and devise some system whereby, in getting reports from the Credit Exchange, you will be told that the applicant is dealing with an industrial lender, instead of saying merely, "A loan company" reports "so and so" which has been misleading to a great many of you. We welcome suggestions and criticisms. We are willing to coöperate in every way with the Credit Service Exchange, but you cannot expect us to cheerfully furnish you with the names of good customers, if this will place a black mark against their credit rating.

Mrs. Russell Sage wisely foresaw the possibility and necessity for the industrial loan companies, when she created her $6,000,000.00 foundation fund; and one of the main things that the trustees of this foundation were to do was to bring about the passage in all States of the Union of what is generally known as "The Russell Sage Uniform Small Loan Law."

And in conclusion, to show you that the Retail Credit Association in other States is giving the Industrial Loan business more than a casual thought, I wish to read to you a communication printed in the April number of The Industrial Lenders News which communication is as follows:

"St. Louis, Missouri,
"March 19, 1924.

"Dear Mr. Kehr:

"I was very much interested in the copy of the Industrial Lenders News which you sent to me. The Industrial Banking for sometime has been quite a hobby of mine. In fact, I hope some day to get up a system whereby we can close out slow accounts, and operate it under the auspices of the Retail Credit Men's National Association.

"It has been my personal experience that where credit men use industrial banks, such as the Morris Plan, and other systems—they are greatly benefited; and I am sure that our membership as a whole understand the matter fully, because it has been discussed at our National Convention. I do feel, however, that they are not making the most of the situation, and I would be very glad to have any thought you have along these lines, so as to encourage industrial banking. Any time you have something we could publish in The Credit World we will be pleased to receive it.

"Yours very truly,
"D. J. Woodlock, Sec. & Treas.,

INFORMATION SERVICE.

By H. F. Woods.

Philadelphia, May.—In a plea for the relief of the "industrial credit famine" which he said is prevalent over a large area of the country, Charles G. Mueller, National Chairman of the American Industrial Lenders Association, to-day made public figures bearing on the small loan business. This "credit famine," Mr. Mueller said, is of vital concern not only to the great mass of the population who are the direct sufferers, but also to the producing and merchandising interests whose consuming public are impaired in their buying power by lack of an adequate financing system.

Citing statistics to show that no more than eight per cent of our population have checking accounts at banks, and that approximately less than five per cent of those with checking accounts have collateral enabling them to borrow at banks, Mr. Mueller said that the only recourse open to this large percentage in their credit needs is to industrial lenders, of whom there are two classes, the outlaw lender whose interest rates are exorbitant, and the licensed broker who lends on non-fluid security or no security at all at interest rates fixed by law.

Because the number of licensed lenders is necessarily limited to those states where lending is regulated, he stated, the only possible relief for the "credit famine" lies in an extension of adequate legislation for the regulation of industrial lending, as the capital of reputable men will be attracted to those communities where the business is not regulated.

The importance of an adequate fiscal system for supplying this credit, said the statement, could be better appreciated by an understanding of the small loan business, its special province, and the clientele it serves. A small loan, in the meaning of the law, is one not in excess of $300 to any one borrower, the legal interest rate for which is higher than the interest rate on a bank loan. The function of the small loan broker is to finance those who do not possess the collateral which will enable them to borrow from banks, and this financing is done from the capital of the lender, not from the funds of depositors as in the case of banks. The small loan clientele is made up of wage earners, small salaried workers and persons of limited incomes.

Money lending is regulated by law in twenty-two states, in which lenders are licensed and the maximum interest rates which they may charge for loans are fixed. These states are: Arizona, California, Colorado, Connecticut, Georgia, Illinois, Indiana, Iowa, Maine, Maryland, Massachusetts, Michigan, Nebraska, New Hampshire, New Jersey, New York, Ohio, Oregon, Pennsylvania, Rhode Island, Utah and Virginia. The combined populations of these states in 1923 was estimated at about 62,000,000, being a little more than half the estimated population of 112,000,000 of the entire country.

In these twenty-two states the credit needs of the small loan clientele are served by some 600 licensed lenders, whose combined capital approximates $100,000,000. and whose annual loans approximated $150,000,000, the average loan being about $75. The number of potential borrowers may be estimated at 20,000,000, of whom there are probably about 4,000,000 actual borrowers.

This estimate is based on an adult population in these states of about 41,000,000, of whom about thirty-seven per cent are receiving annual incomes, about eighty-six per cent of whom are receiving incomes not to exceed $2 000 annually. Of course the capital invested in the small loan business even in states where lending is regulated is inadequate to serve the needs of the whole number of potential borrowers. and as the total annual loans in regulated territory approximates $150,000 000 in average amounts of $75, it will be seen that the average number of borrowers served totals 2,000,000. Allowing for loans under the average, the total number of borrowers may be estimated at 4,000,000.

Mr. Mueller used the report of a typical month's business of a large lending concern to indicate the class of persons constituting the body of necessitous borrowers and the principal causes of their necessities. From this it was shown that of 2,444 borrowers the classification was: Civil servants (Federal, state and city). 867; commercial (clerks, secretaries and stenographers, bookkeepers and accountants, salesmen, agents, managers, proprietors and partners), 912; wage earners (printing trades. factory workers. tailors, machinists, inspectors, foremen artisans, telegraph operators, and conductors), 380; professions (teachers, doctors and dentists and writers), 48; miscellaneous, 237.

While the impelling causes for seeking small loans are legion. Mr. Mueller's statement points out that the principal causes may be grouped under these five heads: sickness, deaths, to buy a home or to meet interest or principal on mortgages, to advance the situation of borrower's family, and for use in business.

WHO IS AN INDUSTRIAL LENDER?

In Georgia there are twelve business organizations that lend money. For three years they have been banded together with the ambition and desire to uplift and dignify the loan business. This organization is known as the Georgia Industrial Lenders Association.

That you may know this is number two of a series of messages that will establish the loan business in the minds of the people as a necessary cog in modern business.

A pledge of service to the people of Georgia. Each member of this Association pledges himself to use every honorable means to induce all persons or companies engaged in the lending of money on chattels, endorsement or salaries as security in Georgia to observe the rate, terms and methods as fixed by State statutes, and to protect all deserving people against the payment of interest higher than that provided for by the law.

Remember the present day loan company is a business organization, rendering an indispensable service and getting a fair return for its efforts. The Georgia industrial lender is nothing more or less than a banker who makes small loans as a business proposition.

A mark of distinction: A friendly help to honest folk.

COMMUNICATIONS.

March 26, 1924.

We came upon a situation in this county that perhaps will be of interest to many of our Association members.

The Credit Rating Bureau which is affiliated with the State and National organizations, started taking a list of all people having a chattel mortgage of record and sending this to all subscribers. The idea being to restrict and deny credit to such people. We immediately took the matter up with the Credit Rating Bureau and some of its prominent members and stopped the circulation of this list as well as showing them definitely why a man should not be denied credit for the reasons that he had a chattel. We went into detail, showing them when a man passed an examination such as entitled him to credit with a chattel company that a thorough investigation had been made, and further we were assured of his ability to pay, using the line of talk with which you would of course be familiar.

You can readily realize such a stand on the part of merchants of any community, especially in the smaller towns of the state, would practically amount to a boycott on our business. I know that locally this is not prompted on the part of any one desiring to cause us any trouble, as we have eliminated it here, but believe it would be something worthy of attention on the part of our Association, both State and National, as its effects could be very widespread.

ON THE DEVELOPMENT OF THE TERMS "BANKER" AND "BANK."

The term "banker" originally meant a money-changer; then it came to mean one who dealt in bills of exchange, giving drafts and making remittances. Not until 1670 do we find any indication of the word banker in the sense of a proprietor of a corporation organized to do banking. In the first Anglo-Spanish dictionary (Percival's), published in 1591, the Spanish word "Banquero" is rendered "a banker, an exchanger of money." In 1624—just three hundred years ago—the English dramatist, Heywood, in one of his plays speaks of "one Phillipus, a bancker," or one that dealt in the exchange of money. In Beaumont and Fletcher's play, "Pilgrimage," written in 1618, occurs the phrase: "Rogues and beggars have got the trick now to become banckmasters." In 1622 we find in an English law book, Malynes' "Ancient Law Merchant," the following definition of a bank: "A banke is properly a collection of all the readie money of some kingdome, into the hands of some persons licensed thereunto by publicke authoritie."

An act passed in 1670 uses the following language: "Whereas, several persons, goldsmiths and others, by taking or borrowing great sums of money, and lending out the same again, for extraordinary hire and profit, have gained and acquired to themselves the reputation and name of bankers." Dean Swift, writing on the state of Ireland in 1727, refers to "the daily increase of bankers, who may be a necessary evil in a trading country, but so ruinous in ours."

TENTH ANNUAL CONVENTION

We, of Maryland, are deeply grateful in having the honor of serving our fellow lenders at Convention time.

Our Tenth Annual Convention is being held in the ideal Convention City of our country and a garden spot of the world.

Wednesday, September 24th, you will arrive in Baltimore and be piloted to the beautiful Southern Hotel, where you will be amazed at the beatuy of your surroundings, and where you will register amid friends and the comforts of home.

A call to order by our National Chairman. Soon will come luncheon as the guests of the Maryland Industrial Lenders Association, and an address by A. S. Goldsborough, the genial Secretary of the Baltimore Association of Commerce, who knows business and does things in a business way. Luncheon served, we will return to the saddest part of our Convention, WORK, and will carry on with it until the end of the day which will bring rest or amusement as you prefer.

Thursday brings work again with entertainment and sight seeing for the ladies. No Convention would be worth while if ladies were not in attendance. We are reminded of the colored boy, who, during the World War, wishing to do his bit, decided to join the army. Finding his way to a recruiting station he asked to see the boss, and upon being told that there were no bosses in the army, but that a Lieutenant was in charge he asked if he could see HER, and being advised there were no HERS in the army he said; "This nigger would not join anything where there were no women."

The evening brings our Annual Banquet and dance with the real get-to-gether and enjoyable time of any convention where you will listen to such a notable speaker as our Governor, who at this very moment is fighting the fight of ballots for the highest honor that our country can bestow. We with our whole hearts know that all the world would be benefited with Honorable Albert C. Ritchie. A better President could no state produce.

Friday, a day of work and recreation. We will go sailing down the Chesapeake Bay in Convention on one of the palatial steamers of the Old Bay Line, known far and wide for their southern hospitality and comfort. We will sail on down the Balitmore harbor past beautiful Federal Hill, Fort Howard, and many Industrial plants of our City, out to the Old Chesapeake Bay, past the Bethlehem Steel works and on to historic old Annapolis, where we will linger awhile and visit the Naval Academy where our brave Admirals receive their training. Yes, our fighting men must be trained just as a good Industrial Lender spends many years in training.

With all this our convention will be in session, with luncheon and dinner served us aboard ship, for we will not return until after the sun has long gone to bed and we hope you will have enjoyed a perfect day.

Saturday brings parting of old and new made friends until another year, and we will know that a truer friendship has been cemented in the good of our common cause.

H. T. MATTINGLY,
Chairman Maryland Industrial Lenders Association.

INDIANA

The Ninth Annual Convention of the Indiana Industrial Lenders Association was held at the Lincoln Hotel, Indianapolis, Indiana, May 21 and 22, 1924. Luncheon was served to eighty-seven members and guests.

The first meeting was called to order by the President of the Association, Fred Davies, of Kokomo, Indiana, Wednesday afternoon, May 21, at 2:00 P. M.

MR. DITHMER: Mr. President and Gentlemen:

We are always glad to have gentlemen like you visit Indianapolis. After all, it is a very appropriate thing that Indiana men should visit Indianapolis. It is your town, just as much as it is ours; it just seems to be a little more ours because we live here. But after all, your offices are Indiana offices and we like to feel that every town in Indiana has an interest in Indianapolis.

These conventions are a big help to the industry. I take it that, in a way, your business is a new industry. I think we can all remember the time when money was not the main medium of exchange. They did not need as much money in the times when a Company was first opened as they do now; in fact, forty or fifty years ago, you will remember that the farmers took the hides and the trappers their pelts and they were a medium of exchange. You cannot do that way now. Money is the medium of exchange or its equivalent in checks. There are a great many people who cannot readily get that medium of exchange. The business man has access to the bank and all large industries transact business through the bank but, after all, the large majority of people are not able to get credit at the bank and have to use some sort of means, different from the business man to get their credit. So this business is essential. I presume, when you first started, there were a lot of abuses that crept into it and those who intended to make a business out of it found a need of getting together and having meetings and setting out certain rules of business. Of course, we are all ruled in business by the law but the man who gives thought to his business and his best ideas, is really an important man in his particular line of business.

I have no doubt at all that you have men in your line who say that they have no need of going into conventions; but I have always noticed that some way or other that fellow is not a help to the business, but rather a detriment. I presume that you men have the same sort of trouble but it seems to me that the convention man is the man who does the real work, who builds up the business. The difference in your line of business, as I see it now, and what it was some years ago, is tremendous. I know there used to be a great deal of criticism in regard to it.

Years ago, when the business was first started, I have no doubt there were a lot of abuses, as in every business, but it is you men, in conventions, who clear those things up and make your business worth while.

A convention is considered a little differently to-day than it was before the War. Before the War, conventions were just tolerated; but when the War came on, the Government recognized the fact that men should get together and the businesses and trade organizations that were of the most value to the Government during the War were the ones which had been organized and were able to give information and the Government insisted that those businesses which were not organized, should be. So the War, in one respect, has been a help to business men as it has shown people the need of organizing in their several lines.

I did not come up to talk about conventions. I came to welcome you to Indianapolis. I trust that this is an annual affair and that you will never consider any city except Indianapolis, in which to meet; but if you do meet elsewhere, be sure it is some place in Indiana.

The Chamber of Commerce feels honored in having you with us to-day—that you have chosen this as your meeting place.

A telegram from Baltimore was then read by the Secretary.

"R. F. Hartz, Hotel Lincoln, Indianapolis:

"The opportunity to learn and know more about our business, the opportunity to help in its future welfare, the opportunity for real service to borrower, to employee and to employer, all three of which are vitally interested and you cannot serve either of them efficiently by being absent, the opportunity to meet new friends and old friends to talk over old

The Chairman announced the first question — "Handling foreign accounts, customary charges, what charge made for handling accounts charged off books," would be taken up at this time.

MR. HARTZ: This question was put on the program due to a misunderstanding of some members in other states, and of some members in this state, sending accounts over into other states and not being affiliated with both state and national organizations. There should be some standard form of handling foreign accounts. As I understand it, there is no charge made by any company where the companies are members of both state and national associations. If you belong to the Indiana Association, you are only entitled to collections in Indiana; but if you belong to the National Association, you can obtain service without cost through any members of the National Association.

MR. HARBISON: This subject came up several weeks ago in the case of a company which has several branch offices. My information is that only one or two of these offices are members of your State Association and the company has only one membership in the National Association. He formerly had membership in both the State and National body and then added these new memberships. He sent an account to one of our Chicago offices for collection and when remittance was made, the Manager charged him a commission and he objected to it as he thought he was entitled to service free. We found that he was a member of both the State and National Associations and were glad to render that service free; but we also thought it wrong to give a man service free simply because he had one membership and several offices, or to give a member in this state service, if he did not have a National Association membership.

It happened, in this particular case that the dues paid by this member would be a sum of several dollars and this collection was a substantial amount, so the fee he would ordinarily pay for a collection would be much more than his dues to the Association and it seemed to us a good time to bring this question up for discussion and to definitely decide on how matters of that kind should be handled; because, if we are going to work together, we ought to make those who get the benefit help pay the cost of carrying on this Association work.

It is my opinion, before a member is entitled to service out of his state, he should be a member in good standing. I think every member should have a membership in the Association for every office he operates. I understand here you must have a license for every County in which you do business, whereas, in other states you can do business quite a distance from your office without additional license. I think every office should have a membership, even though the total amount paid for that membership is not more than in some states where he has one license and operates all over the state.

MR. HARBISON: Every office we have holds a State membership and also a membership in the National Association. Each separate office has a separate membership; in other words, we believe that if a place is big enough to run as a separate place of business, it should pay dues and not take free rides.

MR. STRATTON: In order to bring this thing to a definite conclusion, I think the statements made cover the subject and that we should accept the collections for our Association members, without fees, and leave it up to the individual companies whether they accept collections for non-members or not.

It was moved by Mr. Stratton that it be the policy of this State Association that we accept collections for our Association members without fees and leave it up to the individual companies whether they accept collections for non-members or not.

Motion seconded and carried.

Doctor Harry G. Hill was then introduced to the meeting by Mr. Hartz. He selected as his subject: "Commercial Importance of Applied Psychology."

DR. HILL: Mr. President, and Members of the Association:

I am not very well acquainted with your work, although I suspect that the next loan I secure will be with some of you; and perhaps very few of you are very well acquainted with my work. I am assuming, at least, that most of you know very little about Psychology.

Perhaps what you know about that subject dates back to the time when you were in school or college or a university —when it was the driest subject you had. That is what we call the "Academic Phase of Psychology." In the last twenty-five years, however, it has entered a new phase of applied science.

In a broad sense, we might say that Psychology is the Science of Mind. The greatest impetus was given to Psychology during the War. We were willing to grasp at anything that would make us more efficient and so every Psychologist, that could be secured, we put in the Personnel Service. That was the first time that any real commercial recognition had been given to the Science of Mind and I feel yet that we who are in the business of Applied Psychology are rather lonesome. I am one of the very few who are practicing this as a profession in my state—not only for myself but at large. In many cases, we are beginning to look at Psychology as one of the most practical things we can enter into our work. When I started out, more than twenty-five years ago, I found it took a lot of courage on my part because so many of my friends misunderstood me. Some asked me: "Is there anything to do along the line of Psychology?" "Can you make a living out of it?"

Just a few weeks after I opened up my office, a lady across the hall came in to see if I could tell her sister's fortune. Another time, a woman called up and said: "Can you tell me where to find my diamond ring that I lost?" and I replied, "Yes, if you tell me where you lost it."

The other day I was waiting for a street car at Pennsylvania and Washington Streets and an unusually fat man with a plaid suit kept edging up to me and finally said: "Live here?" "Yes", I replied. "I don't," was the response and I don't know which was the proudest. I made no further remarks and he finally said, "What is your business?" I told him that I was a Consulting Psychologist and the answer was: "I guess that's a nice business for them that like it." He made no further comments but I could see him watching me until his car came.

I have found that there are a great many people who have the wrong notions about this line and so I am glad to get before a crowd of men, some of whom know very little about Psychology, and tell them a little about it. I am getting an opportunity to tell about this in quite a few different places.

There are many phases of Applied Psychology. At least 80% of the diseases that exist originate in the mind. I am in very good standing with the Physicians of this city and state and am often called in consultation with them. I have had my work in medicine—and so I am not peculiar at all, but all of this goes back to the fact that surgery and medicine or any other method depends upon this fundamentally—that unless Nature has her recuperative power, there is no healing of disease. And so, when the good old-fashioned country Doctor came, the patient was feeling better by the time he got here. He would say: "I did feel pretty bad Doc, but I feel better now." The Doctor would give his patient Peppermint water and bread pills and, in doing that, he was playing upon a part of Psychology, which was thoroughly scientific and thoroughly legitimate.

The Chiropractor and Osteopath or those who give you medicine to-day depend upon the fact that there is something innate in the cells of our tissues, which, given proper opportunity, will restore us to health.

In the Mind there are two great Departments. A large part of our Mind is unconscious. Every time you sit down to a banquet, you say to the stomach: "Digest this." You eat three square meals a day, 365 days per year—never two exactly the same in quantity or quality. There is a mind in the liver that tells it to go ahead and do the work in the right way and, unless you happen to be one of those mean thinking kind of fellows, who has a bad temper, and then indigestion, you are all right.

The way we think is the way we become. All of the functions of the body are carried on in the same way that the liver carries on this work. You cannot control the heart. Your breathing goes on automatically. There is mentality in every cell and fibre of the body.

The Brain is the organ that the Mind uses. The Brain is the entire nervous system. There is not a cell in our bodies that does not have Mind in it. So, using that, we are able, in modern science, to give the Mind mental medicine and find that the Mind acts in a wonderful way.

We may apply Psychology in many other ways. You may be more interested in the practical use of it at this convention. We have Psychology of salesmanship, advertising, etc., but I know that you men, being closely allied with the business life of your community, want to know how this Science which may seem to you to be a rather abstract Science, can be applied to your business.

I want to give an instance or two to show how it can be applied. As a Consulting Psychologist, I am not only employed by those who come to me for a solution of their personal problems, but am employed by Organizations, Corporations, Manufacturing and Commercial concerns that feel that the human element is the largest factor in all of our commercial life.

It is said of the man who was told by Roosevelt to dig the Panama Canal that he replied: "If we can solve the Human Elements, the Canal will dig itself."

We have not been thinking enough of the personal or human element, which really is the largest factor, after all. We have been accustomed, of course, to look outside, before looking within. Countless thousands have been paid to find the North and South Poles. Not long ago, several million dollars were spent in digging a well, twelve miles deep, to find the temperature that distance down. We have telescopes to see what our heavenly neighbors may be. We have been looking on the outside all the time—and it has been left for the last day in science for us to look within—to turn the telescope, the investigating agency, upon the man himself, to determine his powers, and have found that the innate powers of man are the most tremendous of all.

The mystery of the "I am," which the poet said "never dies" is the most miraculous field in the world and, in investigating it, we find the value of "X" to solve all of our problems.

In industry, we have been interested in machinery, but the most important field is that of the men working in it. We thought labor was cheap because man did not count; but within the last ten or fifteen years, we have found that the real profit lies in the individuals, in humanity, which is the great factor in that business.

It is estimated that nine million men in America change their vocations each year. It has also been estimated that it costs $100 every time a man changes his job. I think that is a very conservative estimate myself. There is a great loss of time when a man is adjusting himself to a new position. If there are that many changing around and it costs that much, we are spending about one Billion Dollars annually in this country of ours, in allowing men to float from one job to another, and as long as they keep increasing taxes, it behooves us to watch the mere matter of One Billion Dollars.

Not long ago, we made an investigation of "Who's Who in America?" That contained 25,000 men and women who are supposed to stand at the top of our Society. Sixteen per cent of them have changed their jobs in life from one to five times. If the most successful people have done that, what must be the tremendous loss of those who keep floating around? Vocational guidance is the place where we can help solve that problem better than any other place, in any other field. Of course, we could not entirely eliminate that, nor keep him there after we found him, but very largely we could correct that situation.

I was called into consultation not long ago with a four million dollar concern in this state, employing many men and women, and out of every one hundred people that they have employed one year ago, 84% were not with them at the present time. In investigating that, in order to save their potential loss, I found that they had in that shop six or seven kinds of work, requiring different degrees of talents, and instead of having them say: "We need so many more" and taking those that looked good to those at the employment window, we made an analysis of the jobs to find out what particular kinds of talents were needed.

For instance, at Lillys, we take girls with musician's hands to handle capsules.

In another foundry, where they handle cartridges to go into machine guns, sight, sense of balance and rythm entered into the work and we choose people for that work according to their particular talents in handling that particular kind of work.

I use those as illustrations. In this large concern, with which I was engaged, we made an analysis of these various types. Then the Employment Department prepared a Chart, by which they were able to examine those who came for employment, and put them into the department for which they seemed most suited. By doing that, we were able to cut down the number of those who changed their jobs and were able to give them two chances. The longer they kept each employee, the better for the firm and the better for the employee.

One of the most pathetic things, outside of a sick man, is a man who has not found himself in the right place.

Any firm should be most careful whom they place at the window where people apply for jobs, as, in many ways, this is a place of greatest responsibility, next to that of the manager himself.

I find a great many men coming to consult me because they want an analysis of some kind. I imagine that one of the phases of your work is to take a moral risk—to make loans on which Character is the best collateral that the borrower can possibly furnish. Barring death and disease, I take it that character is the best collateral that anybody can furnish. If a man loses his job, I think it comes close to your business, for a man out of a job is a man who has poor collateral to furnish you. I imagine that many losses could be attributed to that one thing. That phase is a most pathetic one to me because I find so many who come to me, from nineteen to fifty-nine, who have not found themselves—and rarely know what they want to do. Some of them are college graduates.

I had one young man the other day who knew exactly what he wanted to do. He had undergone five major surgical operations, had one glass eye, and stammered. He knew what he wanted to do but didn't know how to get to it. He said: "I have been cut up and cut open so many times that I think the only way I can get back at them is to be a surgeon myself." His health had been so poor that he was not through college. I went to the principal of the high school, found out what his credits were, secured a tutor for him, in order to make up his credits, and made plans for him to enter medical college. He said: "If I can't do this, I don't want to do anything else in the world." Surely, if a man wants to do a legitimate thing, he should be encouraged. If any of you have boys searching around for something to do, encourage them. Nine times out of ten, the man who feels that he wants to do a certain thing, will do that thing and do it well.

An old man in poor health came to me not long ago. He had succeeded fairly well in business, as far as money was concerned, but he was very unhappy. He used musical terms frequently in the course of his conversation. I learned that, when he was a boy, he wanted to be a musician and his father kept him from it. I encouraged him to take things leisurely and to take some music lessons. Inside of a few months, he was a skilled organist, making up the time that he had lost through his youth and manhood. He was happy and his health was restored.

A man thirty-eight years of age came to me who was unsuccessful. He had salesmanship ability but I found also that he could not sell tangible things; he could only sell things that were intangible—some kind of propaganda or some big idea. Sol Schloss, who was elected National President of the Retail Clothiers took him to New York and made him secretary and he is absolutely happy and making good. If a man has talents, who can use them for several different things, the proper placing of them is worth while.

A young man twenty years of age had run away from home when a boy because he liked to travel. When I met him he was selling neckties. He said he had been at sword points with his folks but he wanted to get along. I said: "We will find you something where you can travel, drive a car and sell things." That was what he wanted. Not long after that I ran across a fellow who wanted a man to drive a car and the boy is learning to sell and he is making good. It was a great pleasure to be able to place that boy in the right position.

I have taken up my time, Mr. Chairman, and perhaps have not covered the subject as I should. I have just tried to give you a little glimpse of the work that could be done along this line, for individuals and concerns. When you read your trade journals, you will realize that, more and more, from this day on, applied psychology is needed in the vital business of our life and, as the greatest commercial asset lies in man. Psychology, as I see it, is of tremendous importance to the commercial life, of our country and the countries of the world.

There is an international phase of it but I know how pressed you are for time and also realize that any man who is a specialist in a subject is apt to think that everyone else is as interested in his subject as he himself is. However, I hope you will give it consideration as you meet with it in various other ways in the future.

Mr. William F. Bolles, Credit Manager, Holcomb and Hoke Manufacturing Company, the next speaker, addressed the meeting on the subject: "Business and Collection Correspondence."

Climb into the Envelope and Get Out Among Them

Mr. Chairman and Gentlemen:

We might start this consideration of the business letter with the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries. Suffice it to say that we are not going back that far. We don't really have to. It is only necessary to go back to what the old time Southern darkies were pleased to call "de Cibilized War." The unrest and excitement of the times caused an enormous increase in business enterprise. Business in this country developed rapidly. The inventive genius of the American people expressed itself in the development of railroads, postal and telegraph facilities. These necessary aids to the development of commerce rapidly increased in the service rendered. This made it possible to sell goods over territories never considered before by any one firm.

Before this time Mr. Merchant had made periodical trips to the market and had purchased a bill of goods sufficient to last for six months or a year. He had been met at the front door by the owner of the business; he had been royally entertained and he had gone away feeling very kindly towards his host and creditor. This was before the development of the facilities for doing business over this increased and never-before-thought-of territory. Because of the greater distance it was practically impossible for Mr. Merchant to make the trip. Long term credits were the fashion and the style. They were extended and there were plenty of them. Prices were necessarily high and competition was not sharp. If Mr. Merchant did not pay his obligation fully and promptly when it became due, there was little chance of collecting through compulsion or any other means. There was no Credit Men's Association, no Commercial Law League of America and no business men's associations of any kind. One could not depend on the attorneys. They were hard to get of any kind, because there were no lists of bonded attorneys. In those days, a collection letter was a scarce article, like a successful Republican politician in the state of Texas. Letters were usually written by attorneys, who were so steeped in legal phraseology that they could not write like just plain human beings. Their conduct, therefore, read like a contract.

But it is entirely different nowadays. Business has become complicated. Competition has become keen. Together with this transportation and communication facilities have increased almost daily. We now have the airplane post, which, if twenty-five years ago some one had suggested as a development of a mere quarter-century, would have been considered as foolish as ridiculous. With the development of these facilities, business has kept pace until now the average merchant feels just as much at home in purchasing a bill of goods, sight unseen, through the medium of the United States mail as he did fifty years ago by personal call. The development of business and the increase in competition has meant the development of service to the customers of the business house. As a consequence, letter writing has become an art. At a cost of a few paltry dollars, one can send out carefully worded sales letters and do the work in a few weeks that an army of salesmen could not do in a year. Take away our postal, our telegraph and our telephone service and where would we be?

Large business houses have departments and volumes devoted to this alone. Schools, of both correspondence and residence have courses devoted strictly to the business letter and he who can express his thoughts in a convincing, logical manner is to-day in great demand. The carefully built up, bequeathed, letter jargon, the legal phraseology is a thing of the past. Macauley, the great English historian, in speaking of the two great civilizing agents of the world, said that they were transportation and the printed word. In fact, gentlemen, the business letter has come into its own.

This new condition, however, is of comparatively recent origin. It wasn't so very long ago that the bulk of business correspondence was a telegraph brevity and loaded with stock phrases, and we are still a long ways from being 99-44-100 per cent pure. Sometimes these phrases meant what the writer wanted to express and sometimes they didn't. Wasn't that the way to write a good business letter? What difference did it make anyway? The stock phrases and the letter jargon was in most cases meaningless. It was easy to learn and easier to write letters by using them. It made no difference whether the letter had the appearance of a large cake of ice and breathed a frosty atmosphere, these phrases had to be used, because that was the way to write a good business letter. They were all like that. The correspondent was not an attorney, but borrowed a good portion of his phrases from our legal brethren and he did little besides fill space. You may rise up in righteous indignation and tell me that these phrases were grammatically correct. Certainly they were, but what else were they. Show me one of them that had a trace of personality or extended the right hand of good fellowship. Thank goodness, somebody became utterly disgusted with the conditions, whoever he was.

Right here I am reminded of the fellow who wrote the three or four page letter and then signed his name. To all of this he added a postscript. The postscript was worth more than the whole four pages. It said more in 14 words than the whole four pages. It read like this:

"Please pardon this long letter, I didn't have time to write a short one."

That is certainly true in a great many cases.

Why do all of us make such hard work out of letter writing? Don't we think? Letter writing is merely an expression of coherent thought. You should have no trouble to sit down and express your thoughts. Is it because a good business letter has been considered as one written crammed, jammed full of stock phrases and letter jargon? Is a good letter writer the man who knows all of these stock phrases and letter jargon and can get more of them into his letters than any other letter writer extant? To answer these questions, frankly he is not according to present day standards. He may get by, but he is not living up to the opportunity before him in the use of a clear, straightforward language, without waste of words and in a manner fitted to the subject whereby he can tell the community about the goods and services that he has to offer.

I don't see why any of us should have a hard time to produce a letter breathing consideration and good fellowship for the other fellow. To me there is a fascination in putting my thought on paper, to use my imagination in writing letters that will be read, that will go out through the mail, and will cause a mental reaction and a physical action on the part of the recipient not at all contemplated by him.

In fact, the recipient may have written in to say that he would most emphatically not do that very thing. Really, I can show real enthusiasm upon receiving a good sized check as a result of having written a letter to some customer. Particularly, can I do this after everything and everybody else has failed. Taking my own case as an example, I have a hard time to understand the writer of letters, who does not get pleasure out of his work, and take real enjoyment in solving the everyday problems that are placed before him.

If I should stand up here to-day and accuse any of you or all of you of not being human, I would probably be thrown out, but, do these letters filled with these stock phrases, legal phraseology and letter jargon appear to you as human documents? You are human, you are also each and everyone of you salesmen. You sell your services and you grant credit. A salesman has a personality and he uses it to the best possible advantage. Therefore, if you have a personality, which you undoubtedly have, although it may be expressed in many different ways, why don't you use it? And is there any better place for you to use it than in the letters that you write?

It seems to me that there are just about as many different personalities in this world as there are faces. If you haven't one, cultivate one. Don't cultivate somebody elses. Work on your own. Each and everyone of you can get the human touch, the silent handclasp, the accent of reality, the thing that puts an actor across on the stage, into your letters. Be yourself, don't try to be somebody else. You don't kid the customer to whom you write one bit. You sit down at your desk to dictate a letter and call your stenographer, "Take a letter to John Jones." Then you stew around, scratch your head, bite your finger nails and think and worry, trying to write a masterpiece, filled with those condemned and stultified stock phrases, and the masterpiece that you should write is there in yourself all the time. Just be natural. Let your imagination roam for a few minutes. You know your business, you are familiar with your house and your goods. You know your customers, so just imagine that Mr. Jones is sitting across the desk from you. Shut your eyes if that will make it easier to visualize Mr. Jones. Talk to him just about the same as you would if you were conversing with him over the telephone. Forget your stenographer is there, if that is possible, and you will probably be surprised to see what a fine up-standing letter you have written.

That letter was yourself. It had all the gilt, the veneer off. It was probably written in plain, everyday language. It wasn't filled with a lot of borrowed legal phrases, nor words derived from the Latin, instead of the Anglo-Saxon. The best possible language that you could use would be words of one syllable. What we want to get away from is the old-fashioned, time-worn and archic "We have received your esteemed favor of the 28 ult. and contents have been noted. In reply beg to advise, etc. ad infinitum." Why should we write letters to-day the way our great grandfathers and their great grandfathers before them did? Why not give them a new dress? Your wife isn't satisfied to wear the fashions of 1812 or 1865, and why should our letters? Furthermore, you have written three lines of the letter, when space and time are valuable to three people—not one—three—yourself, your customer, and your stenographer, and you haven't said a thing, with the possible exception of giving your customer the date of his letter. You may say, that it don't take much time to either read or to write, but the completed cost of the average business letter of 100 words when dictated to a stenographer is 24.9c, when dictated to a talking machine is 19c each. That result is obtained from times studies in an office with a thoroughly established corresponding system, employing 25 transcribers. With a smaller output, the cost is increased. It costs the average bank about $1 to produce each dictated letter. You can easily see the cost of those useless words to any business.

In order to visualize Mr. Jones and make your letter with your personality hit home, you must of necessity know something about him. Remember he has a personality the same as you have. He has personal characteristics which you should know. Ascertain the nature of his past relations with your company. Find out his local business conditions and, in fact, get all the information available about Mr. Jones, because the better you know him, the more like a human being you will find him to be and less like an account. There is absolutey no question about it, if you haven't been summoning Mr. Jones' image up before your eyes, if you haven't dictated your letters to his actual bodily image, seated in the chair, at the corner of your desk, your letters have had the sameness, the hackneyed, and the unreal about them that have absolutely buried your personality and cut down your results.

Now then, there are two sides to all questions, and your customer has a side, don't you forget it. So step out of your personality and get the other fellow's point of view. It's a cinch he isn't particularly interested in you, so don't tell him all about yourself. He isn't interested in your company and he don't care whose name is signed to the letter, but he is interested in himself or herself, as the case may be. If you are collecting an account or a loan that you have made and he hasn't paid you, he has a reason or at the worst, an excuse. What is it? Put yourself in his place and recall that you yourself have had experiences when you were a debtor and you found it inconvenient to pay at the time you were called upon.

Don't stay over there on his side of the fence too long, or you may find yourself sympathizing with your debtor. You have rights and you have to protect them. Your customer has an obligation. There is no difference between his interests and yours, each demand prompt payment. You can give some good advice, and you can give it in sincere friendship You are doing your customer a good turn; in fact, you are helping a whole lot more than if you carry good nature to an extreme and allow your customer to get into the habit of believing his own excuses, for many of them are nothing more or less than just that.

Get your arguments all marshalled together, and prove that your customer's statements are merely excuses. In the end he will have to pay, and so the brass tacks reason for his previous failure will come out, which nine times out of ten will be that he never did, never will and don't intend to pay. Isn't it a great deal better and aren't you doing a friend more of a favor to stiffen up his backbone and arouse his determination than to encourage him to emulate a jelly-fish?

A good, vigorous dose of the resale doctrine may help.

For collection of money is nothing on earth than resale. In endeavoring to collect your loans, you try to reawaken in the mind of your borrower the image that he had of what he was going to do with that money when he made the loan. In other words, you endeavor to make him appreciate much more that thing which he secured, or that which he did with the money he received from you than he does of the money he now has in his pocket or in the bank. You want to get the money that is owing you, and you want to keep your customer. Don't plead poor mouth, don't say you need the money to pay some outstanding accounts, don't imply in any way that you are hard up or you are going to the wall if you don't receive the money which he or she owes you. There is only one reason why that account should be paid and that is because it is owing.

As Bryant Griffin says, "Write the letter, pull down the flap and seal yourself in, then when your borrower opens the envelope, you step out; your eye looks squarely into his; your voice speaks a message in a way that demands his attention."

You have received a list of stock phrases for which we are indebted to Professor Gardner of the University of Wisconsin. If you will, but for the time being, in order to make a start on purifying your letters, eliminate just those which you will find on that list, you will be surprised at the new dress and appearance your letters will take on. Some little time ago we had occasion to write some 30 or 35 of the largest firms in the United States, doing business on the installment basis. Practically everyone of these concerns is rated right around the one million dollar mark. Practically every one of them is of national importance. I have counted out 27 of the replies and with few exceptions they are filled with these phrases. I want to read them to you. Taken collectively they would fill one solid page, single spaced of the ordinary business letter and leave some for postscript on the second page.

I was reading a speech of Frederick B. Stevens of Detroit on business letters sometime ago and I want to read you two or three paragraphs of his pertinent comments on this subject.

He had occasion to read over some 38 letters, which were in reply to a query of the Sales Management Magazine on "Does the House Organ Pay?" Each one of the writers seemed to be stung by the same bug; each letter presented the ancient and honorable but wholly unnecessary phrase prefix to each assertion.

Nine of these 38 letters, displayed a wonderful sense of touch. Each of them prefaced an opinion by saying "We feel" (as "We feel the house organ when properly constructed, etc."). Another read in the past tense, "I felt."

The feeling sensation is variously explained. Six of them read "We feel that," another "we feel confident in saying," while one departed from the present and delved into the future by explaining "We would feel." There you have a feeling few and yet their several opinions might have been given without these introductions. Two "wished to state." One, more bold than the rest, spoke out in meeting and said "We do not hesitate to state." These were real statesmen. Many of these letters bristled with bright sayings. Two "would say," one "might say" and one more outspoken than the rest asserted he was "frank to say," while the "glad to say," "will certainly say," and "certainly say" were on the front seat.

The advisers, too, were present. There were those who "wish to advise," those who "beg to advise," and those who "would advise." There were four of retiring and charming modesty; not quite so assertive, for each introduced his thought by saying, "we consider."

When I read a letter that is filled with a lot of words meaningless in themselves, I am reminded of the difference between the ordinary man and the orator. The ordinary man would say, "Two and two make four." But the orator puts it in this way, "If ever in the course of human events it became necessary to determine the aggregate of two integrals of the second denomination, I venture to assert without fear of successful contradiction that the sum will be found to equal four."

"We presume," "however we are." Here are the first two paragraphs of these letters. Now Mr. Customer gets this letter and he immediately loses interest with the first word, because you are talking about yourself, instead of himself. Get the "You" attitude.

You all know the old saying that "business is business." I used the adjective "old." Present day business has discarded that expression as well as the doctrine of "caveat emptor." "Let the buyer beware." I firmly believe that business has found it has a soul and a conscience. That every business man well realizes that the road to success is to give better service than his competitor. in giving better service he has found that he must scourge his letter of the monotonous and uninteresting, that he must show a real constructive regard for his customer's welfare, because his letters are the representatives of his business. The customer may receive visits from the salesman, he may receive occasional visits from some representative of the credit department, but he will receive more visits from the postman than all the rest put together, and then some. These letters should contain friendly personal touches and build good-will. Remember that what is wanted is to build up your customer's belief and confidence in you and your business, that he may deal with you for years to come realizing that he could do no better.

Gentlemen, if you will but climb inside the envelope and journey out to visit your customer with a friendly greeting and a warm handclasp, you will have accomplished wonders for the good name of business and if there is no soul and conscience in business, you will have gone a long way to put both there.

There are great truths that pitch their shining tents
Outside our walls, and though but dimly seen
In the gray dawn, they will be manifest
When the light widens into perfect day.

A list of stock phrases were given each member in attendance.

The President then introduced Clyde E. Whitehill, General Manager Banner Furniture Company, Indianapolis, who addressed the meeting on the subject: "Co-operation Between Retail Furniture Stores and Industrial Loan Offices."

Mr. Whitehill: Gentlemen, I am laboring just now under two conflicting emotions. In the first place, it is hard for me to get on my feet and talk except to those whom I know as I am not well acquainted with but few of you; on the other hand, I am fortunate, because there are very few here who know me and I will have very few friends to meet when I get through, and be ashamed of what I had to say.

I cannot help but follow what the last speaker had to say, by relating to you a similar line of correspondence, that illustrated to me a most tense letter and gives a thought as to what we really are about and what business we are really in.

When the earthquake occurred in California, as you know, all communication was stopped. One of the biggest concerns in the United States, selling window glass, had a big account with a jobber in San Francisco. The jobber owed a large sum of money, which was due the day before the earthquake. When they received the information of the earthquake, this concern began sending telegrams and writing letters, pertaining to their account. Of course, no correspondence or telegram percolated through for many days. In the evening, before the earthquake, the concern in California had enclosed a draft for this large sum of money, which came through eventually. When the correspondence finally reached the head of the concern, the Manager wrote the head of the window glass concern a strong letter, telling of the different treatment they had received from that concern, as compared with other concerns in their state.

To that letter, the Treasurer of the American Window Glass Company replied: "We have your letter and contents noted. In reply would say that we only have two policies in our business and those are, 'If you are not on our books, get on, and if you are on, get off.' "

I think too often that is the attitude of people in any line of credit. I have had a lot of experience in credit, with just such people as you deal with. The most difficult matter that I have encountered is to find men with sufficient intelligence to do just what the last speaker has so well outlined. It is almost impossible to secure an experienced correspondent, whose letters will do at all. I am not going to try to repeat his subject or add anything to it, but that thought simply came to my mind.

I don't know why I should be called upon to address you at all, unless it is because we are in the same boat, in a kindred line of work, in the same situation.

It reminds me of the story of the two men who were passing a cemetery in the South and they saw inscribed on a tombstone the words: "Here lies John Smith, a Merchant, and an Honest Man" and one of the men said: "Why in the Hell did they put the whole three in one grave?"

We are in the same line. I could not possibly make you a talk at this convention. You are fortunate because of the brevity of the time allotted me. I believe that no man has the right to take up people's time unless he has something to say—and I have not. I was scheduled for a talk to-morrow—not today, and therefore, have prepared nothing.

I can say to you, however, with reference to the relationship between the lines which you represent and ours, that I had a most encouraging report to-day to bring you. In recent years, I have not been in contact at all with the part of our business that brings our concern in contact with yours. We have representatives that do that, but some few years ago, I used to have a great deal of dealings with the loan man direct—and I might say to you that at that time my experience was not very satisfactory. I think we have all learned a lot of things in ten years. I am sure there is more heart in every kind of business than there was then; more intelligence, a knowledge and experience that makes many things better.

In those days, I used to be considerably disturbed by the loan men because they wanted information and obtained it in a manner that frequently was exceedingly embarrassing to our customers and to me. That was the situation the last personal experience that I had and, when I was requested to talk to you on the relationship that existed between our two lines of business, and how it might be improved, my reply was: "I am afraid it would not be very pleasant."

I have had no time to devote to the matter and no experience since the time it was unpleasant but I went to headquarters and in that comes the encouragement. I called our credit man in this city to see what their experience is—what it is to-day—and I will try to tell you in the words that were related to me—that "We have no difficulties. We find that the loan men in the city of Indianapolis are a very splendid lot of men, willing to co-operate with us, and our relationships are very pleasant."

Remembering now that it was ten years since I knew anything about the relationship, I was inclined to press for unfavorable information and I am very glad to say that I could not get any, even with an effort. I called on the long distance telephone the credit man and the manager in the city where my experience used to be unfavorable and I received the same reply there—that there was nothing at all to complain about.

Therefore, I am not in a position to talk to you. I came with the intention of scolding and it is only a few minutes since I had that information. My speech is upset. If there is anything remaining that needs to be worked out, I would have to be talking ten years ago.

I can say this to you, that the most embarrassing thing—the most unsatisfactory business dealings that retail dealers had with loan men is in the lack, in some places, of character in the manner or under the circumstances in which they endeavored to obtain information. I would suggest to you it seems unnecessary in Indianapolis. It is unnecessary in Muncie but it may be that somewhere some of you are careless in the manner that it used to be ten years ago. The customers of the retail store should never, under any circumstances, no matter who is making the inquiry with the credit department, hear this information being given.

If I were talking to the credit men of the retail furniture business, that would be my advice—that they provide some means whereby that thing would not occur. That used to be an awful grief in the old days. In that time, very few bills were paid off by the loan men but our credit men have advised me from every one of our cities that they consider the loan agencies to be of great benefit to them in the collection of hard accounts.

Where accounts run for a year, for example, there is a harder time to collect at the final end and that is where you loan men come in as a great advantage to the retailer. Just now, we are in a period that has only begun and I hope it will soon end. There ought to be a better day for the loan men, when closer co-operation between the retail time payment merchants and the loan concerns would be of great advantage. Business has been slipping but I have always had and have now full faith in the business of this country. We are too easily scared. Because business is not so good is no reason why we should worry and should be a hay day for you. Are you aware that between the period called a "boom" in this country and the period called a "depression" that there is never a greater ratio than 10% above or below the central line? Therefore, I have full confidence and I think money can be loaned and accounts sold safely, but with greater caution. There will be more people that cannot pay, that will go to you for money but the percentage of those people and the total number on our books will be exceedingly small and we have no fear; but we have greater use and greater need for you in this period, and in the next few months to come, than we have perhaps ever had within the last five years.

I want to congratulate you upon my investigation. It has been a revelation to me in the improvement of the loan companies and loan men and the much higher class of personnel and the general feeling that prevails by the general public toward your line of business.

Report of Membership Committee.

The Membership Committee reported that

88 members were on the books last year
5 members suspended for non-payment of dues
83
5 members resigned
78
8 new members during the past year
86 members at present time.

Report of Publicity Committee.

Mr. Farrington: This only concerns publicity in Indianapolis. We ran special publicity advertising for nine months and did not discontinue it because it was a failure but because it was expensive and we had covered the ground. We felt that we had told everything there was to tell. The ads were written up by experts and were approved by advertising experts at the National Convention. We wanted to reach the people who never hear of loan companies and do not know what they are for. Our ads came out in the Star and News one day each week for nine months and also were run over the state in other papers.

Mr. Hartz: Fort Wayne used the publicity ads and Terre Haute has had those ads printed in the Chamber of Commerce bulletins. South Bend also used some.

Report of Secretary.

Membership present, 86; delinquent 2, Indiana Loan Co. of Lafayette, and Muncie; five resignations; 5 suspensions; 8 new.

Resignations during year: Valley Loan Co., Huntington taken over by Legal Loan Co.; Clinton Finance Co., Frankfort quit small loan business; Milligan Finance Co., Ft. Wayne resigned, quit business; Willis Dean Loan Co., Marion, taken over by Clupper Loan Co.; Shank Investment Co. resigned.

Automatically suspended non-payment of dues: Equitable Loan Co., Ft. Wayne; Citizens Finance Co., Mishawake; Crescent Inv. & Loan Co., Evansville; Peoples Loan Co., Shelbyville; Security Finance Co., Ft. Wayne.

New Members: Thompson Loan Co., Shelbyville; Thompson Loan Co., Seymour; Legal Loan Company, Huntington, Anderson, Crawfordsville; State Inv. & Loan Co., Richmond; Security Inv. & Loan Co., Indianapolis; Jacob E. Clark, Washington.

Mr. Stratton's booklet which was published by the Association was distributed as follows: 1000 C. H. Stratton, Sullivan; 1000 Penn. Ind. L. Assn.; 500 A. C. Broughman, Marion; 1000 Community Finance Co., Philadelphia; 500 Federal Sec. Co., Lynchburg, Va.; 200 Sec. & Ind. Loan Co., Terre Haute; 100 Household Finance Co., Indianapolis; 100 Sterling Loan Co., Indianapolis; 100 Commonwealth Loan Co., Brazil; 100 First Sec. Co., Huntington; 100 D. Blumberg, Terre Haute; 100 New Method Loan Co., Springfield, Mass.; 100 E. A. Beard, Jr., Covington, Ky.; 100 distributed to members of the Association.

A report from Mr. James W. Noel regarding the test case in lower courts was held to be constitutional. A written opinion is being secured, if possible.

Respectfully submitted,
R. F. Hartz, Secretary.

It was moved that the report of the secretary be accepted and made a matter of record. Motion seconded and carried unanimously by a rising vote.

At 4:30 P. M., upon motion duly made and seconded, the meeting adjourned until time for the banquet, to be held at 6:30 P. M. the same day.

Wednesday Evening, May 21, 1924.

The banquet of the Indiana Industrial Lenders Association was held in the Travertine Room, Lincoln Hotel, at 6:30 P. M., Wednesday, May 21, 1924. The attendance was one hundred eighty-six members, guests and wives. At 9:00 o'clock the dining room was cleared and dancing was enjoyed by the party until mid-night.

After a musical program, the toastmaster, Mr. A. C. Broughman, said: "About seven or eight years ago, a gentleman from Philadelphia dropped in to help us organize our present Loan Association. Without any further remarks, I would like to present to his old time friends, Dr. Charles G. Mueller, President, American Industrial Lenders Association of Philadelphia, Pa."

Dr. Mueller gave a very eloquent address on progress the loan business has made.

The next speaker of the evening, Mr. Eben H. Walcott, Bank Commissioner of Indiana, was introduced by the toastmaster. Mr. Walcott chose as his subject: "Progress of Loan Business."

Mr. Walcott: Mr. Chairman, Ladies and Gentlemen: This has been a most delightful occasion — charming ladies, successful men, a beautiful banquet and two fine addresses. That would seem enough; but you have honored me with the request to appear before you and, as I have been intimately associated with your business, I accepted with pleasure.

The administration of the Department of Banking that has charge of your business, is in the excellent hands of Mr. Johnson, who looks after it very well. I was somewhat in the position of the man who got a Black Hand letter, poorly written, so no one could detect who the writer was. It said: "Sir, if you don't bring $5,000.00 down to the old covered bridge to-morrow night, at midnight, we will kidnap your wife." Signed "Blackhand."

The man read the letter over carefully, thought it over and finally replied: "My dear sir: I have not got the $5,000.00 but your proposition interests me very much."

And so I felt very much interested when you requested me to address you this evening and tried to look into the conditions somewhat under which you operate, the success of your operations and the field that you occupy.

Your National President gave you a resume, to some extent, of the development of banking. Back in the early days, the needs of the people were few and their wants were provided for by exchange. One possesses something that the other wanted so they exchanged. As the nation grew and developed, it was necessary to enlarge this field until finally some sort of medium was provided that made it possible for men to secure credit. Bills of exchange, etc. grew out of it and we have gone on apace, year after year, as the demands of the people and the world grew, in the infinite number of its creations—and man's wants grew until it was necessary to provide a wonderful system of Commerce Exchange, which now governs our affairs.

It is not a great many years ago, when a man who did not possess large means, who had but little credit, found himself tremendously embarrassed when he wanted relief for some emergency. It is not a great many years ago when a man was imprisoned for debt; not a great many years ago when severe punishment was inflicted on those who did not fulfill their obligations.

Any of you who have had the pleasure of reading Dicken's Works have been impressed with the story of "Little Dorritt." Back in our own history imprisonment for debt was a law and not uncommon. This was harsh and drastic. It imposed upon those who were not able to provide for themselves suffering, such as would not now be tolerated.

It was necessary to relieve this condition in some way so laws were passed, which made it possible for the small borrower to secure credit in order to supply his needs, and at the same time protect the man who loaned the money.

Prior to 1917, the Petty Loan business was in a most disreputable position. There was no system. It was easy for men without character or conscience to engage in it and the suffering of those who were victims of it was so great as to cause public indignation. However, in 1917 a law was passed, I understand it was sponsored by the Russell Sage Foundation and, under its supervision, was created the "Petty Loan Law," which operated under it provisions. At this time, there are about twenty states that have such laws and about eight which have the same kind of law under which Indiana is governed.

Under the operation of this law and the leaders of your organization, the small borrower is not penalized, to any extent, over what we call the "Big Borrower." He receives the same courtesies and the same fair treatment. Few foreclosures exist under this method. The old condition was deplorable indeed.

It is estimated that ten million dollars is loaned in Indiana, with approximately 100,000 people being served. The field is very large—indeed so large that few people understand it, because the man who profits by your service does not broadcast or cry out concerning his needs. He is retiring, diffident. Sometimes his distress makes him feel embarrassed and where would he turn if he could not go to an institution, operating such as yours? A review and survey of borrowers has disclosed the fact that out of 100% of the people not 15% have what is called "Banking Credit"; 15% are unworthy of credit; 70% are compelled, by their needs, to turn to association such as you establish.

Bear in mind, gentlemen, in the first place, that while there is criticism and always will be, the criticism, in many cases exists because your business is not thoroughly understood. Bear in mind that you operate under the law, passed by the Legislature. Your business is legalized and this law was not passed until the conditions were thoroughly investigated and the need was apparent. If it were not necessary for the creation of a law of this character, to meet a condition, such as existed the Legislature would not have passed it. You have no more occasion to apologize or feel embarrassed, in explaining the business in which you are engaged, than any other legalized business in the state of Indiana. I am not here as an advocate of your business.

You simply come under the Banking Department as one of its departments. I believe it most important indeed, that you educate the people more extensively regarding the service that you supply and the needs of the people that are associated with you—not only in the way of the borrower, but the class of people who are associated in the business. To more aptly put that, I went over some statistics recently of occupations and classes in the country and found that 430 occupations were listed among the borrowers—illustrating without question the field that you cover. In practically every case, these men came to you because they were unable to borrow from some other institution, such as Banks, Trust Companies, etc. Would it be wise to condemn? Would it be fair to condemn those who make it possible for all these different classes of people, in distress, to find any relief or help, in their hour of need? Would that be just?

The only way to meet such conditions as arise is to call attention to the people who borrow and the service they receive. Another thing that should particularly be called to the attention of the public, who are wont to criticise is that this is practically the plan devised by the Russell Sage Foundation. The Russell Sage Foundation is a philanthropic organization. It attempts to devise plans and methods that will bring assistance and help to those who are needy and are unable to secure help in any other way; and when they endorsed your business, they did not endorse it because they have any sentiment in regard to it, or are interested in a pecuniary way; but because they thought "This is a wonderful way that these people can find relief in their hour of despair."

What is necessary as a basis of credit to borrow money under the Loan and Credit Act of Indiana? I tried to find out, to some extent, what different classes were served and, as near as I could determine, the largest amount of security consisted of household goods. Of course, there are other forms of security.

Into every man's life there comes an hour, so dark and dreary that it seems that hope is almost gone. He may have had friends in his brighter days, when all went well with him; but when the dark dyas come, when sorrow and grief grip his soul, who will stay by him? Where will he go? If he has been a failure, he is turned down. Can he make a public appeal? How many want charity? God forbid; so where can he go? He must turn somewhere. He has his home furnished, to the best of his ability, and so in his hour of distress he goes to some man who says to him: "I will let you have the money and I will take a lien on your household goods." He gladly accepts. It is not a question of bartering around to see what best trade he can make. It is a question of getting money that he must have.

The people at large think that under the law, under which you operate, that grants you 3½% per month on your loans, you are making so much money that you are grabbing at the very life of the borrower. But what do statistics show? I have here a report of the Commissioner of the State of Virginia.

In Virginia the small loan companies are not only under the supervision of the Banking Department but they are examined by the Banking Department and a detailed report is prepared. In Indiana, you are entitled to that service, but you don't get it. As it is now, under the law, all you do is pay a fee of $100.00 per year, provide a bond for $1,000, not loan any money exceeding $300.00 and not have a rate over 3½% per month. That is all we are concerned with in our Department; but in Virginia, they make a thorough report. There are thirty-two small loan companies in the state of Virginia and, in this report for 1923, they had a working capital of $1,826,000, employing more than 100 people caring for 25,211 accounts, making loans from $5.00 to $300.00. Interest for the year amounted to $573,994.60 leaving less expenses a net of $186,628.00 or an average of 10.22% on the capital invested.

What are they looking at that they don't understand? It is your fault gentlemen, that they don't understand you because you don't help educate them to the real facts existing. I asked Mr. Hartz about some of the facts in Indiana. Some people think 3½% monthly means $42.00 interest annually on $100.00. They don't take into consideration the fact that interest is charged only on monthly balance. I thought myself it was too high and may have said so at some time; but any business that does not run over 10.22% per annum and is as hazardous as yours ought not to be questioned by anyone and you ought to make the public understand this.

We don't question the doctor's or lawyer's fee when an emergency arises. It is really up to them what they charge. If I have misquoted figures, I don't know it. If you have something "up your sleeve," I don't know it; but, according to these figures, I see very little criticism for your business.

Every movement, as I said before, grows out of some pressing need. I understand that, under this uniform law, there has been a tremendous growth in your business. I think that growth is due to two causes—one that the borrower thinks he is being treated fairly; the other that you, yourselves, operating under the law, feel that there is safety for your capital and a place for your business.

There is still necessity for regulating loans, so as to prevent unfair advantage. That is why I understand you had this law passed—to assist you in carrying on your work.

The hour is getting late and I have talked as long as I should. I have only spoken to you as the knowledge has come to me. Your business is misunderstood as many other kinds of business are misunderstood, through ignorance. I am under the impression that a great many people analyze your business wrong. There is a saying that "there should be no sentiment in business" but that is wrong. Sentiment is necessary as a heart-felt impulse. Without it, life would be barren, like the rose without its fragrance. Part of life's joy is in gratifying heart's impulses. To take the last dollar, wet with the tears of suffering is not necessary. You would not and could not do this—but to operate your business under the regulations of the law, which recognizes the needs for your service, is honorable and you can rightly feel that you are giving service to many who would otherwise suffer.

The Toastmaster thanked Mr. Wolcott on behalf of the Association, expressed his belief in the sincerity of Mr. Wolcott's statements and added: "From a man in Mr. Wolcott's position, it is excellent news to us for we, as an Association, are trying to do the things which he mentioned."

THURSDAY MORNING, MAY 22, 1924.

The meeting was called to order at 9:30 A. M. by President Davies.

Mr. Francis L. Thompson of the Thompson Loan Company, Shelbyville, Ind., read a paper on the subject: "Credit Rating Bureaus. Their Methods and Effect on the Loan Business."

Credit Rating Bureau and Their Effect on the Loan Business.

The changing conditions are affecting the extension of credits and particularly in relation to the small loan business. I presume that most, if not all, companies base their credit on the ability of the borrower to repay, taking as a prime requisite what, for the purpose of this paper, we will term "Repayment Power." It is, I believe, a well proven and accepted fact that the most inexcusable crime in credit extension is overloading, and in avoiding this serious mistake the outstanding obligations and current expenses of the borrower in addition to your payment must be taken into consideration.

This is where your local credit rating bureau becomes effective and brings before us a somewhat new angle or at least new in our territory, that can be a serious menace to the general good of our business.

The retail people of the country are rapidly perfecting credit rating bureaus for their own protection and in addition to local bureaus have both state and national organizations all closely affiliated and in our territory were even going to the extent of taking from the county records a list of all chattel mortgages, sending daily to each member a mimeographed copy, and in some cases these lists were exposed to the view of whoever cared to look them over, but the most dangerous point in connection with their plan was that everyone having a chattel mortgage was to be denied credit for that reason. You can readily see their viewpoint as they well know we hold a preferred claim over their open accounts. The ill effects that would naturally follow such a practice was a general exposure of our customers' accounts and a complete killing of their credit throughout the city.

This condition was first discovered by one of our association members, who immediately took the matter up with me. We called a conference and upon investigation found this to be the methods followed and recommended by the credit association throughout the state and nation and while doubtless not always carried to the extreme such as we found it, creates an undesirable and dangerous condition.

To combat and overcome this we called upon several of the prominent members and by showing them the methods followed by us in passing upon the credit of a customer proved to their entire satisfaction that an applicant who was able to turn in a satisfactory application, and property statement, was a better risk than many whom they were accepting. We also explained that through our methods of collection we were materially assisting in making better payment customers, and as a clinching and convincing argument, that better than 75% of all money loaned by companies such as ours was immediately used in the payment of past due obligations, largely to local merchants.

I believe the credit bureau can be made an asset to our business through our establishing a proper relationship and understanding with our local bureaus and by our State and National Associations sending representatives to the meetings of the Credit Men's Association to discuss such conditions. It is purely a matter of educational work in what I believe to be a very important and apparently overlooked field. The magnitude of our business and its unquestioned service to a large percentage of our population entitles us to consideration on any subject and before any body of men.

Mr. Thompson: If I may digress from my paper a little, in the state of Indiana there is a state organization known as the "Retail Credit Men's Association. That has the affiliation of nearly all credit associations and it also is connected with the National Credit Bureaus. They are purely local concerns with their state and national affiliations. It is nothing like the Dun or Bradstreet people and they maintain an office, in which the people who do credit business in a community, are carried over from the ledgers into this Rating Bureau.

This chattel mortgage trouble can be wiped out entirely but why not go to the head and sell men like Mr. Whitehill and people who are connected direct, in order o overcome the trouble?

Several members discussed this subject. Mr. Arthur Dana, Auditor, L. C. Harbison Co., Chicago, Ill. then read a letter addressed to all their offices on the subject: 'Is it good business to make loans on agreement to accept interest only?"

Chicago, February 21, 1924.

Dear Mr. Dehnert:

The Virginian Legislature is in session and a strenuous effort is being made to reduce the 3½% rate to 3% on unsecured loans and 2% on secured loans. The amendment has or will pass the House. The proponents of the amendment presented payment books issued by several licencees to show that the taking of interest, when no principal payment is made, is quite common practice, and the amount of money paid by the borrower in interest was stressed. In short, I am informed the best argument proponents have for their measure is the practice of allowing customers to carry their account simply upon payment of interest.

I am calling this to your attention to show the far reaching effect of this bad practice and to impress upon you the inadvisability of excusing a customer from making the regular principal payment except in an extreme emergency, and with request that you, in your contact with others in the business, will do what you can to prevent them from following the practice.

You know from experience that it is comparatively easy to bring to the office more customers than you can accommodate. In view of this, it is decidedly bad business to permit a customer to carry an account simply upon the payment of interest, or to give a customer money when you are not satisfied he is going to make good use of it, or to give customers more money than you know hey should have, or to make loans which you know it is best not to make, either because of the security offered or circumstances surrounding the loan which your experience tells you make it undesirable.

I am satisfied there is enough of the kind of business we want in your city to keep every dollar you have employed all the time if your every effort is made to get that kind of business.

Yours very truly,
L. C. Harbison.

Mr. Harbison: That was a general letter sent to all branch offices. We will not entertain an application for more than one month, without a payment on the principal. They all obligate themselves to pay interest on the principal each month. You don't have to limit yourselves to but just a few applicants but the smart thing to do is to do like Mrs. Snyder in Chicago. She said that she cannot make all the candy so she makes the best of it. Our policy is not to create more business than we can supply and to cut the cost of the individual loan down to the minimum. If you want to uplift the standard of your business, you must have confidence in people and show your faith in them. You can extend your business to the right class and they will be glad to borrow from you if they know about your business.

Mr. George W. Farrington of Indianapolis, Ind., Manager Commonwealth Loan Company, addressed the convention on the subject: "Testimonial progress made in the last few years, establishing Exchange Bureaus."

Mr. Farrington: I trust that this subject of Exchange Bureaus will not be confused with Credit Rating Bureaus. The Credit Rating Bureau has been discussed and settled in the mind of each fellow, who argued the subject. Each one believes the same as he did when he began. The Exchange Bureau is an entirely different proposition, as I understand it. It does not attempt, in any manner whatever, to say to you what a man's credit standing is. It merely gets facts and you determine for yourself whether you want to make a loan, on the information that you get from them, as well as what you gather yourself. The main object of this affair is to keep from doubling up loans. I have been wondering why it was that it is only within the last few years that such an interest was taken in the establishment of these Bureaus. A great many losses must have taken place before their establishment, that could have been avoided. It was necessary to get information somewhere, to determine whether you should, or should not, make a loan. Other businesses are establishing these same Exchanges but they are particularly necessary for the loan men and, of course, cut down your chances of collecting, if you go bad.

The Exchange here has been running 26 years successfully and we have sixteen members, out of a possible 17 or 18 that might be members. They include the Welfare Public Loan and a Cut Rate concern, which in the beginning organized to put us out of business. Now they belong. They consider it necessary to know something about the number of bills a man has outstanding before they determine whether they want to loan him. Mr. Wick of Philadelphia made a great deal of effort, some time ago, to get letters from Exchanges where these had been established and he was kind enough to send me a list of letters from men as to what they think of the Exchange.

The following have all been organized since 1922:

Baltimore, Md.	6	19
Philadelphia, Pa.	21	33
Wilkes-Barre, Pa.	3	5
Scranton, Pa.	4	5
Jersey City, N. J.	9	9

Newark, N. J.	9	12
Reading, Pa.	3	7
Camden, N. J.	3	3
Norristown, Pa.	2	2
Lancaster, Pa.	3	3
Paterson, N. J.	4	4
Pittsburgh, Pa.	12	12
Trenton, N. J.	5	5
Bethlehem, Pa.	2	2

Mr. Farrington then read extracts from letters from the following, expressing their approval of these Exchanges:

Peoples Finance Service Co., Baltimore, Md.
Community Finance Service, Inc., Jersey City, N. J. and Camden, N. J.
Security Loan Co., Germantown, Philadelphia, Pa.
Committee Loan Co., Philadelphia, Pa.
Mutual Loan Co., Lancaster, Pa.
Protective Investment Co., Paterson, N. J.
Household Loan Co., Reading, Pa.
Guarantee Loan Co., Scranton, Pa.
Industrial Loan Society, Newark, N. J.

Mr. Farrington: I don't know how many of you fellows are interested in forming an Exchange. There will be time for discussion after this address. I would like to hear from those who are operating Exchanges in Indiana. The things we report in Indianapolis are name, address, wife's name and former address. We get addresses back for three or four years. That is for the purpose of locating "skips" for furniture companies. It is absolutely necessary that we have relationship with furniture companies and that is why we were anxious to have Mr. Whitehill talk yesterday. I attempted to tell him a few things about the way loan companies and furniture companies get along in Indianapolis but he would not listen and he found out for himself. The information he got from his own houses in Louisville and Muncie and here must have convinced him that conditions are most ideal in Indianapolis. We co-operate with the furniture companies and have located many "skips" for them and believe that we have served them better in that respect than in any other. Sometimes fellows they could not find for a year would come to us for a loan and then we advise the furniture companies.

Mr. Teel: In operating an Exchange Bureau in a town ranging from 75,000 to 90,000, what would be the initial investment?

Mr. Farrington: One small company operates an Exchange with about eight members. All you need to figure for your expense is the cost of a girl to keep up the records. We have sixteen companies and we employ two girls and it keeps them busy. They keep a record of mortgages on automobiles, etc. It helps us determine whether we can loan him as much money as he wants or not. You don't have to have an expensive room. Telephone, rent for room and cost of girl's services, together with supplies is all the expense you have. We get all the information we can from the borrower and where they have credit and give this information to the Credit Rating Bureau. They call these people and they also have a card and give us any information they can. We find they have given us good service at a very cheap rate.

Doctor Mueller: With all regard for the official conduct of your Indianapolis Bureau, I do not think it has the scope that we find in the Philadelphia Bureau, which is operated by the Philadelphia Chamber of Commerce—the Retail Merchants Bureau. As a matter of assistance and receiving information on the applicants, we have the benefit of 600,000 names of merchants outside of the loan accounts. We have the prestige of the local Chamber of Commerce and get three times the information we want. You cannot have the prestige when the lenders themselves operate it. Then we have a system in Philadelphia where, when applications are made in the afternoon, by 9:30 the next day every lender has been called back with the information. They put two, three or four girls to work at once to clear that information. You cannot do that where you only have one girl to do it.

When a girl is away, what happens to the organization? We have the added advantage—and I say, if you can get the Chamber of Commerce in any community, with the Retail Merchants Credit Bureau, who will take this as a side issue, and work out the details to your entire satisfaction, you have done a decidedly finer thing than permitting the loan men to operate it themselves.

Someone has to select a successor if you only have one girl. It is my recommendation to you that you consider seriously handing it to this body to operate for you.

Someone mentioned the fact of several lenders being in a community. When the City of Baltimore turned over to the new order of things, the lenders were not ready to accept the statements of each other. There were two of us who believed in each other and we passed the names of our applicants to each other daily. Within a week, four more came in and for a long time, only six out of nineteen. In time, it gathered momentum. You will find more people who are negative on propositions of this kind than are positive. If you will just have the courage to go and to it, you will succeed. The result is they sent their applications as they came in. Six of us said: "If this is good, we want all of it, and if no good, we don't want any"—so we made up a complete duplication of cards in our files and sent it to the Chamber of Commerce. In less than three and one-half months we cleared every account in the City of Philadelphia.

Why confine our business to the installment houses? I don't think there is a department store here that does not want to know about it. If there are only two of you in a town, I suggest that you pass the information and keep your business clean. I had a talk with the president of the Standard Oil Company. It cost them forty million dollars to know what it meant to have co-operation. The finest minds in the commercial world to-day are thinking and talking about what we are discussing now. Go to it.

Mr. Farrington: The loan companies do not call them any more than they call us—and it is to their benefit to know We have not found it objectionable either because each Exchange tries to accommodate a certain line of business and that line is independent of the other ones. I am glad that Dr. Mueller brought up the question of being able to get another line of business to help because it did not work out in Indiana and we naturally assumed it was because they were in connection with the other line of business. However, if it worked in Philadelphia, then it ought to work out in Indianapolis. A few years ago, we made an attempt to associate our organization with the retail furniture stores. We often asked them to put their exchange in with ours. They were skeptical and wanted to pin us down to things which we did not want to accept. They did not want us to know about their live accounts.

Mr. Maurice S. Kent, Manager Household Finance Service Company, Indianapolis, then read a paper: "What knowledge is gained by attending State and National Association Conventions."

What Knowledge is Gained by Attending State and National Association Conventions?

When Mr. Hartz assigned the above subject to me somehow I felt that I really could not do it justice. Then I remembered a poem I had read penned by Edmund Vance Cook and I have at least made an effort. The poetry in question reads as follows:

If you think you are beaten you are,
  If you think you dare not you don't,
If you'd like to win but you think you can't
  It's almost a cinch you won't.

If you think you'll lose you're lost
  For out of the world we find,
Success begins with a fellow's will,
  It's all in the state of mind.

If you think you're outclassed, you are;
  We've got to think high to rise,
You've got to be sure of yourself before
  You can ever win a prize.

Life's battles don't always go
  To the stronger or faster man,
But soon or late the man who wins
  Is the man who thinks he can.

Getting back to the subject assigned to me, will say that if I do it justice it should be a very interesting one to chain owners as well as managers.

Take for instance the owner of several offices. I imagine sometimes his thoughts run in this manner: "Here I have spent large sums of money to enable my managers and auditors to attend these conventions and what have they gained? I figured my expense on this sort of thing last year and it amounted to thousands of dollars. How have I gained anything or where have they benefited? My offices were doing fairly well before we used to meet, now what does it all sum up to? Why should I continue to give these conventions my support?"

I believe the main answer to all of the above questions is this: We learn by attending these conventions that we are in a clean, decent, legitimate business, a business that we can be proud of and one worthy of anyone's support. To make a success of a business you must believe in it or all is lost. If you do not believe in it, or can't be loyal, do justice to yourself and your employer and quit. This gets us back to our poetry again:

If you think you're outclassed, you are;
  We've got to think high to rise,
You've got to be sure of yourself before
  You can ever win a prize.

I remember back in 1916 before I ever attended one of these meetings, that my opinion of the loan business then wasn't as high as it should have been and is now. At that time I was just a little ashamed of my profession. I well remember my first call. I went on it about as happy and in about the same frame of mind as

I imagine a man does who pays a midnight visit to a bank to crack a safe. In 1921 I was transferred to Chicago and beheld my first National Convention. There my eyes were opened. I found that really big men with big ideas were in this business. I learned that our business was not a temporary slipshod affair thrown together for profit only but that our association was a permanent, living thing building for the future with high ideals. That our business was a necessary cog in society and that we must be right or we could not exist. At this convention I heard men get up and say, "Do not take interest payments only, it's bad for the customer, therefore, it's bad for you." Here were men actually talking against their own interests to give the customer who dealt with them a square deal. Then some one else said that it wasn't good to make a customer a loan even though he had more security than was necessary if he did not have the income to pay his loan and I thought some more. Here were men who refused to make a loan and make money on it if it would cause their patron embarrassment. Surely these fellows were not so bad. Some one had them wrong. I began right there to respect my business and have never had a doubt about it since.

There isn't a man here in active charge of an office who doesn't hear this remark almost every day from pleasantly surprised customers, that is: "Why I never thought people who conduct loan offices were so nice to deal with." That means a whole lot to us and will do more for us than all the publicity campaigns we can ever put on. It's just a reflection of the way we feel toward the public and the birth of it was in our conventions. It all comes from the slogan, "Treat the other fellow as you would like to be treated yourself."

The main thought I would like to get home and I think you will be well repaid for your trip here if you get it is: think well of your business. You must think well of yourself if you want the other fellow to think well of you.

The happy thought is other people are thinking well of us. Such men as we enjoyed hearing last night would never have honored us by their presence if they were not absolutely convinced that we were a benefit to the public and an asset to the community.

When people need money they come to us for it. Very few people are willing to assist them or take the risk for less than we do. Our rate is right, our methods are right and there is no reason in the world why we should not continue to prosper and be honored and respected citizens.

Another thing we get out of this meeting is learning to know the other fellow. We know one another and that helps us to help one another. There is not one of the boys here in the city of Indianapolis belonging to the agency for whom I wouldn't go out of the way to help, either in a personal or a business way. I hope and believe they feel the same toward me. It all comes from getting acquainted. The other fellow really isn't so bad after you know him, and learn to give and take a real friendly hand shake and a smile.

The question—"Best Methods of Handling Return Checks" was then declared open for discussion.

MR. KENT: I am indebted to Mr. Dana for the way he handles checks and I also worked in a bank for four years. If you go to any of these banks, you will get a red slip that they pin on checks. I take off the slip, which gives the penalty, and mail this slip in a letter, marked "Insufficient funds" and add "I wish you would please read the little slip carefully, attached to the check." In nine cases out of ten they will come rushing in to take up the check.

Several others discussed this subject.

Report of Auditing Committee.

We, the members of the Auditing Committee have checked the records of the Treasurer and find the report as submitted to be correct. Balance on deposit at Bankers Trust Company checks with report.

Respectfully,
W. G. CHANDLER, Chairman,
H. E. ARNETT,
R. REYNOLDS.

It is moved that the report of the Auditing Committee be accepted and made a matter of record and the committee be discharged. Motion seconded and carried.

Upon motion duly made and seconded, the meeting adjourned at twelve o'clock to reconvene at 1:30 this afternoon.

THURSDAY AFTERNOON, MAY 22, 1924.

The meeting was called to order by the President at 1:30 P. M.

Mr. Blaine McGrath, Publicity Expert, addressed a meeting on the subject "Ethics that Build Public Faith in the Industrial Loan Business."

ETHICS THAT BUILD PUBLIC FAITH IN THE INDUSTRIAL LENDERS' BUSINESS

BY BLAINE MCGRATH

There is no business in existence whose continued success depends any more largely upon the faith of the public than that of the industrial lender. There is no class of business men who need to be more alert to the opportunities for keeping a tight grip upon the faith of the public than do the industrial lenders of America.

It has not been many years since the lender of money in small amounts, was not considered a person of good repute. The money lender who charged more than the nominal interest was a usurer—a person to be shunned unless his assistance was imperatively needed—and any borrower who could beat the hated lender out of his "exhorbitant" interest or any part of the principal sum that had been lent him, chortled to himself and told his experience to friends who applauded because someone had got the better of a money lender.

There are certain fundamental, sound reasons why the money lender of a few short years back was in disrepute. He lent his own money on scant security or none, to persons who were without responsibility and mostly without honor; he charged them all the interest he thought he coult collect and he fought the unscrupulous borrower with equally unscrupulous and heartless means of collection. The old time lender seldom witnessed an honorable act on the part of the borrowers who were constantly trying to avoid payment of their debt to him. He was accustomed to being lied to and lied about and in his turn he cheated when it profited him, he made his unfortunate patrons pay well for whatever joy they got out of hating him. The lender was hemmed in by few laws; he was protected by fewer laws. He ran his business without regard to ethical conduct and without regard to how the public felt about him or his business.

Now, we hope, "them days have gone forever." We live in an age when it makes a difference to us how our neighbor feels about us. We live in a day when it profits us to have the faith and confidence of the public and when loss of public confidence in all kinds of business means financial loss as well. And since the business of lending money is now passing through the transitory period of its existence—removing itself from the position of disrepute that it once occupied and lifting itself to the position of an honorable business, regulated and safeguarded by nearly uniform laws in nearly half of the states and attracting to itself men of honest business motives, men of integrity and of good standing in their communities who are not ashamed to tell the public they have money invested in the industrial loan business—is there any business in America that needs the faith and the confidence of the public more than it is needed by the industrial lenders?

Is there any other business that is so susceptible to attack by misguided individuals, by misinformed—or not at all informed—legislators, or by any one of a host of ill wishers who are ever ready to "knock" a business that is striving to elevate itself and to improve the standards of the character for the men who are entering its portals?

You men are in a business that is still on trial for its right to live and prosper. Your every act, when it brings your business into public notice, is being put in evidence in the public mind either for or against your business. Your continued upright dealings with patrons is being written into the record of the trial, and the public is being made conscious of the fact that you are engaged in an honest business, if through advertising and other mediums of public contact you tell the people of the service you are rendering the man who has sudden need for money.

On the other hand, you need not advertise the fact when one of your associates in the business of industrial lending makes a misstep or commits an unethical act. The fellow who is wronged, or thinks he is wronged, and his friends and acquaintances, will advertise your business for you. They will write letters to the editor of your town's newspaper and the editor will publish them, and the business of lending will receive a setback in its march forward toward the attainment of public faith.

When one of your associates uses untruthful statements in his advertising—makes false claims for his service that are proved false when a borrower comes to make settlement—that lender has wronged all industrial lenders engaged in the business. He has made it more difficult for you all to do a straightforward business.

When one of your number makes a loan to a customer, knowing that the customer will be unable to meet the obligation when the monthly payments fall due, but that he will be forced to foreclose in order to get his money back with the accrued interest, that lender is wronging you and you and every one of you, because, while he will get his money back from that particular transaction and the interest and he will make a profit on the individual deal, that lender is certainly in disrepute with that borrower and that borrower's influence and the influence of his friends—and not any of us are so insignificant that we don't have a few friends—will always be used to the discredit of the industrial lenders' business. And at every opportunity harsh words will be said about industrial lenders and their business.

When an industrial lender permits a man or woman customer to borrow more than he or she can pay back within a reasonable time, knowing that difficulty in collection is certain to result from overloading, temporary profits may be acquired, but the net result of such an unbusinesslike transaction is a reaction against industrial lenders generally, and brings public distrust against the business you men are endeavoring to improve and advance.

When one lender seeks to take away the business of a fellow industrial lender through any unfair methods, by direct solicitation, by the use of a mailing list that is the property of his fellow lender or through the treachery of disgruntled or discharged employes, the lender who is guilty of such conduct is scuttling the ship that is carrying the industrial lender business through the commercial seas of the world where the going is already hard enough without such impediment among the crew.

The tugging at the other fellow's business may profit the guilty lender temporarily. He may make a few extra pennies off his competitor's customer list, but he is doing the industrial lender business an injustice—he is stealing from a man who should be, if he conducts his business honestly and ethically, his very best friend. I do not know that this sort of thing is done in Indiana. I have a good friend who is a money lender in another state and he has told me of instances of this kind.

Competitors in the industrial lending business have every reason to be friends. They have many common interests and they should be united in every possible effort to strengthen the foundations on which the business is erected, and to strengthen the reputation that you men are trying to build as honest, square-dealing business men. There is business enough for all without any of you trying to undermine the business of one of your friends. If you have developed a profitable list of clients, it has cost you effort and money to make them customers of your business. When a competitor tries to take away from you any of your customers by unfair dealings, he is endeavoring to deprive you of something of value—and in the language of the laws of our land that competitor's action is called stealing.

I am afraid that too many industrial lenders are holding back the progress of the business by placing too great an importance upon the immediate profits that the business affords. It is natural for every man to want to make money; the quick money that is easiest to see, however, is not always the most desirable kind to acquire. In every business—and I believe this truth applies with more than average force in the industrial lender's business—if the first and uppermost thought is service to the customer, the making of money is an unescapable consequence.

Since your business is one entirely of personal service, it is up to every one of you to see that your patrons are served well, that they are treated with the same consideration a merchant shows to a good customer, and let your attitude toward them always be such as to impress your patrons with the fact that you are conducting a friendly business, one that has a position of genuine service in the world of business to fulfill.

Courteous treatment, I have no doubt, is appreciated more deeply by the man or woman who calls to obtain the service of an industrial lender than by any other type of business customer. They come to you when they are in need and often when they are in actual distress. Can't you sense in those interviews with troubled souls who need your service, the opportunity to implant in those minds that are so receptive to your words, a permanent and unshaken belief in the integrity of the industrial lender's business? And can you not see that when you send out from your office the scores of well treated, well served patrons, you are serving the industrial lender's business as a whole by sending forth men and women who will speak no evil words of you or your business?

And when you back your friendly personal service to the needy with honest service that goes through every part of every transaction from the very beginning of your seeking business relations with a prospective patron to the receipting for the final payment of his indebtedness—and no customer's account is so insignificant as to warrant any employe of yours being discourteous or impolite in any step of the way your patron and you are walking together—you are building that customer's faith in you and in your business. He has friends and acquaintances but the nature of his business with you likely has sealed his lips. He will not advertise your good acts, like the man who had dealt with an industrial lender to his disadvantage is likely to advertise the shortcomings of the lender or his business.

Therefore, you must tell the rest of the world of your service. You must advertise your virtues and see to it that not any one among you bring discredit upon yourself or upon the business by wrongful acts that will tear down the public faith and the public confidence your square dealing and friendly policies are building.

There are many ways in which you can be instrumental in building a greater public confidence in the business of industrial lending. What is termed institutional advertising is a powerful instrument in the swaying of public opinion. Your association has done some advertising of this kind. The effect of the advertisements your organization sponsored in the newspapers some time ago could not help but elevate the standing of the business in the eyes of the public. There is an accumulative value to that sort of advertising that is lost unless the campaign is kept going.

You can all recall just a few years ago, when sauerkraut was not held in high esteem. It is not a dainty dish, any more to-day than it was a few years ago. But the makers of sauerkraut have kept up a continuous program of advertising, and to-day thousands of families eat sauerkraut regularly every week, and they are not ashamed to admit it publicly. Institutional advertising turned the tide.

A few years ago cigarettes were in disrepute among respectable people. In Indiana a law was passed prohibiting the sale of cigarettes, and even making the person caught smoking a cigarette subject to arrest. Now cigarette smoking is almost universal. Even the feminine population of the nation has contributed to the millions who smoke cigarettes to-day. Institutional advertising brought the cigarette out of disrepute and made it a favored dissipation of millions.

There are countlesss other illustrations of what advertising has done for various kinds of business. It will work wonders for the industrial lender's business, if intelligently handled and if the statements made in the advertising are lived up to by the lenders of the state.

And there is another important factor in your hands to use in building public confidence in your business. It is your own personal endorsement of the business. In Frank Bacon's famous play, "Lightning" there was a character who received a pension from the government. He used to display his pension check with the insignia and seal of the United States government and the signature of the treasurer of the United States, and he would point out to his friends that in spite of all the official decoration of the check and the authority vested in the officer who signed the check, it wasn't worth a dime without his personal endorsement on the back.

And this is true of the lenders' business. The business may be good. It may be honest. It may be doing a public service, but it needs your personal endorsement to strengthen the position of the business in your community. It needs to stand as high in the community as you do. If you take an active part in church affairs, don't hide the fact that you are engaged in the business of industrial lending. If you belong to clubs and civic organizations—and you certainly should have as prominent a part in such activities as you can—let your fellow club members know that you are not ashamed of your business. By your conduct in your community you can cause folks to respect you. And if they hold you in high regard, and know the nature of your business, they will say, "The loan business cannot be a bad business or So-and-So would not be engaged in it."

And in conclusion, let me repeat: Run your business in a way that is above reproach; observe the Golden Rule of treating your competitors as you would have them treat you; give your personal endorsement to your business; seek public confidence by advertising; and then live up to what you have advertised.

Mr. Elmer Johnson, of the State Banking Department, was called upon by the President to say a few words to the convention.

Mr. Johnson: When Mr. Wolcott came over to the State House, he didn't know much about this particular business. When Mr. Hartz mentioned having him on the program, I talked to him and he was glad to have a place on your program. I am sure that in Mr. Wolcott you have a good friend in your work and believe you will be safe in going over to see him when the Legislature meets, if there is anything that you want from the Legislature.

It is pretty hard, in our state, to get any real statistics on the business because we do not have any kind of examination. I believe you would bring more of your men in if you would ask for more from the Department than you have. At present, you have just a slight appropriation over there—something around $3,500 for the maintenance of your Department. Most of the income that comes into the Department is your money. I think you would be justified and I assure you, from my standpoint, if you will come over o the Legislature the next time, I beieve you will get your just share. The Building and Loan people are getting ready to go out for a separate department. Banks and Building and Loan companies fight each other. I don't hink there is any state better organized han Indiana, but on the other hand, I hink you have not given proper attenion to this Legislative program.

I want to assure you of continued cooperation in every way where we can help you now or in the time to come.

Doctor Mueller: I think what Mr. Johnson has just said is most commendable and you don't know how much you are indebted to him—not only for the conversion of Mr. Wolcott, but in many other ways.

I agree with Mr. Johnson in his recommendation that $3,500 is inadequate to supervise your business, for your protecion. In Pennsylvania, there are 208 licensees in the state. Half of them are members of the Pennsylvania Association. By reason of the modification of the 1915 Act, amended in 1919, eliminating fees, and substituting a flat interest rate; the old law gave the administrating officials power to investigate the books, without the necessity of a search warrant and gave him ingress to the licensees; but it did not give him permission to examine enders who refused to take out a license, so he might determine what was the rate of interest they were charging; so lately the language has been modified to give the Bank Commissioner and his assistant authority to go out and investigate any person suspected of lending, and if the nterest rate is larger than the state permits, then he is subject to penalty.

Mr. Johnson brings to you an opporunity of having great supervision, which you should appreciate to a high degree.

If this body will appoint a committee o-day to formulate plans to secure the proper persons, who can make recommendations to the proper committees, at the proper time, to increase that pressure by sufficient amount, I am sure the Department will be glad to supply figures that are necessary to make that appropriation adequate to act on. You must uphold and maintain the dignity of your profession. You never find men, who are in disrepute at times, who ask for an investigation, unless they can come in with clean hands. I would like to see such a committee appointed at this time, if you think favorably of it.

It was moved by Mr. Hartz that a committee of three be appointed to take acion as Dr. Mueller has suggested.

The Chairman appointed Mr. Aufderheide, Mr. Zumpfe and Mr. Broughman to act on this committee.

The question "Why managers should take active part at conventions" was then declared open for discussion.

The Chairman called upon the managers who were present to give their views on this subject, upon the suggestion of Mr. Broughman.

Messrs. Kent, Bishop, of Indianapois, J. W. Eastep, South Bend; Clift, Indianapolis; Schurman, Farrington, Swain, Crawfordsville; McGregor, Madson, Arnett, Denger, Liggett, Hurrie, Stone, Ganzer, Hammond, Clark, Washington; Leapley of Connersville, and Mr Aufderheide all spoke very favorably of the good that comes from attending these conventions, of the information, so valuable which they receive at these meetings, of the spirit of good fellowship that prevails, etc.

Report of Nominating Committee.

It was the report of the Nominating Committee that the present officers of the Indiana Industrial Lenders Association hold over for another year.

It was moved by Mr. Grinsteiner that the report of the Nominating Committee be accepted and that the present officers of the Association hold over for the ensuing year. Motion seconded and carried.

The Chairman then read the list of officers as follows:

President, Fred Davies, Kokomo, Ind.

First Vice President, W. G. Chandler, Indianapolis, Ind.

Second Vice President, John McGregor, Madison, Ind.

Treasurer, W. R. Hancock, Indianapolis, Ind.

Secretary, Roy F. Hartz, Indianapolis, Ind.

Executive Committee — Fred Davies, Chairman, W. G. Chandler, John McGregor, W. R. Hancock, Roy F. Hartz, George L. Clupper, George Farrington, A. C. Broughman, Clarence E. Clift, Wm. A. Zumpfe, John H. Aufderheide, H. H. Burrell.

Election of delegates to the National Convention was next declared in order by the Chairman.

Mr. Fred Davies was nominated by Mr. Hartz.

Nomination seconded.

Mr. Arnett was nominated by Mr. Grinstiner.

Nomination seconded.

Mr. W. G. Chandler took the Chair during this election.

It was moved by Mr. Hancock that the nomination of delegates to the National Convention be closed and that the Secretary cast the ballot for the two delegates nominated. Motion seconded and carried.

Mr. Hartz accordingly cast the ballot for the two delegates to the National Convention—namely Mr. Davies and Mr. Arnett.

Nomination of alternates to the National Convention was next declared in order by the Chairman.

Mr. Swank was nominated by Mr. Aufderheide.

Mr. Mitchell was nominated by Mr. Clift.

It was moved by Mr. Kauffman that the nomination be closed and that Mr. Swank and Mr. Mitchell be declared duly elected alternates to the National Convention.

Mr. Hurie announced that Logansport cordially invited the managers to hold their next meeting (semi-annual meeting this fall) to take place there.

It was moved by Mr. Farrington that the Semi-Annual Convention accept the invitation to go to Logansport this coming fall. Motion seconded by Mr. Aufderheide and carried.

It was suggested by Mr. Broughman that it be the sense of this meeting that it be left to the Secretary to put into the records of this convention as much as he thought would be of interest to the membership.

It was the sense of the convention that the report of the convention should be mimeographed and sent out to the members.

Mr. Thompson: It occurs to me, at the closing hour of this meeting here, that we extend to the members of the Indianapolis Association and those who have worked with them, our thanks for this wonderful State Convention.

It has been my privilege to attend every State Convention since the formation of the State Association and two National Conventions. I believe I can speak for the body, as a whole, when I say that this convention, not only from the standpoint of the good we have derived from our mutual association benefits, but from the standpoint of the entertainment afforded us, has been a most wonderful success in every way.

I think it would be fitting for us members, from the outside, who have enjoyed this wonderful hospitality, to show our appreciation to those who worked so faithfully and well in bringing about this wonderful convention and delightful banquet, by a rising vote of thanks.

A rising vote of thanks was then given.

Dr. Mueller read the following extract and commented on this situation.

"I hope that some day we will have perfected credit organizations in all cities in which you have branches and that these branches will be active members of our Association. I feel that an organization such as yours, is in position to give them a larger amount of the business, in the way of settling accounts of persons who are not in position to pay the debt off at once. We have contemplated perfecting a loan system of our own and some day this, no doubt, will be considered a feature of the National Organization, unless independent loan companies go after this particular class of business."

Mr. Thompson: I have been very much interested in Dr. Mueller's talk on this Credit Rating proposition. Our situation at Shelbyville was identical with the Danville situation—however, not inspired by any of our local merchants. Upon questioning the young lady who has charge of the Credit Rating Bureau in Shelbyville, she had no knowledge of how Credit Rating Bureaus were handled, except through her attendance at the state meeting at Indianapolis.

It seems to me that we should take action in our own state and have a representative or representatives at the meeting of the Credit Men's Association. They are the men to whom this information goes. Quite a number of our Department Store representatives attend these meetings of credit men and it is a splendid field, in which to get our message home. Let your local merchants know that you are ready to take up his past due accounts and, through our work with the Credit Men's Associations, I think it will help greatly in eliminating this evil.

Mr. Hartz: I think there are but very few members who know the amount of work that the national body has done, in the way of the publicity. In Pennsylvania, there were twenty-one papers which published an article. I believe that in September, those who attend the National Convention will find there has been much publicity obtained by the national body, in favor of the industrial loan business.

Mr. Arnett: "The Credit World" has its effect also. By establishing contact with your Credit Associations, there is much to be gained.

Dr. Mueller: We will be thankful to any who try to do away with the propaganda in regard to the Small Loan

Law. Just request that they write to the National Secretary and he will carefully select the sort of material that ought to go to that particular person.

MR. LIGGETT: I attended the Lansing, Mich., meeting and the question came up as to how many members belonged to the national body. We got 100% at that meeting.

It was estimated that almost 100% of those present at the Indianapolis meeting, now in session, were members of the National Association.

The Executive Committee recommends that all complaints of violations and other matters which the Association is directly interested be referred to the Secretary direct before any action is taken by any company or individual. This will cause any confusion and have immediate attention.

R. F. HARTZ, Secretary.

OMIT STAMPS

According to the new income tax law, documentary revenue stamps were not required on promissory notes used by many of our members after July 2.

INDUSTRIAL LENDERS MUTUAL INSURANCE COMPANY

The home office of the Industrial Lenders Mutual Insurance Company, chartered 1923 in Delaware and licensed by the Insurance Commissioner of Delaware, has moved its home office to 924 Shipley Street, Wilmington, Del.

This company was organized exclusively for carrying insurances for industrial lenders and their employees, giving protection on a mutual basis at cost and operates the following departments:

Funeral benefits, $500 to $1,500 maximum; office robbery; fidelity and surety, $1,000 maximum.

JOHN BORROWED HUNDRED.

By WILLIAM G. SHEPHERD.

"Hey, Jibby! Let me borrow your baseball bat?"

"Lend me a nickel, will you, Catty? I want some candy."

"Let me take your bathing suit this afternoon, will you?"

What would Jibby Jones or Catty Atkins think of a fellow who was always trying to borrow something? What would you think of a fellow who never had anything of his own because he never took care of anything and who was always asking you to lend him something—always borrowing?

The things that belong to such fellows are always worn out or lost; their money is always gone, because it is spent.

No one has much use for that kind of a borrower.

"Don't be a borrower." How many times I've heard that advice in my lifetime; and how many times all boys hear it! "Don't borrow, don't owe anybody anything."

This is all very good; you can't beat it, as good advice about lazy borrowing. But I wish, when I was younger, that someone had told me what I'm going to try to tell you fellows in this article. I think I'd have had more possessions than I have to-day.

There are different kinds of borrowing. There is the shiftless, selfish borrowing of the fellow we've been talking about—and there's another kind.

Let's get down to this other kind.

LOANING YOUR JOHN HUNDRED.

We've been talking, in these "John Hundred" articles, about the different kinds of jobs that you can find for a hundred dollar bill to do. We've seen how a boy can put a hundred dollars, John Hundred, to work in stocks or bonds or in land or houses, and collect John Hundred's wages and put them in his own pocket.

We've been saying that the man who can give your John Hundred a good, safe job, with a fair salary, is a man worth knowing. But I want to ask you a question about this man.

Isn't he really borrowing your John Hundred from you?

He is, as sure as you live, if you stop to think of it.

He's using your money to help run a railroad or to keep a factory going or to do any number of things, depending upon the kind of a job he's given to your John Hundred.

It's your money he's using; and he may be using the money of thousands of people—all, practically, borrowed money.

Now, there's a difference between his kind of borrowing and the "cheap-skate" borrowing of the fellow who never has anything.

The man who borrows, not because he hasn't anything himself, but because he wants to DO something in a good, sound business way, with other people's money, is a public benefactor; he's the very opposite of the "cheap-skate."

Sensible people who have a John Hundred to put to work are always looking for some man who wants to borrow the use of their money for a good, safe, business purpose.

PLAIN, STRAIGHT BUSINESS.

In this kind of borrowing, there is no sentiment or friendship; the business man who borrows must always pay you for the use of your money; it's a straight-out business proposition. He doesn't have to thank you for lending him the money any more than you have to thank a landlord for letting you live in his house. He pays you your interest just as you pay the landlord his rent. You didn't lend the business man your money primarily because you felt friendly to him, or because you liked the looks of his face; you lent him the money because you thought he was a good, safe man who would give your John Hundred a good, safe, paying job. You were only businesslike in the whole deal.

You know there are still some countries in this world where folks take off their hats when they go into a bank. Some years ago, in a little country in Europe, I went into a bank to draw some money. My check was good; all the bank had to do was to take the paper and give me the money; what's more, the bank was going to make a good profit on cashing the check. A man dressed up something like a policeman came up to me in the lobby and asked me to take off my hat. Though he spoke in a foreign tongue, I could understand what he meant; I saw that all the other bank visitors had removed their hats. Of course, I took off mine; it's only fair, I've always thought, when you're traveling in another fellow's country, to be decent enough to follow the customs of that country; in fact, you look like an impolite fool, if you don't. So off went my hat. But the people in that old-fashioned little country don't know as much about banks and banking as we do in America; really, they're afraid of bankers.

Nobody takes off his hat in a bank lobby in the United States. Courtesy, of course, makes business of any sort pleasanter. But no sensible American banker expects you to kow-tow to him, or to be afraid of him. He couldn't talk bed-rock business with a person who felt that way toward him; and lending money is a business deal. When you deposit money in a bank, you are really lending it to the bank; the banker will use it in various business enterprises. And when a bank lends money to you it does it, not as a favor, but because it is sure that you will return the money, with interest. A banker who loaned money on any other basis—say, simply because he liked you—would soon go to smash.

LOOK AHEAD, THOUGH.

If you, as a young fellow possibly not yet of age, want to borrow money, you must be ready to show the banker or other prospective lender that he won't lose anything. If you can't offer real estate or stocks or bonds as security, you may, in some cases, be able to get a loan on your good name. But don't expect this unless your past record shows marked integrity and ability—something actually done and done right—and your future shows definite promise.

Moreover, before you ask for a loan—to further a business enterprise, or help you get an education, or for any other purpose—figure out just how much money your best brand of common sense will let you ask for; how you'll meet your interest payments; and how you can guard the lender or your parents, if you are under age, against loss in case of your unexpected sickness or death. If you can't work out satisfactory answers to all these problems, you shouldn't ask for the loan, and you're out of luck if you get it.

But if you can work out the right solutions to these problems, after you get the loan, you can look straight into the eyes of the man who gave it to you and have no hang-dog feeling of being a "cheap-skate debtor;" he has acceptable security for the loan, and you are paying him for the use of the money.

Using the other fellow's John Hundred in an honest, businesslike way, is an honorable form of borrowing. All business throughout the world is done by means of borrowing; this borrowing is made possible by means of our credit system whereby every fellow's business standing is more or less well known in the business world. In fact, there are big books printed in the United States and Canada every year, something like city directories, only they cover the whole country, showing how much credit can safely be given to any business man. In these books every business man is named and "rated."

No boy can really succeed in business until he knows the difference between the "cheap-skate" borrowing which our fathers and mothers warn us against, and the other kind of borrowing which really means finding good jobs for other people's John Hundreds.

A young man who wants to go into business must not be afraid to borrow, in the right way. Indeed, if he shows great ability, he will find that people will hunt him out and try to LEND money to him, begging him to give their John Hundreds a good job.

One Man Who Used Other People's Money.

Let me tell you about a certain young fellow—he is dead and gone now, after a long life of most successful building—who was willing to take the responsibility of using other people's money; who wasn't afraid to borrow, at the right time.

He lived in a city in the Northwest. His name was James J. Hill.

For thousands of miles to the west from where he lived there stretched millions of acres of rich farming country; but there was no use of farmers' settling there until a railroad was put in.

But who would put in the railroad? Everyone knew it ought to be laid. Everyone knew that, as soon as it was laid, farmers would begin to settle in the rich country and raise great crops which the railroad would carry to market at great profit. But who would build it? Who would take the responsibility?

"I'll do it," said James J. Hill to himself. And then he began saying to other people quietly: "I'm going to start building a railroad through the great Northwest clear to the Pacific Coast. Will you put some of your money into the business?"

In return for the money—when he got it, and it came pretty slowly at first—he gave the lenders stocks or bonds.

With this borrowed money he started to build the railroad; with borrowed money he finished it. This railroad has added millions of dollars to your country's wealth. Of course, Hill became, ultimately, a multi-millionaire.

Just as soon as people saw that the railroad was going to pay, and that James J. Hill could be trusted as an empire builder, he didn't have to ask people to lend him money. They piled over each other to get him to take their money and use it. At first, some of them may have felt they were doing him a favor to lend him money; but at last they felt he was doing them a favor to borrow their money and use it in a high-salaried railroad job, paying them good safe wages.

Be Sure First—Then Not Afraid.

The world is looking for young men, like James J. Hill, who are not afraid to step out from the crowd and say, "I'll take this job on my shoulders."

The job may be only running a lemonade stand at a baseball game on a hot day. It may be starting a store in a neighborhood where one is needed, or starting a farm.

Not long ago, two boys saw that their small town needed an auto repair shop. Because they had a practical plan for starting one, were known as good workers, and could show money they had saved, they were able to borrow seventy-five dollars to add to their savings. They bought the equipment needed and set up business. Soon they found a dealer willing to establish credit relations with them—more borrowing on the boys' part. But the lender has security and is being paid for the use of his money. And the boys are giving the public good service and making good money.

Any young man who is not afraid to start, and who KNOWS, in his own heart, that he is able to use, wisely and profitably, not only his own John Hundreds, but other people's John Hundreds as well, need not think of himself as a shameless borrower and a shiftless debtor.

If he succeeds, he will have plenty of people coming to him and saying, "You have proved to the world that you can give my money a good job. Please borrow my money and use it."

And when that comes to pass, it will be the borrower and not the lender who will be doing the favor.

So don't be afraid to borrow—if you're sure that you're borrowing in the right way—for a safe purpose and with good, sound, business motives. And don't be afraid to go to some reputable banker to ask about such a loan; I've never yet met a good banker who wouldn't be willing to talk bed-rock common sense with a young fellow starting out in life; bankers are always looking for "comers."

If you borrow rightly and use rightly what you borrow, the world will not condemn you; it will thank and praise you. —The American Boy, July, 1924.

PRINCIPLES OF BUSINESS CONDUCT.

The function of business is to provide for the material needs of mankind, and to increase the wealth of the world and the value and happiness of life. In order to perform its function it must offer sufficient opportunity for gain to compensate individuals who assume its risks, but the motives which lead individuals to engage in business are not to be confused with the function of business itself. When business enterprise is successfully carried on with constant and efficient endeavor to reduce the costs of production and distribution, to improve the quality of its products, and to give fair treatment to customers, capital, management, and labor, it renders public service of the highest value.

We believe the expression of principles drawn from these fundamental truths will furnish practical guides for the conduct of business as a whole and for each individual enterprise.

I.

The Foundation of business is confidence, which springs from integrity, fair dealing, efficient service, and mutual benefit.

II.

The Reward of business for service rendered is a fair profit plus a safe reserve, commensurate with risks involved and foresight exercised.

III.

Equitable Consideration is due in business alike to capital, management, employees, and the public.

IV.

Knowledge—thorough and specific—and unceasing study of the facts and forces affecting a business enterprise are essential to a lasting individual success and to efficient service to the public.

V.

Permanency and continuity of service are basic aims of business, that knowledge gained may be fully utilized, confidence established and efficiency increased.

VI.

Obligations to itself and society prompt business unceasingly to strive toward continuity of operation, bettering conditions of employment, and increasing the efficiency and opportunities of individual employees.

VII.

Contracts and undertakings, written or oral, are to be performed in letter and in spirit. Changed conditions do not justify their cancellation without mutual consent.

VIII.

Representation of goods and service should be truthfully made and scrupulously fulfilled.

IX.

Waste in any form,—of capital, labor, services, materials, or natural resources,—is intolerable and constant effort will be made toward its elimination.

X.

Excesses of every nature,—inflation of credit, over-expansion, over-buying, over-stimulation of sales,—which create artificial conditions and produce crises and depressions are condemned.

XI.

Unfair Competition, embracing all acts characterized by bad faith, deception, fraud, or oppression, including commercial bribery, is wasteful, despicable, and a public wrong. Business will rely for its success on the excellence of its own service.

XII.

Controversies will, where possible, be adjusted by voluntary agreement or impartial arbitration.

XIII.

Corporate Forms do not absolve from or alter the moral obligations of individuals. Responsibilities will be as courageously and conscientiously discharged by those acting in representative capacities as when acting for themselves.

XIV.

Lawful Co-operation among business men and useful business organizations in support of these principles of business conduct is commended.

XV.

Business should render restrictive legislation unnecessary through so conducting itself as to deserve and inspire public confidence.

The above "Principles" were unanimously adopted by the U. S. Chamber of Commerce at its annual meeting in Cleveland in May this year. It is hoped that each member organization of the National Chamber will take similar action. This matter will come up at our National Convention in Baltimore in September.

ACCUSED OF THREATENING DEBTORS THROUGH MAIL

Members of Chain Clothing Concern in South Placed Under $5,000 Bail Each

(By the Associated Press)

New Orleans, July 8.—Charges of violation of the postal regulations in mailing alleged "threatening, defamatory or libelous dunning letters" have been filed here against Askin & Marine Company, a chain concern operating 40 clothing stores in various parts of the country, Federal officials announced to-day.

Local representatives of the concern—L. J. Cunningham, manager, and I. Heyman, credit manager—are at liberty under $5,000 bond. The others against whom the complaint was filed are Sam Askin, owner and president; C. L. Foster, general manager, and F. J. Welch, superintendent of accountants, all of New York.

CREDIT SERVICE EXCHANGE

The question of the right kind of co-operation between Loan Managers and Retail Credit Managers to my mind is one of the outstanding "things to be attained," and I fear that I may not be able to put the message over as it should be however I am willing to do the best I can.

Mr. Steimle and myself feel highly gratified over the results already apparent as the results of our meeting with the Retail Credit Managers, April 14th. In the first place we have won the confidence and respect of about all the Credit Managers in Atlanta which in itself is a big asset. It is surprising to find out how little Credit Managers know about our business and I believe there is a big field of endeavor on the part of all Loan agencies, associations and such to see to it that the Credit Managers are told the plain simple truth as to what good the legitimate lenders are doing for their communities.

Mr. Gilbert, Manager of the Credit Service Exchange which is the local reporting branch of the Retail Credit Association has sent out one hundred and fifty-six letters like the enclosed to loan companies in Atlanta representing the Morris Plan, Salary Buyers, as well as ourselves. If we succeed in putting it over it will be a big thing for all of us.

A. B. MADISON.

We have had the impression for some time that the Industrial Lenders of the city should have a central clearance bureau through which to clear their applications. Such a bureau should conform to the demands made upon it and be operated solely for its constituents.

The Credit Service Exchange is in a logical position to promote and handle such work at a minimum cost. We believe that such information must be concentrated to be effective.

If you are interested in starting something of this kind, please sign and return the enclosed card. A meeting will be called later to work out the plans.

Yours truly,
L. S. GILBERT, Manager,
Atlanta Credit Service Exchange.

MAKING CREDIT AVAILABLE FOR ALL

The booklet prepared by H. F. Woods, the publicity expert and approved for general circulation by the National Executive Committee is about ready for distribution. R. F. Hartz, 347 Bankers Trust Bldg., Indianapolis is now taking orders at the following prices: $12 per thousand, $3 extra for first thousand and $2 each additional thousand if name of company is to be imprinted. If 100,000 copies are ordered the price will be $10 per thousand and $3 extra for imprint.

You can hand this booklet to your customers or the public in general and if they will read it they are bound to be convinced that the small loan business is necessary and where regulated by law is as respectable as commercial banking. The difference between banking and industrial lending as well the rates each charge for their services is clearly explained. This is just the story that we have wanted to give to the public long ago. It will be indespensable in legislative and judicial matters. A wide distribution of the booklet in every community is recommended by the National Executive Committee.

ILLINOIS

My attention was called to-day to a recent Supreme Court decision, in this state, that will be of interest to our members.

It is the case of Benj. H. Ehrlich, Appellant, vs Garfield D. Chapple, Appellee, in the 311 Illinois Supreme. A statute was put upon the books about four years ago making a mechanic lien upon an automobile superior to that of a mortgage and in this case the County and Appellate Courts upheld the statute, but the Supreme Court reversed the case and then denied a rehearing of same, holding the statute, insofar as it affected the holder of a previous chattel mortgage, properly acknowledged and recorded, null and void.

It would seem as if we ought to call the attention of our members to this decision, for we will have no regular meeting of any consequence until October.

F. E. TYSON.

GEORGIA

The newspaper publicity campaign similar to that conducted in Indiana last year goes on at regular intervals. It has been supplemented by a five inch double column advertisement in Fulton County Daily Reporter which is being run every day.

A bill has been introduced in the legislature purporting to reduce the rate allowed by the Georgia Small Loan Law to 2½% per month.

SOME PROMINENT MEN

With our June issue we sent a copy of the blooklet entitled, "Some Prominent Men on the Necessity for Industrial Banking" being a compilation of the views of men in the public eye on the industrial loan business as a necessary public service. Additional single copies can be had upon application to the National Secretary at ten cents per copy. In hundred lots less than a thousand they will be supplied at five cents per copy. In lots of one thousand or more they will be furnished at two cents per copy. To date some 21,000 of the first edition have been distributed.

THANK YOU

This is intended to be an expression of appreciation from the National Executive Committee for those members who have responded so promptly in remitting their dues in advance to help meet the obligations upon the National Treasury. We hope the members who have not yet given this matter their attention will do so in the near future. We hope to see all members in good standing when the National Convention takes place.

LOAN MEN HONOR ARTHUR H. HAM

Portland, Me., June 21.—Arthur H. Ham of New York was re-elected chairman of the National Federation of Remedial Loan Associations in convention here yesterday.

Break economic law for political reasons or to favor certain groups at the expense of the majority, and you create a situation that is going to aggravate things rather than settle them.

If one element in business can do a thing better than another and perform a service of equal or greater worth to the people at a lower price, then that is the element that is going to prevail.—Printers Ink.

WOULD GRANT MARRIED WOMEN TIME TO PAY BILLS

Retail Credit Men Also Urged to go Slow on Attempting to Collect by Phone

(By the Associated Press)

New York, June 18.—A married woman should be given time to pay her bills before her husband is notified of the debt, William T. Snider, president of the Retail Credit Men's National Association, declared to-day in leading a discussion on the question at the annual convention of the association. Another bit of advice offered the convention was to "go easy" in the matter of attempting collection of delinquent bills by telephone.

"There may be company in the house or a conference in the office," it was said.

THE FRIENDLY PLEDGEE

He has a system that is true
To his psychology;
He once may make a loan to you
Without security,
But next time you to him apply
You must have more, you vow.
"We will arrange it," he'll reply,
"Just pledge your team and cow."

You go to him another day,
And seek to raise your loan,
Because the interest, sad to say,
Has very robust grown.
"The case is very plain," says he,
"We'll fix it up right now,"
And then he adds nonchalantly,
"We'll pledge your pigs and sow."

Still more that pesky interest
Does other interest breed,
As if it be by Satan pressed
To raise up wicked seed.
Again you seek that loan man shrewd
And ask to raise your note.
"Ah, that's all right; we'll just include Old Dob and Billy Goat."

As time goes on, with interest due
And growing more and more,
You add unto your witch's brew
Goods, chattels, things galore;
Your furniture, the baby's toys,
Prospective crops,* a sledge,
And almost all your household joys
You to that loanman pledge.

One day you get a cold, crisp call
To come and pay your bill,
Or else give up the goods and all
That does your mortgage fill.
You have no money left at all,
Your goods are all in hock,
And so that man away does haul
Your chattels, wares and stock.

Now I am very glad to add,
Since it will ease your mind,
That though this rhyme is very bad,
Its end is very kind,
The law of compensation
Squares many ills of life,
And hence your consolation
That you are left your wife.

USURY CHARGE FAILS

Vienna.—On the ground that Vienna banks commonly charge traders 2 per cent a week, or 100 per cent a year, for loans, a Vienna money lender who had charged a poor couple 140 per cent was acquitted in appellate court on a charge of usury. The judges agreed that if he were to be convicted, few banks could evade prosecution.

INDUSTRIAL LENDERS NEWS

VOL. IX, No. 2. AUGUST, 1924. Price $1.00 a year.

WE ARE BUSY

Yes friends, we are busy and we are determined that you will long remember the TENTH ANNUAL CONVENTION OF LENDERS.

Yes, it has been ten short years since first we met in National Convention, ten years of progress and co-operation, each year more wonderful than the last until to-day we stand united as one throughout our great country.

Our Tenth Annual Convention will be rich with education, for many important things of interest to Lenders have happened in one place or another since last we met, and too many things of importance are yet to be accomplished.

We again remind you that you will be welcomed by our Mayor, addressed by Honorable Albert C. Ritchie our Governor, and by Judge Russell of the Supreme Court of Georgia, known as the best loved person in that good old Southern State.

We have so many, many things to tell you about that it is impossible to put them in print. Just make up your mind that yourself and wife will be present at the Tenth Annual Convention, September 24, 25, 26, and 27.

At Baltimore

H. T. Mattingly,

Chairman of the Publicity Committee.

RE HOTEL RATES

This letter was addressed to all members but applies to all others who may be interested:—

"I am very pleased indeed to advise you that we have been selected as Headquarters for the American Industrial Lenders Association Convention, which is to be held in our City September 24th-27th, inclusive, 1924, and take advantage of this opportunity to extend to you a cordial invitation to attend this Convention and endeavor to make your headquarters at the Southern Hotel during your stay in Baltimore.

"In view of the fact that our capacity is limited, naturally we shall not be able to take care of all the delegates, but as we desire to take care of as many as possible, we will ask you to co-operate with us by making your reservations as early as possible, direct to the Management of the Southern, and in the event we are unable to accommodate you, we shall be able to advise you in ample time, so that you will have the opportunity of making reservations elsewhere.

"Anticipating the pleasure of having you with us, and hoping that you will have a pleasant stay in our city during this Convention, when we assure you that it will be our pleasure to serve you, we are"

Cordially yours,
The Southern Hotel,
O. G. Clements,
Assistant Manager.

Reservations will be held until 8 P. M. unless special arrangements are made for a later hour.

The Southern Hotel stands on the site on which once stood the famous Old Fountain Inn of Colonial days where General George Washington and his staff were entertained. It was one of the best known hostelries in this part of the Country and remained a land-mark until 1871. The following year the Carrollton Hotel was erected on the site, being quite up-to-date for the times and named after Charles Carroll of Carrollton, the last survivor of the Signers of the Declaration of Independence. The Carrollton Hotel was destroyed in the great Baltimore fire of 1904.
